FOUND: A JOB.

ROOSEVELT BOOMED.

Want Ex-President for Mayor.

Gov. Woodford and Other Republican War Lords Behind Move.

Will Necessitate Shortening Hunting Trip If Plan Is Carried Out.

Must Be in New York Night Before Election and Declare Residence.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A boom for Theodore Roosevelt for Mayor of New York was launched today by Gen. Stewart L. Woodford and other war lords in the Republican camp.

It has not only the backing of Gen. Woodford's prestige but the support of other leaders who have for years been identified with Republican politics and policies.

It is admitted that the boom has neither the knowledge nor consent of Mr. Roosevelt, but those back of it believe there will be such an insistent demand for him as the Republican candidate that he will feel no other course is open to him except to cut short his hunting trip and return to lead the campaign.

It will be necessary for Col. Roosevelt to be back in New York by the midnight before election day and declare himself a resident of the city. But it has been determined by those back of the movement to nominate him that if this formality is complied with no question of his eligibility can be raised in spite of the fact that he has had his voting residence at Oyster Bay outside the city limits for the last eight years.

The question of eligibility was also regarded a stumbling block as it was when Roosevelt was first talked of for Governor, but with that settled to the satisfaction of his friends after some of the most eminent lawyers in the city had passed upon it, it was determined to lose no further time in pressing his candidacy.

The following dispatch was received today from Nairobi, British East Africa:

"The Roosevelt expedition is still in camp on the ranch of Sir Alfred Pease, at a point near Machakoe. All the members of the party are well.

"Two more cases of smallpox have been discovered among the porters of the expedition.

"Mr. Roosevelt will proceed to George McMillan's Juja ranch some time between May 16 and May 20. He will be accompanied by P. H. Percival, a brother of Maj. Percival, one of the assistant game wardens, and C. D. Hill, a settler."

DANGER AHEAD.

JAMES A. PATTEN IS NEARING CHICAGO.

Wheat King Dodges Reporters and Says It Is Now His Main Concern to Avoid Interviews—Does Not Know What Is Next Move.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

KANSAS CITY (Mo.) May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] James A. Patten, the Chicago wheat king, passed through Kansas City this afternoon on his way from Trinidad to Chicago.

"I did not leave Chicago because I was afraid," he said in answer to a question, "but simply and solely to get away from the newspaper men. There is not the least truth in the statements that my life was in danger. It has never been so to my knowledge, and I have not taken any precautions for safety.

"I can see no reason why so much controversy should have been created on my account. My firm is and always has been one of the largest cash dealers in wheat. I have never made any secret of my operations. Last October I told every one that what has happened would happen. I advised my friends to buy wheat, because the amount of exports was rapidly shortening the home supply. They laughed at me, and especially on Wall street was I ridiculed.

"My holdings at no time have been more than 10,000,000 bushels. It just happened that for once in my life I was able to predict accurately. Any one else following the market reports in the daily papers could have done the same thing, and there is no doubt in my mind that if I had not followed up my advantage some one else would, and the same conditions would prevail today in any case."

WELL, BUT NERVOUS.

Mr. Patten appeared in good health, and said that he had been much refreshed by his vacation. He appeared to be extremely nervous. No one on the train was aware of his presence, and even the Pullman conductor denied that he was on the train when it pulled in.

"I don't know anything more about the market than what I have read in the papers, and they were two days late when they reached me," he said.

"What I shall do next is as much a question in my mind as it is in yours. I shall go back to my offices in Chicago and probably continue as I have always done. I am simply a merchant doing the business of a merchant. I have never speculated, and never intend to.

"As for this year's wheat, it does not look very good. Western Kansas has not had a drop of rain, and the wheat is dry and thin. Probably all of Oklahoma's wheat will go to Texas. Kansas City will not get very much of it.

"And let me explain my position by asking this question, 'Why is Kansas City paying more for wheat than is paid in Chicago?' Simply because it is not here. Kansas and contiguous territory long ago got rid of most of the wheat, and today they need it. It is the same all over the country."

The Santa Fé train bearing Mr. Patten arrived in Kansas City at 4:55 o'clock and departed twenty minutes later. According to the porters and other trainmen he did not have a stateroom.

DODGING REPORTERS.

Mr. Patten reached Trinidad at 5:45 o'clock last night from the Bartlett ranch, near Vermejo Springs, and went to a hotel where he rested until train time. He registered as "Ed Jones, Chicago," and took every precaution to keep his identity from the press, pledging the hotel employés and also the trainmen to secrecy.

The efforts of Mr. Patten to conceal his identity brought about some amusing situations and incidentally some acrid remarks by the big wheat dealer on the pestiferous mess of reporters.

When Mr. Patten reached Tercio, the branch terminus of the railroad from whence two weeks ago he took a stage coach for a drive across the snow-blocked mountain passes, twenty-five miles to the Bartlett ranch, he asked for a through ticket to Chicago. The railroad agent, however, only wished to sell him a local ticket to Trinidad.

"I want a through ticket," insisted Mr. Patten.

"I want to get away from the reporters."

"I came to New Mexico to get rid of 'em," he continued to the agent, "and it did not do me a bit of good. I've been bothered by them every day in the mountains, after I thought I had lost them."

DENIES IDENTITY.

Mr. Patten importuned the aid of the agent, the trainmen and the employés at the hotel in Trinidad to keep reporters off the train, and when a reporter accosted him and asked him if he were not Mr. Patten he looked the reporter calmly in the eye and assured him he was not.

The reporter looked at Mr. Patten. Mr. Patten continued to look at the reporter and smiled genially.

"You are going back to Chicago, are you not?" ventured the reporter.

"I am, young man; that is my home. But I am not Mr. Patten. You are mistaken in that."

When Mr. Patten went into the dining-room for dinner the reporter cautiously made his way to the hat rack, picked up the hat left by "Mr. Jones," and found the name "James A. Patten" on the band.

CONVICTED.

MRS. BOYLE GUILTY.

Stoically She Hears the Verdict.

Hints of Another Accomplice in Kidnaping of Little Billy Whitla.

Declares She Is Victim of the Venom and Hate of Mercer Women.

Husband's Statement Involves Prominent Business Man of Sharon.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

MERCER (Pa.) May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The jury trying Mrs. Helen Boyle for complicity in the kidnaping of Willie Whitla of Sharon took but one ballot today and found her guilty. Mrs. Boyle was in the courtroom when the verdict was read.

"I have been crucified today to satisfy the venom and jealousy of some women of Mercer," she said after the verdict. "Had I been a plain, ordinary, common-looking girl, those same women would have pitied me, but because I am not plain, because I am not ordinary, because I am above the average, because they don't understand me, I have been found guilty of a crime of which I am entirely innocent.

"I know this, that if the jury had acquitted me, the women would have tarred and feathered me. A sacrifice had to be found, and 'Jimmie' and I have been made the victims.

FIGHT JUST BEGUN.

"They think they will railroad me to the 'pen.' They will find they are mistaken. My fight has only begun. Neither Jimmie nor I was allowed to open our mouths at the trial. Now, we will do the talking, and the people will know upon whom the blame shall fall.

"I admit that Mr. Boyle brought the boy to me at Cleveland; that I cared for him, was kind to him, entertained him. I never asked why he was there; never asked where 'Jimmie' got him. He asked me, as his wife, to take care of the boy for a few days, and I did so. If that is a crime, there are millions of wives waiting to be convicted."

As she was led away to jail she remarked:

"I can now realize the feeling of the crucified Christ."

"A life in the penitentiary would kill me in a week or ten days, and rather than submit to this I would take the 'Dutch route,'" said Mrs. Boyle earlier this morning.

Like her husband, she is anxious to tell more than has been brought out in the trial of herself or her husband regarding the kidnaping of "Billy" Whitla.

"WON'T GO ALONE."

"If Jimmie and I are sent to the penitentiary," she said, "we will not go alone. Others will go with us or join us there. Half the truth has not been told in this case. One other man who planned the whole affair has not been arrested. I am willing to suffer for any crime I have committed but there is no evidence that I have been mixed up in the case and rather than suffer injustice I will quit this earth and take justice from my Maker."

Judge Miller, counsel for Mrs. Boyle, asked for instructions to the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty.

Judge Miller intimated that powerful influences were being brought to bear to convict the woman, and there were veiled references to the suppression of the efforts of the Boyles to bring in to the case, the name of a third party.

That the kidnaping of Willie Whitla was planned, and put into execution by a prominent Sharon man is the defense which "Jimmie" Boyle wanted to make at his trial and which, he avers, he was not permitted to make by his attorney, former Judge S. H. Miller.

This is the statement which Boyle wanted to make:

HINTS AT ANOTHER PAL.

Sometime ago he "got the goods" on the real kidnaper. In order to keep him quiet this man made monthly payments to Boyle, neglecting, however, to pay over money on February 1 and March 1. Instead, he proposed that Willie Whitla be kidnaped, guaranteeing that the $10,000 ransom would be paid, and promising Boyle one-half of the amount if Boyle would release him from all other financial claims. The whole plan, according to Boyle's story, was figured out by this man.

Wesley C. Schloss, the janitor of the school from which Willie was spirited away, and Miss Lewis, the boy's teacher, were not called to testify at the trial, says Boyle, because it was not he (Boyle) who called at the school that morning, but another, a man so well known to the boy and others, that his coming aroused absolutely no suspicions. This man took Willie to Warren, O., where he was transferred to the care of Boyle who took him to Cleveland. This man returned to Sharon and awaited developments.

Attorney Gordon declared after the trial, that all the talk about a third party being implicated in the kidnaping is bosh.

Lady Granard Appears With Immense Chapeau That Makes Princess of Wales Look Dowdy and Gown and Jewels That Distract All Eyes from Royal Party.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Countess of Granard's new hat proved to be the dominating feature of society's charity matinée performance of "The Mollusc" at the Kingsway Theater on Thursday, arranged by Mrs. William James.

The crown stood eighteen inches high, and an expert modiste estimated that the semi-circular white osprey feather, twenty-four inches long, cost $125.

When the Countess was bidden to go to speak with the Princess of Wales in the royal box, her hat jammed in the doorway, and she had to twist her head so as to bring the hat into a diagonal position in order to scrape through. When the Countess entered, the royal party was only partly visible here and there through the trimmings of her headgear. Little Prince Henry furtively scratched his nose as the osprey end swept and tickled it.

The Princess of Wales looked dowdy beside the Countess, whose indigo blue gauze gown, mounted over crushed strawberry satin, would have been sufficient to distract the other women, even apart from her unsurpassable hat. The Countess had on a pearl necklace of great opulence and her collar band bore in front a diamond plaque as big as the palm of her hand.

Lady Granard was shown into her box by Ambassador Reid. Mrs. Reid followed as decreed by the rules of precedence.

JOKES WITH TILLMAN.

PRESIDENT HONORED BY WASHINGTONIANS.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

WASHINGTON, May 8.—President Taft was entertained tonight at a banquet tendered him by the citizens of Washington, under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade.

Besides the President, among those who sat at the guests' table, were Vice-President Sherman and Speaker Cannon.

Mr. Taft discussed many phases of Washington's commercial life, and his views were particularly significant in view of the movement now on foot to change the District of Columbia government from the commission to the one-man form.

While the President was being introduced, Senator Tillman strode into the hall toward the President. The latter greeted him and grasped his hand cordially remarking, "Hello, Senator; what are you trying to pass yourself in for tonight?"

This merry interchange provoked amusement.

Tillman laughingly rejoined: "Oh, I just drifted in here to see how you would behave yourself among the common people."

President Taft made a thirty-minute speech, during which he declared that he was strongly in favor of retaining the municipal form of government for the District of Columbia, but he had not reached any conclusion as to what he would recommend to Congress about the real point of contention, whether there shall be a Governor or three commissioners as at present.

The President declared himself unalterably opposed to the plan for suffrage in the District. When the President left the hotel, he invited Mr. Tillman to join him in the White House automobile, and the President took the South Carolina Senator to the latter's home.

ELEVEN HURT IN WRECK.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

SPRINGFIELD (Mo.) May 8.—The Southeastern Limited, south bound, on the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad, left the tracks between Hardy, Mo., and Williford, Ark., across the line from here while running forty miles an hour. Eleven persons were hurt, none fatally. A broken rail caused the accident.

PULLMAN SLEEPER UPSET.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

COLUMBUS (O.) May 8.—A sleeping car, while being switched in the union station yards today, was side swiped by a Big Four passenger train and overturned. It was nearly full of passengers, and many of them received bruises, but none was hurt. The passengers were transferred to another car bound for Cincinnati.

CANNING OLD HORSES?

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

COLUMBIA (Mo.) May 8.—Thomas E. Carter of Sturgeon, in a letter to Dr. W. P. Cutler, State Dairy and Pure Food Commissioner, declares that meat dealers have agents in Central Missouri, buying up old horses and canning them to be sold as beef. Mr. Carter says there is a readier market for fat horses, or of the worthless variety, than has ever been known. Mr. Cutler is inclined to laugh at the matter. "I have written to Mr. Carter," he said, "that the pure-food commission will look into the matter, and we will do so, but there is no cause for alarm, and I feel certain Mr. Carter's inferences are unwarranted."

FILIAL DEVOTION FATAL.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

CHICAGO, May 8.—Filial devotion cost Mrs. Orlando P. Bassett her life. While ill in Hot Springs, Va., Mrs. Bassett hastened to Chicago three weeks ago, because it was believed her aged mother, Mrs. Mary E. Andrews, was precariously ill at a hospital. She went immediately to the bedside of her mother, but was so ill she was forced to remain in the hospital as a patient. Less than a week later, the mother was sufficiently recovered to be removed to her home in Berwyn. Mrs. Bassett's condition, however, grew rapidly worse, and death came last night. It was caused, the physicians say, by tropical intestinal fever, a disease which is very rare, and for which she was being treated, apparently successfully, at Hot Springs.

VIOLET WINS IN WISCONSIN.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

MILWAUKEE, May 8.—The school children of Wisconsin have voted to determine which should be their favorite flower. There were four entries—the violet, wild rose, water lily and trailing arbutus. The violet left the others at the post, as it were. The wild rose apparently came in second, the water lily third, and the arbutus way behind.

BABY HORSETHIEVES.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

CHICAGO, May. 8.—Philip Haggeman, 4 years old, and Charles Drew, aged 5, ran away from school, stole a horse and wagon, and finally landed in the Chicago-avenue Station. According to police records they are the youngest "horsethieves" ever arrested. Mrs. H. S. Sweet, with whom the boys are living, was notified, and they were taken to their homes. Philip and Charles said they stole the horse, "just for fun." They started on a tour of the city, and in the rounds collected a number of boys. At the time they were caught by the driver, the wagon was filled. According to the police the boys are wards of the Juvenile Court.

AFFAIRE DE FEMME.

FORMER GOV. FRANTZ LOST IN ST. LOUIS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. LOUIS (Mo.) May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] No trace of former Gov. Frank Frantz, of Oklahoma, Rough Rider and personal friend of Theodore Roosevelt, who disappeared here a week ago, after his arrest in a taxicab with a weeping woman, has been found, though the management of the Jefferson Hotel, where his baggage is, have made every effort to locate him.

Frank Hubbard, former mayor of Muskogee, one of Frantz's campaign managers, was here today making inquiry for the missing man and Frantz's brother, Orville G. Frantz, telephoned the Jefferson last night from Oklahoma City that he would be in St. Louis Sunday to make a thorough search for his brother.

If Frantz is in St. Louis he is succeeding in keeping his movements a secret as not even the managers of the hotel or the chauffeur, who had been driving him around, know where he is.

Robert C. Beatty, assistant manager of the Jefferson, said last night he had not been able to obtain information concerning Frantz. William Kehoe, the taxicab chauffeur, who has been with Frantz much of the time, tonight said he had lost track of the former Governor. He proposes to make a further search tomorrow.

Mr. Hubbard tonight expressed concern for the safety of his friend. At the Lutheran Hospital no information could be obtained which would identify the man there under the name of Lockhorn, who is said to answer the description of the former Governor.

Frantz disappeared, leaving his belongings at the Jefferson Hotel in a manner that indicated he expected to return soon, when he and the woman with whom he was arrested were released from the police station. They were arrested on a charge of disturbing the peace early in the morning when a policeman found them quarreling in a taxicab.

MURDER PLOT IS LAID BARE.

Letter to Anarchist Paper Is Made Public.

Man Killed by Police Chief Wrote of Plan.

Editor Knew of Scheme But Kept Silent.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

CHICAGO, May 8.—Any doubt that may exist that Jeremiah Averbuch, who attempted to assassinate Chief of Police Shippy of Chicago a year ago, but who was himself slain by the chief, was an anarchist, is apparently swept away by an anarchist magazine article published, it is believed, in Switzerland and made public here today by Assistant Chief of Police Schuettler.

The magazine is called "Bunta," and according to the police its place of publication varies, in consequence of the vigilance of the European police. The article declares that the writer knew Averbuch in Europe. The magazine prints the following, which the editor alleged he received from Averbuch after the latter's attempt upon the life of the Chief of Police.

"My dear friend: When you receive this postal I will be either on the gibbet or in jail as an hour from now, on my own risk, I'm going to revenge myself upon the man who was the cause of shedding blood of the hungry workingmen here and in Philadelphia. Shippy gave the first signal for the clubbing, and as he was not punished, a lot of Shippys sprang up. When I saw all of that I came to the conclusion that for such offenses anarchists do not keep silence, and I decided to give the signal. All of them who act like Shippy will suffer the same consequence.

"I am going to my death to benefit the future. Goodbye, forever and ever. Yours, Jeremiah."

Elopers Living in Little Cottage Across Border Waiting for Bride's Eighteenth Birthday, When She Comes Into Fortune of $150,000, and Hubby Is Absolved of Abduction.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BUFFALO (N. Y.) May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In a pretty little cottage in St. Catherine's, Canada, just over the American border line, a reporter today found Hazel Stuart Drew, the pretty 17-year-old heiress who eloped from Brooklyn on Christmas Day with Walter McGreal, the 20-year-old son of Thomas F. McGreal, a retired United States naval pharmacist.

The bride fainted and her handsome young husband was on the verge of collapse, when confronted with positive proof of their identity, but when assured that their unexpected visitor had not come to deliver the bridegroom into the hands of the law they admitted they were the elopers and freely told the story of their flight and pursuit through the West and into Canada, where they intended to hide until Monday, when Hazel will become of age and come into a fortune of $150,000 bequeathed to her by her grandfather, the late Daniel Drew.

The runaways are living together under the name of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Finsmore, one of many pseudonyms they have taken since they disappeared.

There is a warrant issued by Magistrate Dooley in the Adams Police Court, Brooklyn, for young McGreal, charging abduction, but unless he is taken before midnight Sunday the law will be cheated, as Monday is Hazel's 18th birthday.

SMUGGLED IN DINER.

Crew of Dining-Car Arrested for Illegally Carrying Chinese from El Paso to Chicago.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

CHICAGO, May 8.—In connection with the arrest at El Paso, Tex., of three members of a dining car crew, charged with assisting in the smuggling of Chinese into this country, United States Dist.-Atty. Sims stated today that between two and three hundred Celestials have been brought from El Paso concealed in a dining car.

"Two Chinese were brought to Chicago," said Mr. Sims. "One crowd smuggled the Celestials across the border, where they were turned over to the dining car crew. This car made one trip a week, and on each trip carried two of the illegel passengers, one concealed in the ice chest and the other in a linen press. At Chicago another set of conspirators composed of Chicago Chinese took charge of the importation.

"The smugglers were paid four or five hundred dollars by each Chinaman brought in, and of this, fifty dollars went to the train crew. The scheme has been worked for two or three years, but I believe we have now broken up the traffic."

Stork Visits Omaha Woman's Organization But Once in Year.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

OMAHA, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] But once did the stork stop and hover over the Woman's Club of Omaha during last year. The Omaha Woman's Club is the largest and most popular club in the city. The membership is a little in excess of 400. The members deal with domestic science and all topics that are of interest to women. They are educated, intelligent and up-to-date when it comes to handling matters of public interest. Nevertheless, the records show that they have not placed themselves in a position to compete for prizes in the matter of raising large families.

In striking contrast with the record of the Omaha Woman's Club is the birth record reported from the Omaha Mothers' Club, which has a membership of eighty married women. The annual report submitted at the last meeting showed that twenty-eight husky boys and girls had been born to the members during the year, ending May 1.

LAD CRUSHED TO DEATH BY JAWS OF COMPRESS.

Mystery of the Boy's Disappearance Remains Unsolved Until Bale His Father Sold Is Opened for Ginning at Liverpool Factory Five Months After He Vanished.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

GALVESTON (Tex.) May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] the disappearance of little Alfred Hartmann, the two-year-old son of George Hartmann of Gillespie county, five months ago, has been solved by the finding of the dead body of the child in a bale of cotton opened at a gin in Liverpool, England. It was early in December that Hartmann, who is a prosperous farmer, took a load of cotton to a gin a few miles from his home.

His little son, who was the youngest of seven children, accompanied him on the trip to Fredericksburg, and in some manner became separated from his father. Search for the missing boy proved without success, and it was finally believed he had fallen in a creek and his body washed away in the current.. The child crept into the press while it was open, and falling asleep, was ginned in the bale of cotton.

The cotton was sold to a Texas concern, placed in a warehouse for several weeks and finally exported to Liverpool. The bale was opened a few days ago, and the flattened body of the child was discovered. Through the various channels the cotton was traced back to the broker who bought it in Texas and the identification of the infant established.

The body will be shipped back to this country for burial in the family lot.

FIVE COUPLES IN AURORA SET SEEK SEPARATION.

Moonlight Rides Occasion Discovery of Mistake in Matches and Various Combinations Will Probably Be Changed—One Remarriage Has Already Taken Place.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Aurora society is in a ferment today over the filing of a fifth divorce suit in the ultra fashionable "automobile set." Mrs. Oakley Curry is the latest to seek a decree. She has filed an action against the son of J. Oakley Curry, who organized the Chemical National Bank in Chicago. The charge is desertion.

The Currys were leaders in the younger set of Aurora society, which two years ago became fascinated with moonlight automobile rides, but which is now broken up as a result of divorce suits. The parties ceased suddenly when Mrs. Charles Hunner, known as Aurora's most beautiful woman, sued her wealthy young husband for divorce. Mrs. W. S. Holmes, whose husband is vice-president of the Fox River Butter Company, caused the next sensation by seeking the divorce courts.

Then Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Ferris and the Hardin Hords, members of the same social set, were divorced. Ferris and Mrs. Holmes are already married. Remarriages of the other divorced folk of the "automobile set" are expected by friends.

FOR GOOD OF GOLDEN STATE.

Counties' Committee Talks of Conservation.

State Highway Bonds Are Given Indorsement.

Vote for Distinctive Motto on Stationery.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

DEL MONTE, May 8.—Conservation of the natural resources of California was the subject matter of resolutions, reports and addresses considered today at the eleventh annual meeting of the Counties Committee of the California Promotion Committee, when delegates from sixty-three affiliated organizations assembled in the art-room of the Hotel del Monte to plan new steps in the coöperative movement that has proved so far-reaching in the upbuilding of the Golden State.

Unanimous indorsement of the proposed $18,000,000 bond issue for the improvement of the State's highways; the signing of a petition to the national government for the opening of Yosemite Park to automobiles; the adoption of a comprehensive scheme of the distribution of literature advertising California's resources, with the Promotion Committee as a clearinghouse to supply the subsidiary bodies; indorsement of suggestions for highway tree planting and the conservation of forest areas, and the selection of Visalia as the meeting place of the Counties Committee next November, were among the results of the deliberations.

Chairman Andrea Sbarboro, who presided, reviewing in his opening address the work already accomplished by the Counties Committee, and pointing out the vast field of endeavor still open to the organizations it represents, asserted that the mining, horticultural and viticultural development of California was yet in its infancy, and voiced the prophecy that the grandsons of those present would be numbered among a population of 20,000,000 persons, thriving upon the resources of the empire State of the Pacific.

He expressed gratification that every one of the fifty-eight counties in California had sent representative men to attend the semi-annual gathering.

W. J. McGee, secretary of the Inland Waterways Commission, who represented the national government at the meeting, announced at the outset of his address on water conservation that he had come 3000 miles to express the Federal administration's interest in the work being accomplished in California.

"Had John Smith entered the Gulf of California instead of Chesapeake Bay," he said, "how different would have been the course of American empire. For had settlement begun on the Pacific Coast, the settlers would have learned at the outset the lesson not yet mastered along the Atlantic, that real resource, the one which gives value to all the rest, is not land, but water."

John Fox, special director of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, also delivered a forceful address on the economic value of improving waterways.

Resolutions were adopted at the afternoon session approving the conservation policy of the Federal government; endorsing the plan proposed by the Rivers and Harbors Congress for the issuance of $500,000,000 in government bonds for the improvement of navigable rivers; endorsing the Federal government's action in reducing the charges upon electric power developed by the use of stored water; thanking Congress and the State Legislature for appropriations made in aid of the viticultural industry and indorsing the work of the United States Weather Bureau.

F. E. Olmstead, Federal district forester for California, urged the restoration of California's forests and a paper by W. W. Mackie of the Department of Agriculture on the "Conservation of Federal Lands" was read.

Former Gov. Pardee spoke on the work and aims of the National Conservation Commission.

During the day a meeting of the Secretaries' Association of California was held and it was voted to have a distinctive Golden State motto printed upon stationery used by the various commercial bodies. The delegates were guests at a banquet tonight.

Tomorrow will be given over to entertainment, including sightseeing in Monterey and vicinity, and a mussel bake at Pacific Grove.

The meeting is held under the auspices of the Monterey Chamber of Commerce and the Pacific Grove Board of Trade.

Addresses were delivered on "Eucalyptus Growing in California," by F. D. Cornell of Los Angeles county, representing the State Forestry Society; "California's River Problem," by O. H. Miller, secretary of the Sacramento Development Association; "Forest Tree Growing in California," by G. B. Lull, State Forester, and "The Economic Value of Improving the Rivers and Harbors," by John A. Fox of Washington, D. C., special director of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress.

Boy Falls Two Stories Striking on Face in Cement Basement and Laughs.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 8—To fall two stories to a cement basement seemed highly amusing yesterday to Herman Ripe, an 18-year-old boy, employed on a new building at California and Kearny streets, but his fellow workmen failed to see the comic side of the matter and rushed him to a hospital despite his protests.

The doctors were diligent and thorough, but found nothing but a few bruises on the young man's body.

Ripe was at work forty feet above the basement when he slipped from a beam and plunged downward. He struck face downward on the hard pavement, but arose laughing. If he can overcome the physicians' incredulity, Ripe will be at work again

FEAR PROHIBITION.

Citizens of Sacramento Form Organization to Regulate Liquor Traffic in Their Way.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Citizens of Sacramento have taken steps to regulate saloons and forestall the prohibition movement just instituted here.

The retail liquor traffic is to be regulated through the organization of citizens at large, including the saloon and anti-saloon people. This organization is to be permanent, and its objects are to secure the closing of saloons at 1 o'clock at night; the abandonment of entrances from saloons into apartments separated from bars; strict regulations regarding the sale of liquor to drunkards, minors or drunken persons, the abolishment of slot machines, the extension of police surveillance to secure the observance of all laws by saloonkeepers.

The first meeting was held last night, when Senator Marshal Diggs presided, and committees were named to forward the movement. Statements made at the meeting were that the object in organizing is to prevent total prohibition taking Sacramento as it did Fresno.

HIS TREASURED SOCKS.

BIG RISK TO RECOVER.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 8.—To recover a pair of fancy socks he had left behind in a room formerly occupied by him in a hotel on Montgomery avenue, Theodore Olsen, a sailor, risked a term in prison by crawling up a fire escape to enter the room.

Olsen had had trouble with the hotel clerk, and rather than face him again and demand his socks, he endeavored to recover them by stealth this morning. His entrance to the room through a window was heard and he was severely beaten by several lodgers who took him for a burglar.

He convinced Police Judge Shortall of the truth of his good intentions, and was dismissed.

Trade That Pays.

Young men to learn to operate the linotype machine; a good trade that pays above the average. The Mergenthaler Linotype Company is installing over 100 linotype machines per month. That means just so many positions to be filled at good wages.

The Los Angeles Times has installed a large auxiliary plant, to be used in case of fire or accident, and has placed in charge an expert machinist and operator, making it possible for students who so desire to learn either trade (linotype machinist or operator) in from three to six months. For terms address THE TIMES-MIRROR COMPANY, or Phone Main 8200, Home 10391, and ask for manager of the Linotype School.

QUEEN'S VOGUE IS DWINDLING.

Victoria of Spain Growing Exceedingly Fat.

Views Flirtations of King With Angry Eye.

Losing Her Grip on Hearts of Her Subjects.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

MADRID, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The popularity of the King of Spain grows, but that of Queen Victoria seems to wane among the Madrileños. Whenever the King appears in public he is followed by an admiring crowd which usually becomes so enthusiastic that he has to take refuge in his motor. He seems to have no fear of anarchists, and his light-heartedness appeals to his subjects.

The Queen has grown exceedingly fat and her stoutness by no means has improved her looks. She is no longer the fairy queen that charmed the hearts of the Spanish people. Moreover, she is otherwise very much like her mother, Princess Henry of Battenberg. She is very difficult to get on with, Spanish court ladies say, and there are rumors of displays of temper toward the King that augur ill for their future happiness.

It is recalled that the Queen's mother was always known in the English royal family for her imperious, domineering temper, and for the uncomfortable time she gave her brothers and sisters when she had complete control of her mother, the late Queen Victoria.

King Alfonso is not blameless. He is a fervid admirer of feminine beauty and always looks sweetly on any pretty woman who looks at him. This Queen Victoria does not like and King Alfonso does not seem to mind whether she does or not.

SKY SQUADRON.

AERIAL PATROL FOR GERMANY.

AIRSHIPS TAKE PART IN DEFENSE OF FRONTIER.

Stations Are Being Established Along Line from Friedrichshafen to Cologne and Fleet May Be Concentrated Within Few Hours of Western Border.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN (Germany) May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] That within a year or so Germany will be in a position to establish a fairly complete airship patrol on its frontiers is revealed by a summary of the plans now projected for the disposition of the various German dirigibles built and building.

Besides the airships which are to make regular trips on the proposed line from Friedrichshafen to Strassburg and Stuttgart, all of which will be available for governmental purposes, one of the Zeppelin ships is to be stationed at Cologne, while another of the same kind will be stationed at Metz, where a hall for its reception is being pushed to completion. Probably similar facilities will be provided at Frankfort-on-the-Main.

The confidence which the military authorities place in the practical utility of the airships is shown by the fact that the plans which have been completed for the concentration of an "aerial fleet" will establish a series of stations in West Germany within a few hours sail of the border.

QUAKES BY HUNDREDS.

Observatory in Calabrian Zone Has Registered 213 Shocks Since Messina Disaster.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

ROME, May 8.—Since the great earthquake of December, scarcely a day has passed without shocks, more or less strong, being felt at Messina. Reggio and surrounding districts also have felt daily shocks.

The observatory in the Calabrian earthquake zone has registered from December 28 last up to today, 213 shocks.

Since the former date there have been no shocks strong enough to destroy buildings. Tottering walls have been overthrown, but there has been practically no loss of life since the day of the great disaster.

Tacoma Jury Which Indicted Mayor Favors Law Acting in Some Other Way.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

TACOMA, May 8.—After having assembled five weeks ago, primarily for the purpose of investigating the red-light district, the grand jury completed its labors today, submitting its findings in a comprehensive report filed with Judge Easterday.

The report, in part, says:

"We have found an indictment against the Mayor of this city for not enforcing the law against this evil. While the law stands as it is, it is our duty to find such an indictment, and we trust that our action in this matter will result in minimizing the evil in the city of Tacoma, and will bring about the enactment of some law by the Legislature of this State whereby this evil may be controlled without making the officers of the law violators thereof."

DIAMONDS IN SUCCOTASH.

GOLDFIELD, May 8.—Two diamond earrings, estimated to be worth $125 each were found in a dish of succotash by Mr. and Mrs. Ray Robinson of Goldfield, while at their evening meal Thursday night.

The corn and beans in cans, were bought of a local store some months ago at a bargain sale. On Thursday a can of string beans and a can of corn were made into a succotash, and served. Mr. Robinson bit into a stone, took it from his mouth, and to his amazement, found it to be a diamond. At the same time another member of the family chewed upon a gold mounting.

The dinner was broken up and the family began panning the succotash for more diamonds and the mate to the first stone was found.

The find was kept secret until to-

PAYNE BILL.

SENATORS ARGUE ON PIG LEAD TARIFF.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

WASHINGTON, May 8.—As soon as the tariff bill was taken up by the Senate today and Section 180, putting a duty of two and one-eighths cents per pound on pig lead was read, Senator Bristow arose to oppose the increase from one and one-half cents a pound as provided in the House bill, saying the increased rate would make it equal to the rate of the Dingley bill. Mr. Bristow read from tariff hearings held by the Ways and Means Commitee to show that it was there contended that this increase, if made, would necessitate an increase of duty on other ingredients that are used in making paint. He argued that the House had been judicious in its action.

"It makes no difference what the House did from time to time," said Mr. Aldrich. "We are here to do justice to this inquiry in view of the facts of this case."

He added that Mr. Leishberger, from whose testimony Mr. Bristow read, "was trying to break down the whole lead schedule."

"The facts stated by this witness are the important things," interposed Mr. Beveridge, "and it makes no difference what his personal views are on the tariff or on aëroplanes. We are here to know the facts, and if Mr. Leishberger's tesimony is not true we should know it."

Mr. Smoot remarked that Mr Leishberger was a smelter and a purchaser of lead, and Mr. Bristow retorted by declaring:

"The purchaser of lead has some rights as well as the men who have lead for sale."

Mr. Bristow contended that the differential provided by the duty recommended by the Committee on Finance on pig lead was greater than the cost of smelting and unwarranted.

The reading of the testimony of Mr. Brush of the American Smelting and Refining Company provoked colloquies among the Senators, during which Senators Smoot and Smith of Michigan suggested that he was influenced by his Mexican interests and by the interests of his business so that his testimony should not be taken as satisfactory.

Mr. Smoot declared that he knew Mr. Brush and had every confidence, he said, in anything he might say. He was liable to be affected in his views, he said, and in his opinions by his interests, as all men are, but he added: "Whatever he says, whether or not under oath, I am certain he says what he honestly believes."

Mr. Burkett condemned the method by which the Committee on Finance prepared its bill without hearings.

He declared that sometimes not even a quorum of the committee was on hand in the Senate to give information.

"There are a whole lot of people," he said, "who are more interested in having this bill finished in a hurry, and I for one am willing to stay here all summer to make it absolutely right."

Replying to Mr. Burkett, Mr. Aldrich said that if the Senate stayed in session until all the Senators understood every schedule in the bill, they would not only be here all summer, but for ten years.

The prosperity of the people of Nebraska, and of the country generally, depended, Mr. Aldrich said, upon the maintenance of the protective tariff.

In concluding his remarks, Mr. Bristow said that rather than give the American people an improper tariff law he would send the subject back to them to be fought over two years hence.

Mr. Carter refuted all suggestions that the Senate had not had ample information regarding the schedules of the tariff. He then spoke in opposition to a tariff commission.

MRS. BOYLE.

ference to her fate which characterized her throughout her trial, Mrs. James H. Boyle sat immovable as the jury returned with its verdict. A heavy veil which she has worn throughout the trial concealed her features so that it could not be seen whether her color changed, but there was not a movement of her body to indicate that she so much as heard her doom pronounced. Her indifference was even more pronounced than it had been during preceding portions of the trial.

The courtroom was crowded almost to suffocation when the jury filed in at 1:30 and the foreman announced they had agreed. The crowd was warned that no demonstration would be tolerated and the verdict was read in silence. Quietly as if preparing to go out for a walk, Mrs. Boyle drew on her gloves, arose from her chair and went with the Sheriff back to her cell.

Judge Miller, Mrs. Boyle's attorney, has announced that he will make a motion on Monday for a new trial. It is believed here that the motion will be overruled, and that both Mr. Boyle and his wife will be sentenced Monday. The penalty is from one year in the penitentiary to a life sentence and in Mrs. Boyle's case the maximum is twenty-five years.

FEAR FOR PLUMS.

Senators and Congressmen Worried by Danger That Money for Harbor Will Revert to Treasury.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

WASHINGTON, May 8.—Unless Congress takes specific action at the special session now in progress, nearly $1,000,000 appropriated for rivers and harbors improvements in various sections of the United States, will be sent back into the national treasury, much to the chagrin of many Congressmen and Senators.

This situation arises over the "covering back" section of the sundry civil appropriation bill, approved March 4. This section provides that all unexpended balances of appropriations that remained in the treasury books June 1, 1904, except permanent specified appropriations, judgments and findings of courts, trust funds, and appropriations for fulfilling treaty obligations with the Indians, be carried to the surplus fund and covered back into the treasury, "provided that the money is not needed to pay existing treaties."

To meet the situation, Senator Burton has introduced a resolution providing that the section of the sundry civil bill in question shall not be construed as applying to the unexpended balances in rivers and harbors appropriations, which may be essential, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, for the maintenance and prosecution of the work for which it was appropriated.

Among the appropriations that will revert are: Mouth of Columbia River, Oregon, $24,000; entrance to Coos Bay, Oregon, $23,000; restraining barriers, Sacramento and Feather rivers, California, $114,000, and harbor at Tacoma, Wash., $11,000.

DUNPHY DIVORCE INVALID.

Superior Court Decides Woman Still Wife of Man She Married in Oregon.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 8.—Superior Judge Graham set aside today the divorce obtained by Mrs. Edith Dunphy from James S. Dunphy, the wealthy cattleman, which granted her $60,000 alimony.

The court also declared the marriage between the couple null and void, holding that at the time she married Dunphy the woman was still the wife of Judge Silverstone of Portland, Or. The divorce Mrs. Silverstone was granted at Portland is pronounced invalid because when it was applied for she had been a resident of Oregon only three months, the statutes of that State requiring a residence of one year.

The divorce she obtained from her first husband, W. C. Coffey, is declared to have been valid, and her marriage to Judge Silverstone legal.

CROWDS HORRIFIED.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 8.—In full view of more than 5000 horror-stricken spectators, Miss May Scott, a trapeze performer with the Sells-Floto circus, slipped and suddenly plunged from her trapeze bar to the ground, a distance of sixty feet, during a performance this afternoon. She was dangerously injured. So unnerved were hundreds of women and children by the accident that attachés of the circus had to circulate among the spectators and state that the girl was but slightly hurt, before the performance could be continued.

FOR HOMESEEKERS.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—Large areas of valuable farming lands in one of the most beautiful valleys in the west, a region described by government experts as of wonderful scenic grandeur and of exceeding fertility, and free from tornadoes, blizzards or other severe weather, will be opened to settlers on May 22. The lands are situated in the Shoshone irrigation project which eventually will reclaim 150,000 acres east of the Yellowstone National Park in Northern Wyoming.

WASHINGTON.

HEAVY ATTACK ON LEMON RATE.

Fruit Dealers of East Want Tariff Reduced.

Schedule Means Less Than Cent a Pound.

Senator Flint Given Translation of Schedule.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Evidently the fruit dealers of the country feel, that the lemon schedule is of vital importance to them, if one may judge from the pressure being brought to bear for reduction of duty. The Baltimore Fruit and Produce Association has sent to every Senator a petition to fix this duty on lemons: A, in packages of capacity of 1¼ cubic feet, or less, at 37½ cents per package, including box shooks; B, in packages of capacity exceeding 1¼ cubic feet and not exceeding 2½ cubic feet, 75 cents per package, including shooks; C, in packages of capacity exceeding 2½ cubic feet, for every additional cubic foot or fractional part thereof, at the rate of 30 cents per cubic foot, including shooks; D, in bulk, 1 cent per pound; oranges, limes, grapefruit, shaddocks or pomelos, 1 cent per pound.

A. F. Call has written to Senator Flint, analyzing this proposal, showing that under it the tariff would be: A and B, .815 of a cent per pound and C, .8 cent per pound or 20 per cent. reduction on the present duty of 1 cent per pound.

THREE JUDGES CHOSEN.

PRESIDENT'S FRIENDS.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

WASHINGTON, May 8.—President Taft today settled three Federal judgeship contests by sending to the Senate the nomination of George Donworth as judge of the Western District of Washington; Charles A. Willard of Minneapolis, as district judge of Minnesota, and William I. Grubb for the Northern District of Alabama.

Charles A. Willard is a warm personal friend of the President, and served on the bench in the Philippines from 1901 to 1905.

Two of the judgeship appointments were made personally by the President. Mr. Grubb of Birmingham was formerly a resident of Cincinnati, a Yale graduate in the class of 1883, and a room-mate of the President's younger brother, Horace D. Taft, at the New Haven University.

Mr. Donworth of Seattle assumes the additional judgeship provided by an act of the last Congress. He is a former law partner of Senator Piles of Washington, and had the indorsement of the entire Washington delegation, it is said.

The President also sent to the Senate the nomination of Edward M. Doe of Arizona, to be assistant justice of that Territory.

SAFETY APPLIANCE PROBLEM.

Question of What Constitutes Interstate Shipment Raised by Northwestern Pacific.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 8.—The question of what constitutes interstate shipments within the meaning of the "safety appliance act," came up in the United States District Court today in the case of the government against the Northwestern Pacific Railway Company for alleged violation of the act.

A jury was waived, and it was agreed to submit the case by briefs for Judge De Haven's interpretation of the law.

The indictment against the railroad was based upon the lack of required safety appliances on cars in which shipment was made from an Oregon point to Duncan Mills, Cal.

It is contended by the railroad company that the law regarding interstate traffic does not apply to this shipment, because it was trans-shipped from cars which brought it across the Oregon line, and which, admittedly, were properly equipped, into the defective cars in California.

Assistant United States Attorney Black will argue that a through waybill was made out from the Oregon point to Duncan Mills, and that this made it an interstate shipment within the contemplation of the law.

HAMILTON ARRAIGNED.

OLYMPIA, May 8.—Former Adjt.-Gen. Ortis Hamilton, charged with embezzlement from the State military fund, was arraigned today. He pleaded not guilty, waived examination, and was held to answer in the Superior Court.

Hamilton has been unable to secure bail in the amount of $10,000.

It is reported today that every State office will be investigated, owing to the alleged loose methods in the auditor's office, which permitted Hamilton's alleged embezzlements.

SWEDISH NOBLE HELD.

OAKLAND, May 8.—Prince Walter Vretman, the alleged Swedish nobleman arrested for passing a bad check on Dr. Percy D. Gaskill, was held for trial in the Police Court this morning. He will be given a hearing on Monday, at which time detectives will report on their investigation of his record.

VICTORY AHEAD FOR STOLYPIN.

Judges of Administrative Conditions in Russia Declare Minister Is Playing His Difficult Game in Masterly Fashion and Believes Nicholas Is Behind Him in Work.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. PETERSBURG, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Prof. Milyoukov and other competent judges of administrative conditions in Russia which led up to the Stolypin ultimatum, are confident that this statesman will defeat the Reactionaries who try to bring about his fall from power.

Stolypin is playing the game with dexterity as well as boldness, and his admirers predict that Nicholas not only will sustain him, but will make him chancelor of the empire, reviving the office last held by M. De Giers.

Stolypin does not come up to the liberal ideal by any means. With his extreme severity of treatment meted out to the members of the first douma and to so-called political offenders throughout the country, the liberals can have no sympathy. But they concede that he endeavors to interpret the constitution in a progressive spirit, and they would regard his elimination as a severe, if not fatal, blow to Russian progress.

The Emperor has not as yet informed the Cabinet as to the fate of the naval bill, but it is the general belief in government circles that he will approve the bill and that Premier Stolypin and his Ministers will remain in office.

Count Cassini, Ambassador to Spain, has resigned his post and there are renewed rumors that M. Iswolsky, Foreign Minister, will succeed to that office. The retirement of M. Iswolsky from the Foreign Ministry is now considered practically inevitable.

Upon accepting this portfolio, M. Iswolsky made it a condition that he be permitted at any time to lay it down in exchange for a foreign post.

CEMENT BIDDERS AGREE.

Three Companies Name Same Price for Material to Be Used by the State.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

SACRAMENTO, May 8.—Upon opening the bids for 100,000 barrels of cement for the State, State Engineer Ellery found that the three companies had submitted the same prices that were rejected by him a month ago, viz.: $1.75 a barrel free on board cars at factory; $1.90 delivered on cars at San Francisco. A bid of 72 cents a barrel was received from the Iowa Portland Cement Company, but the long freight-haul must be added.

The bidders are the Santa Cruz, the Standard and the Pacific Portland Cement companies.

CABBIES ON STRIKE.

PRODIGAL RETURNS.

Gives no Explanation Why He Mysteriously Left Family and Business.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] George Kromer, who disappeared from Sacramento last June, leaving his real estate business and his wife and children, has returned. He is a physical wreck, broken down in mind and body, and so far has not been able to explain where he has been or why he went away.

He returned to his home Wednesday evening, but the fact escaped notice until now. He has been in bed ever since. Since his departure nothing has been heard of his whereabouts. He was in Pittsburgh for a while. When Kromer left so mysteriously, suspicion was aroused that his accounts might be wrong, but this proved untrue. He was prominent in business circles.

CONTRACTORS GET DAMAGES.

Phoenix Jury Gives Los Angeles Firm More Than Ask for But Corrects Verdict.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

PHOENIX, May 8.—A jury this evening awarded Grant Bros., contractors of Los Angeles, damages against the Santa Fé, Prescott and Phoenix Railroad Company of $9060, the amount asked for, for contracting equipment destroyed in burning freight cars during transportation, a few miles from Wickenburg, in June, 1906. The defense was, "no charge for transportation, it being part of the construction contract," and "fire probably started through contributory negligence of the plaintiff's agents."

The interest centers chiefly in the unusual verdict which was first returned at $9160 or more than the amount asked for. The court had instructed the jury the amount asked was the limit of its latitude. The defense instantly asked for a poll of the jury. In responding one juryman explained he was confused. The figure returned had been stated so often by witnesses as fixing the appraised value that he thought it was the amount prayed for.

Another explained that he assumed the greater figure was the one meant by the court in the instructions and that the court had merely got confused in delivering the charge. The defense finally permitted the jury to retire and return a correct verdict to the amount asked, standing for appeal on the evidence of the prejudiced jury and other errors.

MURDERER CONFESSES.

SEATTLE, May 8.—Mrs. Mary Jane Fortier, who was shot by her brother-in-law, Jean Fortier, after he had killed his brother Michael, yesterday, died in the Green Lake Hospital this evening.

The murderer, confined in the County Jail, has confessed to the police that he was prompted to the deed by revenge. He said that Mrs. Fortier and her husband had contrived to cheat him out of his interest in the grocery store conducted by the Fortiers.

He also told the police that he had placed a bottle of poison in his pocket before hiding in the woods, intending to commit suicide if in danger of capture, but that he feared death and threw the poison away.

LIFE'S SEAMY SIDE.

SUICIDE PACT CARRIED OUT.

Bodies of 'Affinities Found Side by Side.

Revolver Lay on Bed Between the Corpses.

Had Matched Nickels to See Who Should Shoot.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. LOUIS (Mo.) May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] As the result of a suicide agreement, the bodies of Joseph Baker, formerly Sheriff of St. Francois county, Missouri, and Mrs. Anna Reed, wife of James Reed of St. Louis, were found in a room occupied by them in the rooming-house of J. W. McIntyre, No. 2632 Olive street, this afternoon. A revolver lay on the bed between them. Each had been shot through the mouth.

Employes of a restaurant on Olive street, near Beaumont, formerly owned by Baker, say that for a long time he had been threatening to kill Mrs. Reed and himself. They declare they have seen the pair match nickels to determine which should shoot the other when the time came for them to die under an agreement. Baker and Mrs. Reed had kept company for years. Baker was 55 years old and Mrs. Reed was 30.

The room in which the bodies were found was filled with the fumes of carbolic acid, indicating that either Baker or Mrs. Reed, or both of them probably, had taken poison. The wounds concealed the burns if there were any.

Baker went into a restaurant near the rooming-house yesterday and talked in a gloomy strain. Mrs. Sarah Porter, one of the waitresses, asked him what was the matter.

"I cannot tell you," he replied. "You would have me arrested if I did. Wait until tomorrow and you will know."

BLAME MOTHER WITH SUICIDE.

NEIGHBORS SAY SHE DROVE HER DAUGHTER TO DEATH.

Tales of Inhuman Cruelty and Ill-treatment of Sixteen-Year-Old Girl Are Being Investigated by Coroner's Jury and Formal Charges May Be Made.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Following the suicide of Olga Burner, sixteen years of age, at her home, Whiting, Ind., charges that she was the victim of extreme cruelty and ill-treatment by her mother are being investigated today by the Whiting police and Coroner E. R. Gordon of Lake county.

Chicago physicians have been requested to make a chemical analysis of the heart, lungs and other internal organs of the girl in the belief that the poison was not the direct cause of death. At the inquest several companions of the dead girl told the Whiting authorities that she had complained repeatedly of ill-treatment.

Statements made to the Coroner and police were to the effect that the girl had told her companions that she had been beaten repeatedly, locked in a [illegible] and denied food and water by her mother, Mrs. Ellen Burner.

Her story, according to the witnesses was pitiful in the extreme, and it is said this alleged mistreatment drove her to end her life. She cried frequently in the presence of her girl friends and told them that life was unbearable.

Mrs. Antonio Lenz testified that this girl had called at her home and begged for protection two weeks ago.

According to Mrs. Lenz, Olga told her a story of extreme cruelty.

Several girl companions informed the police that Olga had told them that she had been locked up in a shed for three days and nights without food or water. She also said she had been beaten on the head with a club, kicked and otherwise tortured.

[illegible] Wilson declared that she and Olga had been companions a number of years, and that Olga had told her repeatedly that she was being cruelly treated and that she could not endure it. The stories told by the companions of the girl caused a storm of indignation among the residents of Whiting, with the result that the inquest was [illegible] and a final verdict delayed for a thorough investigation.

REVENGE IS BOOMERANG.

[illegible] Convict Tries to Get Rival in Prison and Is Caught in Plot.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 8.—Angered by his divorced wife's promise to marry W. F. Woodward, an Alaska miner, [illegible] B. Kefford, college graduate and paroled convict, signed Woodward's name to worthless checks and, impersonating him, passed them, in an attempt to land his rival in prison.

The effort was a boomerang, and Kefford now faces a long term of imprisonment, which he had planned for Woodward.

Kefford was sentenced to San Quentin from Los Angeles in 1906, for passing a fictitious check. His wife, who is a trained nurse in this city, procured a divorce during his imprisonment, but, [illegible], promised to marry him on his release, so he claims.

Kefford was paroled from San Quentin prison nine days ago. When he discovered his former wife's preference for Woodward, he was filled with jealousy, and a desire for revenge. He took two blank checks from his wife's check book, signed Woodward's name to them and, representing himself as the latter, procured goods from a haberdasher. These he ordered sent to Woodward's room. Woodward was arrested, but the police became convinced that Kefford was the guilty man, and he was arrested. The police sweated Kefford severely and finally obtained a confession from him.

CHINESE SUPPLY HAIR.

Basis for American Woman's Coiffure Is Imported from Celestial Kingdom.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

WASHINGTON, May 8.—While it is a well known fact that all the hair displayed by the American woman in her handsome and stylish coiffure is not necessarily her own, it is not so generally know that much of it may have been "grown" in China.

But such would seem to be the case, according to Vice-Consul-General Fuller at Hongkong, who reports to the Bureau of Manufactures that 207,414 pounds of human hair were invoiced for shipment to the United States from that port last year.

The year previous but 56,135 pounds had been exported to this country and then came fashions requiring massive headpieces.

In consequence, the women had to have more hair to fill them, and the surplus hair of the Celestial kingdom's four hundred million at once became a marketable commodity.

"The hair reaches Hongkong from the interior," said Consul Fuller, "and is cleaned and sorted according to length and quality. It is then packed and stored, disinfected and shipped to New York. It is said here that the hair can be so treated in New York as to alter its color and texture and that it is used to make the switches, curls and bangs so fashionable in the United States at the present time."

WRECKAGE BELIEVED PART OF MISSING STEAMER.

Adelia Shores Thought to Have Been Lost in Storm on the Great Lakes—Planks and Debris Identified as Belonging to Her—Her Crew Gone.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

DULUTH (Minn.) May 8.—The story of the wreck of the Adelia Shores was brought to Duluth by Capt. Geel and Mate Spaulding of the steamer Simon Langwell, which arrived in port last night. The Langwell Tuesday morning met with a considerable quantity of wreckage, and the upper works of a boat that the captain feels sure belongs to the Shores.

The mate's story follows:

"Several lock planks floated by. There was nothing to indicate to what vessel they belonged. Suddenly Capt. Geel pointed off to starboard. I looked and saw the upper works of a vessel about one thousand feet from us. There was no sign of a name.

"'That is the Adelia Shores,' said the captain. 'I know her well.' I knew the Shores also and agreed with him. We were then about twelve miles north-northeast of Grand Island."

Capt. Geel states that he is positive the wreckage came from the Shores.

BELIEVE CREW DROWNED.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

CLEVELAND (O.) May 8.—It is believed here that the fourteen members of the crew of the steamer Adelia Shores have perished and that the boat lies at the bottom of Lake Superior, off White Fish Point. The Shores, which is owned by the Manx Transit Company of Cleveland, passed the Soo, up-bound, last Thursday. Since then nothing has been heard from her except newspaper dispatches reporting the finding of part of the Shores wreckage.

The boat was in charge of Capt. Holmes of Milwaukee. She was a wooden vessel of 734 tons.

BRAVE WOMAN HONORED.

Bronze Tablet for Mrs. Margaret Corbin, Who Died Taking Active Part in Battle.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

NEW YORK, May 8.—The bravery of Margaret Corbin, the first woman to take a soldier's part in the war for American independence, and the glory of Fort Trion, one of the outer works of Fort Washington, will be commemorated by a large bronze tablet which is to be unveiled on the site of the old fort, during the Hudson-Fulton celebration this fall.

Margaret Corbin was the wife of a Pennsylvania private, and during the attacks of the Hessians on the outer works of Fort Washington she reloaded one of the cannons in Fort Trion, many times. The battle was nearly over when both she and her husband were killed.

The tablet is presented by C. K. Billings, whose fine stable of trotting horses is now located on the site of the fort on upper Manhattan Island.

Henry has a part in his father's show as the champion fat boy, but as he was under age, he was not allowed to go on the stage. He says he was never sick in his life, likes cold weather and knows what it is to be fat in summer.

RAILWAY RECORD.

ROADS SHOW COMPETITION.

Missouri Fight May Be on Gould Lines.

Leaders Declare It Is Only Fight for Business.

Proved by Action of Alton and Burlington.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. LOUIS, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Close upon the announcement by Circuit Attorney Seebert G. Jones, that he had employed his brother-in-law, Jeptha D. Howe, John Kennish and Rush C. Lake, former assistant attorney-general, and of the employment of Frederick W. Lehman of St. Louis and Sanford B. Ladd by the State to aid in the litigation against the railroads in the passenger and freight rate cases, charges came today that the transcontinental lines are in the rate squabble to damage the Gould interests.

Persons familiar with the railroad situation see evidences of a bitter war between the Gould interests and the transcontinental lines of the West. They believe that the larger railroad systems of the country are engaged in an attempt to crush the independent or anti-community-of-interest systems of the West.

Some of the railroad officials, however, declare that the fight is one of competitive business in both freight and passenger traffic, and that the injunction suit of Circuit Attorney Jones, at the instance of Gov. Hadley, prevented the adjustment of the rate problem.

This spirit of competition, some of the railroad men say, has invaded the spheres of duty of officials who are acting under its influence in bringing suits against the railroads. It is declared that the determination of the Burlington and Alton to remain in the competitive field was so strong that they insisted on a reduction of the passenger rate to 2½ cents a mile, instead of going back to the 3 cent rate after the Federal Court had declared the 2 cent fare unconstitutional.

Charles H. Middleton, assistant to the vice-president of the Missouri Pacific, said that whatever action any railroad system may have taken or is contemplating is purely competitive. All systems, he declares, are in a competitive position and the apparent willingness of some of them to maintain the passenger rate in Missouri lower than three cents a mile is nothing further than the spirit of competition asserting itself.

GREAT ADVERTISING GAIN.

April Compilation Shows "The Times" Is in The "400 Class."

AN EVEN 400 columns is the total gain of The Times in advertising for April, 1909, compared with the same month of the previous year.

Careful measurement shows an aggregate of 4504 columns of paid matter printed in The Times last month as against 4104 for April, 1908.

The combined advertising of the two Los Angeles morning contemporaries of The Times was 147 columns less than the amount of advertising published in The Times alone for April, 1909.

Actual, indisputable figures, as shown in this comparison, prove again and again the vast superiority of The Times as a publicity medium over any other local newspaper.

The Times' lead in business in Los Angeles has been maintained for more than twenty-five years; and every month for ten years all reports demonstrate that The Times has regularly published more paid matter than any other newspaper in the world.

HAVE MARY GARDEN FADED.

Salome With and Without Her Veils Feature of Student's Circus at Ann Arbor.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ANN ARBOR (Mich.) May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Michigan Union Circus, given by the students and faculty of the niversity of Michigan, was a success financially, over $5000 being taken in tne afternoon and $800 more at the vaudeville performance this evening.

The cowboy riding by the Rocky Mountain Club, the stage coach hold-up and the Roman chariot racing seems to have made by far the greatest hits with the crowds. Neal McCarthy of Phoenix, Ariz., who drove the chariot races, is the hero of the campus tonight.

Dr. May of the faculty did stunts with the trapeze and Indian clubs that was equal to anything done by professionals. In the sideshows, Salome, with and without her seven veils, had Mary Garden danced off the boards. In one sideshow they sold three shots at the faculty for 5 cents, and Dean Reed of the literary department was completely knocked off the boards inside of half an hour.

Trixie Friganza Settles Big Damage Suit Against Automobile Company for Several Thousand.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Trixie Friganza, the comedienne settled out of court her suit for $50,000 damages against the Rambler Garage Company for injuries suffered October 20, 1907, when an automobile in which she was riding crashed into another in Sheridan Road. When the case was called for trial today it was announced an agreement had been reached.

The actress gurgled into the telephone a delighted laugh today, and said:

"Say, I'm going to lay off for two weeks, and go into the country with my dogs and just sit around and rest."

"How much did you get?" she was asked.

"Oh, say, I'm afraid to tell you. Each of my creditors would come around with a satchel. It looks good to me. I'm going to hang on tight to it until I get a chance to spend it. I'll need somebody to help me. Oh, well, if you must know, you'd be safe in saying $5000."

PAYS FOR FORGOTTEN MEAL.

At that time he was 14 years old and on his way to take a steamer to Germany. He stopped in the restaurant, and after finishing his meal, rushed out without thinking to pay his check. As he did not know the name of the resaurant, he was unable to send the amount, but when he arrived yesterday he went to the restaurant and paid what he owed.

Teeth

I make the only genuine Restoration and Combination Plates. They are absolutely my own. Look out for imitations.

Quality is the backbone of my business and my success is the reflection of my "square deal method." I want your business and you need my services, so let me advise you (free) and tell you just how cheaply I can do your work and give you the kind of work I am proud to call classy.

For beautifying your face and restoring your mouth to its youthful appearance, I OFFER YOU MY RESTORATION PLATE. Its merits are a hundred fold greater than the ordinary plate.

For cases where a couple of teeth remain, I OFFER MY COMBINATION PLATE (less expensive than bridge work or alveolar work). They hold firm in their place under any test. Take my tip and investigate.

Where only a few teeth are lost, I suggest TEETH WITHOUT A PLATE. These compare with NATURE'S BEST. I could not exaggerate the true comfort these teeth will bring you. They represent THE CLASS OF ALL DENTAL WORK. Remember, nothing but a square deal goes.

PRIVATE WAGER.

ARREST THREE FANS FOR BASEBALL BET.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 8.—The first arrests under the new anti-betting laws recently passed by the Legislature were made this afternoon, when three baseball enthusiasts were taken into custody at Recreation Park while the Oakland and Vernon game was being played, and charged with betting on the game.

John Wilson, Frank Edwards and Frank Myers, the three men arrested, were in the bleachers at the time, and, according to the police, were laying wagers with each other. They are not accused of bookmaking, but were arrested under the clause in the statute which prohibits betting in any manner whatsoever upon contests of skill, speed or power of endurance of man, or beast, or between man and beast.

The penalty for violation of the new law, which is similar to the Hughes measure of New York, is not less than thirty days, and not more than a year in jail. There is no alternative of a fine.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

BOSTON, May 8.—Boston defeated New York in the fourth pitchers' battle of the series, by the score of 2 to 1. With the bases full in the third inning, Ames forced in one run with a base on balls, and again in the eighth a pass resulted in a run. Score:

MORE DIRTY BALL.

THREE PLAYERS FIGHT.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

BROOKLYN, May 8.—A three-cornered fight between Lennox of Brooklyn, on one side, and Knabe and Gleason of Philadelphia, on the other, nearly caused a riot at the Brooklyn game with Philadelphia here today.

In the fifth inning Knabe, going to third on Titus's single, spiked Lennox, although he appeared to have plenty of room to pass the Brooklyn man. Lennox resented the act by striking Knabe on the jaw. Knabe hit back and the two clinched. Gleason, who was on the coaching line, jumped in, but before the fight became general, cooler players separated the combatants. All three were ordered out of the game.

As Gleason walked to the bench a spectator in one of the boxes threw a paper wad and a pop bottle at him. A special policeman, who started to arrest the player's assailant, was interfered with by the spectators, when a crowd of 1200 rushed on the field. But a swarm of policemen and detectives who were outside the grounds rushed in at this point and quelled the disturbance.

The game then proceeded quietly, Philadelphia winning 8 to 2, batting Scanlan freely. Deninger, who replaced Knabe, broke a finger on the first ball pitched and also retired.

OUTLAW LEAGUE.

Batteries: Hoag and Hackett; Cooper and Burke.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

FRESNO, May 8.—Hopkins shut out the Tigers today, 4 to 0. This is two victories in the series for each team. Santa Cruz, 4; hits, 4; errors, 3.
Fresno, 0; hits 6; errors, 2.
Batteries: Hopkins and Conrad; Lange, Bills and McDonough.

POLICE SUPPRESS RIOT.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) May 8.—During the National League game between Philadelphia and Brooklyn here today a fistic encounter occurred, participated in by Knabe, Lennox and Gleason.

The crowd swarmed on the field and a riot seemed imminent when the police restored quiet. The players were put out of the game.

PATHFINDER BUSY.

ALBUQUERQUE, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Cañon after cañon greeted the pathfinding Chalmers-Detroit "30" today in its effort to lay out a feasible route for the flag-to-flag endurance run. Owing to the little car's heavy overload and five passengers the progress was slow through the mountain fastnesses.

The day's run from Santa Fé was seventy-five miles. The route was complicated and in spite of two guides was lost twice. The pathfinders have now covered 561 miles of the route to the City of Mexico and have 400 miles to El Paso and then 1400 to the City of Mexico to do. They do not expect to reach their destination until May 30. The party consists of F. Ed Spooner, in charge, correspondent and photographer; Billy Keupper, driver, and W. E. McCarton, route book compiler. Sunday will be spent in Albuquerque.

BELATED VICTORY.

Chicago Beats Wisconsin in Track Meet, Owing to High Class Work by Crawley.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

MADISON (Wis.) May 8.—Coming from behind with a tremendous finish, the University of Chicago defeated Wisconsin today by the score of 67 to 58 in the opening dual meet of the western outdoor track season.

The sensational work of Crawley snatched victory from Wisconsin. Crawley far overshadowed his fellow-athletes with a total of twenty-one points. He was first in the low hurdles and high hurdles; tied for first in the pole vault and high jump, and was second in the shot put. The majority of his points were secured near the end of the meet. Osthoff was next in the total number of points scored. He won the shot put, discus throw and broad jump.

In the half-mile, Timlin of Chicago was disqualified for the alleged fouling of Tillotson of Wisconsin. One of the best performances was Stoppelett's work in the two-mile event. He ran alone most of the way and finished in 9m. 57s.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

VISALIA, May 8.—Virgia Taylor, aged 5 years, was drowned in the Kaweah River near here, last evening. She and her sister were riding a bicycle, Virgia being on the handle bars. On crossing the bridge they ventured too close to the edge and went over. The older sister managed to reach the shore but Virgia was swept under a pile of drift wood.

Dave Sanders, the alleged leader of a band of cattle thieves, who shipped hundreds of head of stock to a San Francisco meat company, failed to appear for his preliminary examination this morning, and his bonds of $5000 were declared forfeited. He is said to have gone to Mexico.

IN TROLLEY WILDS.

CAR LOSES ITS RECKONING.

BUT GUESTS SAFELY REACH "PORT" AT NAPLES.

Opening of the New Hostelry at the City by the Canals Is Attended by Many Merrymakers—Trips in Launches and Gondolas Gliding Over Still Waters Fascinate.

Within sight of the gleaming lights of Naples and within a few hundred feet of the Napoli, where a dance incident to the opening and "house-warming" of the new hotel was in progress, the special car carrying some sixty invited guests from Los Angeles got lost last night and wandered helplessly among the mustard plants until rescued by the combined efforts of two superintendents and a pilot car.

Filled with merrymakers, the special took the wrong switch at Naples Junction, and, instead of reaching the Napoli, sidetracked at Willows. After some discussion as to where the car was located and a bit more roaming, on first one siding and then another, a pilot car was sent from Naples and the special followed this into port.

Once at the Napoli, however, there was an enjoyable time. The new hotel was opened yesterday for its first "all the year" season, under favorable auspices. From the banquet served by the host, R. H. Stevens and Mrs. Stevens at 6 o'clock until the last of the dancers left the floor in the wee sma' hours the guests enjoyed themselves immensely.

Several hundred guests were on the floor during the evening, including a large number from Los Angeles, Long Beach and Belmont Heights.

There was dancing in the main dining-room, and those who did not care for this form of pleasure, enjoyed the evening strolling on the roof garden where was a beautiful view from across the canals to where the lights of Long Beach, Alamitos Bay, and Bay City gleamed.

The hotel and grounds were decorated with many hanging Japanese lanterns, and shaded electric lights, and there were cozy corners in abundance for those who wished a quiet tete a te.

The dance was a delightful affair. The color motif in the large dining-room converted into a ballroom for the occasion, green and pink was carried out by a profusion of carnations and palms, combined with hanging baskets of asparagus plumosus.

Launches and gondolas were provided for the pleasure of the guests, and the canals presented a beautiful appearance as these, decked with multi-colored Japanese lanterns, raced across the calm waters.

Mrs. A. R. Wells sang several songs in the course of the evening. Special cars carried the Los Angeles and Long Beach guests, the one from this city leaving the Pacific Electric station at 7 o'clock, returning at 11.

TEMPERANCE.

NEBRASKA IS BATTLE FIELD

Anti-Liquor Forces Already Are Lining Up.

Victory of "Drys" in Lincoln Encourages Them.

Fight Now on for Statewide Prohibition.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LINCOLN (Neb.) May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The decided majority for no-license of saloons given by Lincoln in the municipal election this week, is taken to mean that Nebraska is to be the next battle ground for State-wide prohibition.

"As goes Lincoln, so goes the State," was the rallying cry of the temperance forces in the local canvass, and it was echoed by towns over the State which a month ago held their elections and aligned themselves on the "dry" side.

Mrs. Lillian N. M. Stevens, president of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union, one of the speakers who took a part in the local campaign, said in one of her addresses that if this city banishes saloons it would certainly indicate that the sentiment of the State was prohibition, and that the allied temperance societies would act accordingly.

Local temperance organizations have already begun a canvass to make the words of Mrs. Stevens good. The time, they declare, is ripe to press their victory, and the prospects are that for the next two years Nebraska will be the rallying place for the prohibition crusade.

The result in Lincoln was surprising only in the size of the majority against the legalized saloon. For ten days before election saloon-keepers themselves admitted the tide was turning against them, but they still saw hope in the fact that the all-daylight saloon had proved a popular innovation, and might again succeed. The result proves a real hardship to the keepers of drinking places, because their profits under the limited hour schedule and high license fee exacted have been cut to a narrow limit.

STORM SWEEPS GULF.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 8.—Meager reports received here tonight say a great hurricane is sweeping over the Yucatan coast. Many vessels, it is said, are lost, and it is probable that loss of life has occurred. In little towns on the coast a number of houses came down by the force of the wind.

DEAD[illegible] RIOT.

DULUTH (Minn.) May 8.—One dead and six injured is the result of a riot at Superior, Wis., tonight, between union and non-union men, when the steamer Berlin tied up at the dock. The Berlin, a non-union boat, arrived with coal to be discharged at the docks. Soon after her arrival a crowd gathered and began throwing coal at the crew. Several of the latter were injured, and some one fired a shot at the crowd and a workman dropped dead.

THE DOCTORS' OPINION.

Conclusion Arrived at After a Consultation Regarding a Woman's Illness.

One of two sisters who lived together was suddenly taken with a lung attack which she feared was serious. She therefore sent for a specialist and asked her own physician to meet him. Talking over his coming with her sister, she said: "Mona, I wish I could know Sir Henry B.'s read opinion. Neither he nor Dr. M—— will tell us if there is anything really wrong, but I would much rather know."

Her sister replied: "Do not worry, dearest; you shall know everything, for I will go down to the dining-room and stand behind the big oak screen and listen to every word they say."

"Very well, dearest."

The hour for the consultation arrived, and the sister went to the dining-room, and standing behind the great oak screen ensconced herself and prepared to listen.

By and by the two doctors were heard descending the stairs, and a moment later they came into the room. Walking over to the fireplace, the specialist sank into an easy chair, and the local doctor sank into another. Then followed a moment's silence, broken by the specialist, who leaned a little forward.

"My dear M——," he said, slowly, as he loked across at his colleague, "of all the ugly women, that's the very ugliest woman I've seen in my life."

"Is she?" replied the local physician. "You wait until you've seen her sister."—[London Telegraph.

USEFULNESS OF APPENDIX.

Is Now Asserted to Be Necessary to Save Its Owners from Degeneracy of Old Age.

[Helen Bourchier, M.D., in London Chronicle:] This year it would appear that the appendix is coming into fashion again. The scientists, with Metchnikoff among them, have discovered the function of the appendix. It is this organ which is charged with the important duty of preserving mankind from the "degeneracy of old age." According to this theory, it would seem to be one of the most useful and valuable organs in the whole of the human body. Without an appendix a man can only look forward to a degenerate old age. So that Nature was only partially in error when she allowed the appendix to remain in the human body. She was right in treating it as a necessary and useful part of the intestine; she has only made the mistake of placing it in an inconvenient and undesirable position. This mistake the scientists now propose to rectify.

Normally this little appendage is placed very deep in the abdominal cavity, protected by the thick muscles of the back and by masses of intestines. The latest scientific suggestion is that it should be brought up to the surface of the abdominal wall—not only to the surface, but through the surface of this wall; that there it should be attached, and that when it had grown to the wall, its end, which is closed like the finger-tip of a glove, should be sliced off so as to form a means of communication between the outside world and the interior of the intestine. The object of this means of communication, as far as I can gather, is that if at any time it should be needed, it would be there ready.

The history of the appendix is a good instance of the worthlessness of the so-called discoveries made by the vivisectors, by means of experiments on living animals in their laboratories. First they discover that the appendix is a useless and dangerous organ and should be removed from the body by an operation. Having done this in a great number of cases (in some of which the operation has proved fatal,) they discover that the real function of the appendix, of which till now they were ignorant, is to preserve man from the degeneration of old age; and that therefore its removal is an incalculable loss.

What do they propose to do, we may ask incidentally, for all those people who have been deprived of their appendix, and are therefore unprotected from the advance of senile degeneration? Will they offer the younger among them the consolation that probably by the time old age approaches, a new set of scientists will have discovered that if there was no such thing in the world as a vermiform appendix, man would be immortal!

We could afford to laugh at all this unscientific science, with its rule of thumb theories, founded on ignorance, if it were not for what lies behind all these contradictory discoveries—the sufferings of our fellow creatures, the animals, in the laboratories, and the sufferings of our human fellow creatures, who are made the victims of these ill-supported theories.

The use of muskrat fur in millinery saved the Mississippi River levee system in Louisiana from serious injury last winter, according to Frank M. Miller, president of the Louisiana State game commission.

"The muskrat had made startling inroads on the embankments," said Mr. Miller, "but when a bounty of twenty cents each was offered for the pest by decorators of women's hats the consequent slaughter almost depleted the family of little animals. One hunter alone in St. Charles parish killed 6000 muskrats in February."—[New York Tribune.

NAVY OFFICER CONVALESCING.

Lieut.-Commander Walker on Road to Recovery.

Says Sunstroke in Guam Was Cause of Collapse.

Superiors Feared He Had Met With Foul Play.

Lieutenant-Commander James E. Walker, U.S.N., recently Acting Governor of Guam, whose failure to reach Washington when he was expected caused President Taft and Navy Department heads much concern, is convalescing at the Pacific Hospital and expects to leave Tuesday for the national capital, in obedience to orders.

It developed yesterday that the officials at Washington feared he had met with foul play.

The commander was very calm last evening and there was little indication of his recent illness, though he complained that he was unable to sleep. The fact that the Chief Executive, Walker's superiors in the navy, and the secret service of the Federal government had taken a hand in the hunt for him, seemed to bother him but little. He was grieved, though, that the story of his detention here had become public.

He also seemed lonesome, and glad of an opportunity to talk, which he did, very entertainingly.

Illness of long standing, followed by a sunstroke in Guam two days before he left the island on March 1, resulted, he said, in total collapse when he reached Los Angeles.

As for the things that happened after his arrival, followed by a meeting with old friends, why, he said, there was nothing to it. The relaxation and the pleasant companionship did not send him to the hospital, he insisted. He was looking for a hospital when he reached here, but first went to Hotel Lankershim, hoping to have the attention of an officer of the Medical Survey. As there is no such officer here, he was obliged finally to call in Dr. J. A. Le Doux, who at once ordered the officer to the hospital.

NOT MAROONED AT VENICE.

There was a little affair of an automobile ride to Venice one evening about a week ago, but Commander Walker declared there was no truth in the report that he had been left at the beach city by his companions.

"We were all back and in bed early that night," he said. "I had been feeling miserable, and the doctor advised I take the air, so we took a spin to Venice and back.

"I have suffered for years with dysentry and was in bad shape before I left Guam. Two days before my departure, while riding a bicycle in the course of an inspection of the government machine shops, I suffered a sunstroke that left me unconscious for several hours. With my wife I left on the transport Sheridan for Manila, a five-day trip. We were delayed in getting away from Manila, there were further delays at Nagasaki, the Midway Islands, where we picked up the wife of the cable superintendent, and again at Honolulu.

"We got into San Francisco April 15 and I immediately reported my arrival to the department at Washington, my wife proceeding East at once, while I remained in San Francisco six days, looking after the unloading and reshipment of my household goods and attending to other business.

NOT AFTER PUBLICITY.

"I came to Los Angeles on business right after that, and my secretary registered for me at the Lankershim. When I noticed that he had placed 'U.S.N.' after my name, I had him erase the letters, as I was here on private matters, and did not wish to be bothered by newspaper reporters and others who frequently call upon a visiting naval officer.

"On the way across the Pacific I was confined to my stateroom, and was attended throughout the trip by two nurses and a surgeon. I was in a frightfully nervous state. When I reached Los Angeles I naturally wanted rest.

"My orders did not call upon me to proceed at once to Washington. They said that I should proceed to my home, which is Charlotte, N. C., thence to Washington.

"I presume there was some uneasiness in the department when I failed to reach Washington within a reasonable time after my arrival at San Francisco, but the delay, as I have said, was due to the fact that I was too ill to continue the journey.

WANTS COMPANY EAST.

"As a matter of fact, my condition now is such that I have requested the department to permit an attaché of the Los Angeles recruiting station to accompany me on my trip East."

Commander Walker, who is about [illegible], and handsome, has been engaged for several years on special duty, which took him all over the world during the eighteen years he has been in the navy. He served, all told, about six years in the Philippines, was in China during the war between Russia and Japan. When President Taft, before his election, made a tour of the world, Commander Walker accompanied him part of the way.

He went to Guam last November on special duty as Acting Governor. His principal duties have been in connection with the building of roads and in general improvements of the island.

It is very unfortunate, he admits, that he should have been stricken with serious illness upon returning to his native shores, after arduous and honorable labors for his country. But Dame Nature plays odd pranks sometimes.

BLAMES CITY OFFICIALS.

Guggenheim Engineer Declares They Are Responsible for Accident in Seattle Armory.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SEATTLE, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Erastus C. Hawkins, chief engineer for the Guggenheim Company in Alaska, has demanded a searching investigation into the cause of an accident at the new State armory on Thursday night in which more than seventy people sustained serious injuries.

Mr. Hawkins's youngest son was badly injured. Hawkins, Sr., demands that the criminal responsibility be placed, and that pending the investigation no salaries be paid the officials of the city building department which he holds responsible for careless inspection of the balcony railing which collapsed.

"I have investigated the railing, and I contend that the plans and specifications were at fault, that the construction was weak and the inspection, if any, flagrantly ineffectual. I shall insist on criminal prosecution of all who were in any way responsible for the catastrophe," said he.

ZELAYA'S SON IN RAGTIME.

Nicaraguan President's Children Earn Living in Five-Cent Theater.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] While his distinguished father, Gen. Zelaya, President of Nicaragua, is keeping things at fever heat down around Salvador and Honduras, Alphonse Zelaya, only son of the South American President, and his beautiful American wife are earning their living in a 5-cent theater in Washington.

Young Zelaya is an expert pianist, and can reel off ragtime and the soulful ballads of the day with equal poise. To the strain of his playing of "Gee, I wish that I had a girl," the programme of moving pictures in a Ninth-street nickel theater is gone through with each night.

As the crowds succeed each other out in front of the brilliantly-lighted cheap show place, Mrs. Zelaya, who was formerly Marguerite Baker of Washington, sells tickets through the window, and everybody who comes up to buy wonders at the beauty of the girl.

ROMANCE.

HEIRESS MAY WED POLICEMAN.

MISS MOROSINO APPEARS MUCH WITH FORMER OFFICER.

Inherited Most of $7,000,000 Estate of Father and Dines and Wines With Arthur N. Werner, Married, But Separated from Wife for Two Years.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Another mystery and perhaps another romance has come to the house of Morosino. The beautiful Miss Giulia Morosino, who inherited most of the $7,000,000 estate of her father, has just reëntered society after a period of mourning.

That fact in itself has proved an attractive subject for gossip, but the thing that has started tongues wagging is her frequent appearance with Arthur N. Werner, a former mounted policeman, who some years ago saved Miss Morosino and her father from harm in a runaway. The banker rewarded Werner by making him manager first of a string of blooded show horses which Miss Giulia maintained and later of the estate.

They appeared together recently at an affair at the Waldorf, at which time there occurred a little incident that went almost unnoticed but which in the light of later events is considered significant. Miss Morosino touched a wine glass to her lips and then passed it to Werner. He drained it after a bow and a smile.

The two are often seen together, riding, driving and motoring. Two automobiles used by the Morosinos are in Werner's name. Werner is married, but separated from his wife six months after he entered Morosino's employ in 1907.

When questioned about the rumors of an impending engagement, Werner merely smiled. Werner is tall, handsome and highly intelligent.

CIVIL TRIAL FOR HASKELL.

Demurrers in Creek Indian Town Lot Suits Overruled by Judge Campbell.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

MUSKOGEE (Okla.) May 8.—Federal Judge Campbell here today overruled the demurrers of the defendants in the so-called Mott Civil Creek Indian land suits brought by the government against Gov. Charles N. Haskell and other prominent Oklahomans.

The decision, involving, as it does, the legality of millions of dollars worth of lots created great consternation here. Not only are Gov. Haskell and associates involved in the charge of fraud, but about 1500 subsequent purchasers of lots are vitally interested. Judge Campbell announced, however, that all innocent purchasers would be protected.

These suits were brought by the United States for the Creek Indian nation to recover for the tribe Muskogee town lots, aggregating 3000 acres of land, and alleged to have been obtained by Gov. Haskell and the other defendants by the fradulent scheduling of "dummies."

Judge Campbell overruled the demurrers of the defendants to the petition of the government and decided the cases on their merits against the defendants on the allegation that they obtained the lots by fraud.

Out of these civil suits grew the criminal prosecution against the Governor, and six others for which they were once indicted. These indictments were quashed at Tulsa recently, but a second grand jury has been called to meet in that city next Monday to reinvestigate the charges.

MYSTERIOUS WOMAN FOUND.

Tells of Arrangement to Marry Man Who Was Beaten With Ax at Sunol.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

OAKLAND, May 8.—The mysterious woman who has been figuring in the attempted murder case of William Winslow near Sunol last Tuesday, is Mrs. Mary Blackburn, who is at present living with her daughter, Mrs. F. Nathan, at No. 1979 McAllister street, San Francisco.

According to the story she told today, she was soon to have married Winslow and she was with him on Monday night, the day before he was brutally beaten with an ax.

Mrs. Blackburn further states that on Monday night, after she and the injured man had completed their plans to be married, he told her that if anything should happen to him that she was to be his heir. At that time he showed her a certificate of deposit for $1600 and a receipt for $250 signed by the Twinginham Brothers in Sunol. These she says Winslow placed in the breast pocket of a black coat which he packed away in a suit case, but which have since been found to be missing. The presumption is that the assailant of the man stole them. At Providence Hospital this afternoon the surgeons said Winslow had but a narrow chance of recovery.

WISE TALKS

BY THE "OFFICE BOY"

I often think a pessimist is a man with too much acid in his system, usually caused by the large supply of lemons that are handed to him.

If it would help along to growl and grumble and complain,
I'd scold from dawn till night;
If fretting ever caused the sun to shine through dismal rain
I'd fret with all my might.
But growling never yet has helped to gladden any day
When all was dark and cold.
And there has never been a time when any man has found That admiration for him came from those who gathered round
To hear him idly scold.

There's no use condemning all the horses in the world just because you were bitten in a horse trade. The only thing a man realizes from most of the schemes he goes into is what a fool he was. If a man is held up with a gun or any other way, he always feels relieved. Still, there's a great relief and more satisfaction when you buy goods to know you are trading with people who do straight store business, where there are no hold-up schemes employed, such as discounts, presents, trading stamps or marking goods up in order to mark them down. When you need a suit, hat, shirt, suit of underwear or anything in men's wear, you want to get full value for your money. You're entitled to it. If you want to be absolutely sure you are getting it, come direct to a Silverwood Store. Every article guaranteed. Every piece of merchandise marked in plain figures. No two prices. YACHT CLUB RACES.

General II Wins Very Close Victory Over Konocti in First Event in Northern Waters.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 8.—The San Francisco Yacht Club formally opened its season today at Sausalito, the event of the occasion being a race for the Pacific Coast championship between the yachts General II and Konocti.

The course was from Sausalito through Raccoon Straits, around Southampton light and back through the straits to the finish line in front of the clubhouse. There was a brisk southeast wind and the race was closely contested all the way, the distance being about fourteen miles.

The General II was the winner, the time being 2:07:09. The Konocti came in only three seconds later.

The afternoon at the club house was devoted to dancing and an informal reception.

TRAVIS IN FIRST.

Has Little Trouble in Defeating His Opponent in Garden City's Annual Tourney.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

GARDEN CITY (L. I.) May 8.—Walter J. Travis completely outclassed his rival, Albert Seckel, today in the final of the first division of the Garden City Golf Club's annual tournament. The former British and American title holder defeated the Princeton student 10 up and 9 to go.

Golfing conditions were ideal. On the morning round Travis was 5 up. In the afternoon he threw away the first hole by an indifferent putt, after Seckel had been bunkered, but the next six holes went to Travis on almost faultless plays. The eighth hole Travis lost by getting into a big trap, but he ended the contest by winning the ninth with 37 strokes to his credit.

HARVARD'S EASY VICTORY.

CAMBRIDGE (Mass.) May 8.—Harvard was overwhelmingly superior to Dartmouth in the annual track meet today, capturing ten events, tieing in two others, and leaving the visitors but one victory. The final score was 92 for Harvard and 25 for Dartmouth.

Flexible Rubber Plates

Have many advantages over the old thick, cumbersome, ordinary rubber plates and even over gold plates, being much lighter and thinner. These plates are flexible, only a trifle thicker than heavy writing paper, fit closer and adhere better to the roof of the mouth. Particles of food and small seeds cannot get under them. They will last longer, are stronger than any others and will not break, they will give first, being flexible. Dr. Schiffman's own process and made only [illegible] us.

I have always heretofore shared with most people the dread of a dentist's chair. But now am sure I shall not dread the ordeal again, for at your office I can truthfully say, "I was not hurt at all." Even the bridgework which I had dreaded was painless and most satisfactory.

POLITICAL.

EDMONDS FOR SENATORSHIP.

Wisconsin Politician Has Aspirations.

Favored by Stephenson, Whom He Aided.

Gov. Davidson Expected to Be in Race.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

MADISON (Wis.) May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] E. A. Edmonds, Republican State Central Committee chairman, for United States Senator.

Such is the latest development in the kaleidoscopic political game being played in Wisconsin, and partly is the result of the investigation into the nomination and election of Senator Stephenson, prompted by several dissatisfied Republicans, spurred on by a newspaper unfriendly to Mr. Stephenson, and urged on by the Democratic members in the Legislature.

For some time past it was known that Mr. Edmonds was nurturing a Senatorial bee, but with all kinds of insinuations made against his conduct of the recent campaign in Wisconsin it was not thought probable that he would enter the field, particularly against Robert M. La Follette.

Then again it was felt that among administration followers Gov. Davidson would be given the pole in the race. It is now said that Senator Stephenson considers the Governor a dead duck, politically, because of the revelations of the so-called "Governor's fund" contributed by the game wardens of the State, though it was testified under oath by the wardens that the Governor knew nothing of their activity in his behalf, and that he had given strict orders that the department was to stay out of politics under the civil-service law regulations. Senator Stephenson's choice is now said to be Mr. Edmonds, who has piloted his fortunes through the most expensive campaign ever made in Wisconsin.

How the friends of Gov. Davidson will take to this new alignment is not yet known. That the Governor will not be shelved so quickly is quite well understood. That he has a strong following cannot be denied since three years ago in a personal fight with Senator La Follette he defeated "Little Bob's" choice for the gubernatorial nomination and carried the State by relatively as large a majority as was ever cast for La Follette under like conditions.

TRIPPETT DROPS ONE.

OAKLAND, May 8.—Oakland won one of the most hotly contested games from San José today that was ever played on the local grounds, and not until the thirteenth inning was the tie decided, when the home team scored two runs on a hit and an error. Trippett was wild at times and walked nine men. Bloomfield struck out eight. Score:

San José, 3; hits, 4; errors, 7.
Oakland, 4; hits, 8; errors, 2.
Batteries—Trippett and K. Smith; Bloomfield and Le Brand.

Government Work Expensive.

The greatest single piece of work which can be given to a navy yard is the building of a battleship. It has been learned from hard experience that these ships cost from 25 to 60 per cent. more when built by the government than they do when built by contract in private yards. That is, there is a loss to the government of from $500,000 to $1,500,000 on every one that it builds. This is perfectly well known to the naval committees of Congress.—[McClure's.

BILL OF SALE FOR BABY.

Destitute Mother Disposes of Child by Strange Means, But It Is Returned.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SEATTLE, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "For valuable consideration," not mentioned in the regularly drawn bill of sale which was duly attested before a notary in this city, Mrs. Ed Gallagher, of destitute means, sold her infant daughter to Mrs. Waltrip, wife of a patrolman. Later, the baby developing illness, Mrs. Waltrip returned it to Mrs. J. Harris, proprietor of a lying-in home, where it was born.

Mrs. Harris offered it to the mother, the mother declined to take it back and the infant, now eighteen days old, is in the City Emergency Hospital. The curious document is in the possession of the police matron.

Investigation revealed the fact that the curious bill of sale was the second of its kind acknowledged before the same notary. L. Roy Mansfield, the notary, says that he advised the parties to the transaction that it was illegal and would not stand as an adoption and that the parties taking the child under such conditions could not claim it legally. Dr. F. Falk, who attended the case, said that he knew the adoption was illegal. All say that no actual money was passed in the transaction.

Investigation of the records show that the birth of the child was not certified to the city health department. The matter has been reported to the State health department. Meantime, the infant, unclaimed, sleeps in the City Emergency Hospital and the mother cannot be found.

FOR CHINESE RAILROAD.

BERLIN, May 8.—According to news received from Peking, negotiations will begin in a few days for a settlement of the controversy regarding the Hankow-Canton railroad loan. The plan contemplates increasing the German bank loan to $27,500,000, and the inclusion of another railroad line from Hankow to Cheng Tu. English, French and German interest will all be provided for.

BORN IN THREE STATES.

Peculiar Family Relationship R of Changing the State Boundaries.

[St. Paul Dispatch:] Montana is b lieved to possess three brothers w a history more remarkable than h heretofore been known. The story vouched for by Col. Thomas C. M shall of Missoula, National Republic Committeeman for Montana.

"I believe," said Col. Marshall, "th the history of the brothers stands u precedented in the annals of America history. That they should be born i the same house, and at the same tim each born in a different State, see incredulous, and all the more so wh it is stated that the house stands o its original site.

"These brothers are named Wright and are now residents of Missou county, Montana. When the elder o these brothers was born that partic lar section of the county was in Ore gon, as a portion of the Louisiana Pu chase.

"Several years later a second bo was born to the Wright family, b in the meantime Idaho had been se regated from the original territory, an therefore he was a native of Idaho and his elder brother was an Oregon ian.

"Again, a son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Wright, but he was neither a Oregonian nor Idahoan, but a Mon tanan, the Treasure State having been sliced from Idaho in the meantime Thus three brothers were born in the same house and each in a different State.

"They are getting along in years, but the house still stands and is still oc cupied by the Wright family."

NEWS REPORTS FROM CORRESPONDENTS OF THE TIMES.

PASADENA.

RETURN FROM PEACE PALAVER.

CITY'S REPRESENTATIVES AT CHICAGO REACH HOME.

Little Girl Severely Cut by Accidental Falling of Butcher Knife. Real Estate Deals Involving Many Thousands of Dollars Put Through. Odd Row Over Chicken.

Office of The Times, No. 26 S. Raymond Ave

PASADENA, May 8.—Dr. and Mrs. Robert J. Burdette returned yesterday afternoon from their visit in the East, where they represented Pasadena at the annual peace congress at Chicago.

Dr. Burdette will preach at the Temple Baptist Church this morning on "Echoes of the Peace Congress," which will include a resumé of his observations. At the evening service the subject will be, "What's the News?" which will be a resumé of an address delivered by him before the American newspaper publishers in New York.

During their stay in New York, Dr. and Mrs. Burdette were entertained at dinner by Melville E. Stone, manager of the Associated Press, whose wife and daughter are now staying at the Maryland.

In Chicago, Dr. Burdette visited his father, Frederick Edwin Burdette, who is residing there with a married daughter. Dr. Burdette yesterday spoke very tenderly of this meeting. His father is 89 years old; is blind, deaf and bedridden, "but," says Dr. Burdette, "he is the happiest, brightest, dearest, sweetest old man in the world.

"My father has always been a staunch Republican, and was a Whig up to the time the Republican party was organized. He is a Virginian by birth. He has the same enthusiasm for politics now that he had when he voted for the first Harrison."

PAYS FORTY THOUSAND.

Egbert Gates, formerly of New York, has purchased the G. M. Baker home on Buena Vista street for $40,000. The property comprises a little more than six acres and extends from Fairview to Fremont.

SWEDES TO HAVE CHURCH.

There are in this city 300 Swedish people, many of whom can speak only their own language. The endeavor to provide a church for this colony has been aided by the donation of $500 by the First Methodist Church. A lot was secured, some time ago, at Villa street and Summit avenue and as soon as the building fund is large enough a $4000 edifice will be built. The pastor is Rev. J. O. Wahlburg of No. 344 North Hudson avenue.

CHILD SEVERELY CUT.

Evelyn Smith, the 5-year-old daughter of Dr. W. G. Smith of No. 597 Live Oak avenue, was taken to the Pasadena Hospital, yesterday morning, where a number of stitches were required to close a long gash in her left hand, inflicted by a butcher knife, which fell and hit her.

REALTY TRANSACTIONS.

David Blankenhorn reports the sale of the McPherran home, on the southwest corner of Pasadena avenue and California street, to Mrs. Caroline Walkley of No. 1810 North Fair Oaks avenue, for $24,000.

H. I. Stuart, president of the Union National Bank, has purchased from the Campbell-Johnstons a two-acre tract, just west of the Huntington Terrace bridge and on the north side of the boulevard to the Annandale Country Club, for $10,000. He will build a $10,000 residence.

REV. MR. WEIGEL RESIGNS.

Rev. C. F. Weigel, who, two years ago, gave up evangelistic work in the East to take the pastorate of the First Friends' Church, today announced his resignation, to become effective in June. On July 1, he will leave for the East to begin a series of meetings extending from Lincoln, Neb., through the Middle West to the New England States.

POLICE SIGNALS PLANNED.

Chief of Police Favour is planning with Manager Koiner of the municipal electric system for electric signals on the poles throughout the city. When a policeman is wanted, a red light will appear on each of the poles on his beat.

Under the auspices of the Pasadena Humane Society, an animal hospital is to be established here. Sites in the southern portion of the city are under consideration.

ROW OVER CHICKEN.

Because Adam Gloeckner of South Orange Grove avenue, South Pasadena, is alleged to have pointed a rifle at William Werner, an employé of the Central Plumbing Company, to enforce the demand for the return of a chicken he was arrested yesterday and is held under bonds. Werner declared in the complaint that he had captured the chicken in his garden, where it was playing havoc with his vegetables.

PASADENA BREVITIES.

Patrolman Reese yesterday afternoon arrested ten-year-old Maynard Stevens at the Madison school for carrying a 22-caliber revolver, and frightening pupils and teachers. He was given a scolding by Capt. Pierce.

Jack Putnam of No. 531 Crocker street, Los Angeles, was put under $500 bonds yesterday morning by Justice Klamroth on the charge of petty larceny. It is alleged that he is implicated in the theft of some blankets from C. W. Austin.

Pasadena Medical Society will meet Tuesday evening in Dr. Mattison's office. There will be a symposium on infant feeding.

Austin's bakery and the Model grocery teams will play baseball today on the Raymond diamond.

Mrs. Jean F. Loba will address the vesper service of the Young Woman's Christian Association at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

RAID NEAR COVINA.

COVINA, May 8.—There is consternation in the Jap camp at Irwindale, today, over a raid made, last evening, by Constables Fairly and McInturff on a "wet goods joint" run by T. Oshire. Six cases of beer were confiscated, and the owner pleaded guilty, this morning, before Justice Werner to having sold liquor without a license. He paid a $10 fine.

CAUGHT WITH LASSO.

DEER AT CLAREMONT SWIMS IN RESERVOIR.

CLAREMONT, May 8.—A two-year-old deer was captured last evening about half a mile from the city limits.

Two two Lorbeer brothers were riding along the Foothill boulevard when they noticed what they supposed was a calf swimming in the reservoir of the Seth Richard's ranch, but on closer examination, it proved to be a deer.

With the assistance of John A. Larimer, the foreman of the ranch, they made an effort to secure the buck with a rope, but the animal kept near the middle of the reservoir. After many unsuccessful attempts, it was lassoed and hauled out on land, although it resisted desperately.

Today the captive was presented to the city of Pomona, and placed in a corral purposely built for it in Ganesha Park.

How the deer happened to come so far from the mountains is a question for sportsmen, but it is believed that mountains lions, which have been very numerous at Brown's Flats for some time, chased it from its accustomed haunts.

Not for thirty years has a deer been seen below the mountain ranges, and the one now in Ganesha Park will be viewed by many tomorrow.

VETERANS INCONVENIENCED.

With Removal of Old Southern Pacific Building, Telegraph and Express Offices Are Closed.

SOLDIERS' HOME, May 8.—The office and waiting-room building of the Southern Pacific, which has not been used since that company transferred its line to the Los Angeles-Pacific company, has been moved to a site at the home terminus of the latter company, near the new hotel. When the transfer was made the station agent and Wells-Fargo company and the Western Union company's agencies were at once abandoned. The deprivation of these facilities have proved very inconvenient to the home.

The Los Angeles Pacific company has agreed to have a station agent, and promises that, as soon as possible, Wells-Fargo, and Western Union representatives will be secured.

The station building recently erected at the junction of Brown boulevard and Nevada avenue, has been removed to a point a quarter of a mile farther north, on Sunset boulevard, where it will serve as a waiting station for both Soldiers' Home and Westgate.

George Brewer, late Co. B, Third Minnesota Infantry, has been appointed sergeant of the home guard, vice Stocking, resigned.

The Women's Relief Corps of Uncle Sam Post, G.A.R., came from Los Angeles, Thursday, with packages of "home cooking," which they shared with members of the post in the shade of Curtain's Park, on Pepper avenue.

Rev. J. L. Bruce of Ocean Park Methodist Episcopal Church told veterans of the drink evil at the Friday afternoon meeting of the W.C.T.U.

RECENT DEATHS.

John Sailliard, late Co. G, Fourteenth Missouri Light Artillery, a native of France, admitted from Los Angeles in 1908; died May 5, aged 73.

Lewis P. Clark, late Co. K, Sixteenth United States Infantry (Mexican War,) a native of New York, admitted in 1901 from Santa Monica; died May 6, aged 83.

Henry Young, late Co. K, First Michigan Infantry, a native of Pennsylvania, admitted in February, 1909, from Santa Monica; died May 7, aged 73. The remains were taken to Los Angeles for burial.

SELLS GAS BONDS.

Board of City Trustees of Sierra Madre Awards Contract to Only Bidder.

SIERRA MADRE, May 8.—Because only one bid was offered on the $30,000 gas bond issue it took two meetings of the Board of City Trustees to award the contract to C. S. Forney, a bond broker and builder of gas plants. The bonds were sold at par, but the matter will be held in abeyance until counsel for the buyer passes upon the legality of the issue.

The laying of the corner-stone of the Woman's Club House will take place on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Mrs. George H. Latteau, chairman of the building committee, and the next president of the club, will preside. Rev. Father Barth, Mayor Jones, President Keys of the Board of Trade, Mrs. J. A. Osgood, the first president of the organization, and Mrs. Charles E. Bentham, the present presiding officer, will deliver addresses. Rev. James M. Campbell and Rev. C. E. Bentham will also officiate. One of the features will be a song written by Mrs. C. H. Baker. J. A. Gilbert, the contractor, says that the building will be completed in the specified time.

The returns of the school census show a total of 199 school children for this district, and 71 under the age of 5 years. Of that number 168 are attendants at the school here, 11 attend private schools, and the remaining 20 are non-attendants. Only six claim foreign birth.

The extreme eastern end of Central boulevard across the San Gabriel wash has been repaired by Street Superintendent Lehmer and his gang, and now teams may cross this place en route to Arcadia and Monrovia. The recent rains and heavy flow of water from the cañons had made this place a dangerous crossing in the past.

BUYS BRICK BLOCK.

Pomona Loan Association Has New Home—Prominent Women Work for Mothers' Fund.

POMONA, May 8.—The Home Builders' and Loan Association has purchased from Charles F. Weigle the two-story brick block, on a lot 30x65 feet, and opposite the postoffice for $12,000, and will move its offices into the structure, which is at present occupied by the Western Union Telegraph Company, the Board of Trade and J. O. Enell and F. W. Woods, realty dealers, on the first floor. The second story is rented for apartments. There is a brisk demand for well-located business property here.

Numerous prominent women have been working diligently here today for the success of the mothers' fund. They sold white carnations and food and a considerable sum was realized.

Elmer E. Armour and wife and Postmaster Avis will leave tomorrow for San Francisco, to attend the Odd Fellows and Rebekah conventions, and will then visit the Yosemite Valley.

Miss Clare, Merch, an actress, came here from Los Angeles, today, with a friend for a dip in the surf. As they were walking on the street two men brushed by Miss Mersch so rudely that her hat was tipped on one side. A few moments later she discovered that she had been robbed of an elk's tooth hat pin set with two diamonds and valued at $75. The police were notified.

CASHIER LOSES KEYS.

While helping the Chamber of Commerce team win a game of baseball, yesterday, W. H. Wallace, cashier of the Exchange Bank, had his trousers pocket picked of a bunch of keys, some of which fit vaults and drawers in the bank.

Long Beach will celebrate "Mothers' Day," tomorrow. In the morning, special sermons will be delivered in all the churches and white carnations will be distributed. In the afternoon, mothers will meet at the Y.W.C.A. rooms and headed by the municipal band and a squad of police will march to the auditorium, where a mass meeting will be held.

BRIGHT TOASTS AT REDONDO.

Woman's Club Enjoys First Annual Banquet—Bears and Poppies Used as Decorations.

REDONDO BEACH, May 8.—The first annual dinner of the Woman's Club was held this evening at the Hepburn and Terry café. The table was decorated with flowers and emblems characteristic of California, chosen by the committee, Mrs. C. C. Mangold, Mrs. Vincent H. Burnham and Miss Jennie Cox, because the club has been studying the history of California for the past six months. Reproductions of the first bear flag were crossed in the center of the table, and at either end were California bears in masses in yellow poppies. The bear flag was also reproduced on the menu cards.

Mrs. C. C. Mangold gracefully presided as toastmistress. Mrs. W. A. Galentine, the president, responded to the toast, "Woman and the club;" Mrs. V. H. Burnham, the vice-president, gave an original poem on "The Studies of the Club," and Mrs. C. A. Hibbard recited a cleverly original poem entitled "A Prophecy." A silent toast to the absent members closed the programme.

Among those present were Mmes. W. A. Anderson, E. L. Chrisman, J. A. Weeks, Dwight F. Towne, Harrington Hyde, W. M. Browning, William Munsell, S. D. Barkley and Misses Jennie Cox, Victoria Chrisman and Mary Story.

SCHOOL CENSUS COMPLETED.

Half the Householders in Monrovia Have Children—Missionary Visits Parents—Bank Change.

MONROVIA, May 8.—The city school census was completed yesterday. Minors between 5 and 17 years of age number 705, consisting of 338 boys and 367 girls, an increase over 1908 of 8.12 per cent. Public school pupils number 593; private schools, 24; non-attendants, 88. Of these latter the majority have but recently arrived at school age and will enter the primaries in the fall. The total of all children under 17 years of age is 972, representing 590 families. A comparison of census statistics and municipal records shows that approximately half the families in the city have children. The books of the water department show that there are over 1200 dwellings in this city.

Dr. and Mrs. W. A. Loops are guests of the former's parents on North Myrtle avenue after three years' residence in India, where Dr. Loops was a member of the Baptist Medical Missionary Board. Before departing from Yokohama they were guests of Rev. and Mrs. Clark H. Marsh, formerly of this city.

C. H. Ainley was elected today president of the American National Bank and The Granite Bank and Trust Co. of Monrovia to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. W. B. Scarborough. W. C. Patterson of Los Angeles was elected vice-president. The retiring president was presented with a handsome gift in appreciation of his able services in the interest of the banks. Mr. Ainley is a well-known citizen of Monrovia and is especially fitted for the office which he has assumed as president of the banks, having had many years experience in financial institutions and is a man of considerable means. He was for fifteen years actively engaged in the insurance business, selling out the controlling interest in one of the largest insurance companies in the State of Iowa, of which he was president, prior to coming to Monrovia. He was also a director in the People's Savings Bank of Des Moines, Iowa, and is thoroughly familiar with banking matters, and his association with these institutions in Monrovia will be of special value not only to the banks, but to the business community as a whole.

An increase of $25,000 in the capital stock of the American National Bank, to become effective July 1st next, has been doubly subscribed at a premium of $15 per share. The last statement to the Comptroller showed a large increase of deposits over a year ago.

CLEMENTE FISH ELUSIVE.

Party Which Goes Out from Catalina Returns Reporting Rather Poor Luck.

AVALON, May 8.—A fortnight spent on a trip to San Clemente has been unproductive so far as fishing was concerned, and today Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Levi and party of New York, who chartered the launches Cornell and Pilgrim, returned to Avalon almost void of thrilling experiences. The largest catch made in the course of the outing was a shovel-nosed shark weighing sixty pounds. Ultimately, the enthusiasts turned their attention to objects of interest on the island. Besides host and hostess in the party were Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Albertson of Kokomo, Ind., Mr. and Mrs. A. Griffin of New York City, J. Griffin and W. G. Allen.

DENT IN SKULL SOLVES PUZZLE.

LONG MISSING SANTA ANA MAN AT LAST LOCATED.

Suddenly Loses Consciousness at Horse Traders' Camp in November. With Clouded Mind, Gets Employment on Ranch at Placentia—Nineteen Marriage Licenses Issued.

SANTA ANA, May 8.—Friends of R. A. Sporn, who, since November 17, have been trying to solve the mystery of his disappearance, have at last succeeded in locating him. Going about his work mechanically day by day, his mind clouded as to past events, he has been employed on one of C. C. Chapman's ranches at Placentia. A dent in his skull is the cause of his disappearance and the reason for his semi-loss of memory.

Sporn was preparing to go into the produce business here when he dropped out of sight. He says he went to a horse traders' camp to get an animal and while there, he suddenly lost consciousness. When he began to recognize objects about him he was near Riverside. Strangers took him in and cared for him. His watch and $60 had been stolen. A few weeks ago, he got a job at Placentia. Then he remembered that he had a trunk here in the care of G. B. Salkeld, and wrote for it. Salkeld sent a registered letter to the address given. Sporn, in his forgetfulness, failed to call for it. Yesterday, he telephoned to Salkeld, who was overjoyed at hearing his friend's voice.

The Supervisors object to the monthly bills presented by the Oceanside justice and constable for the arrest of hobos. They think the tramps would leave town without arrest if warned by the constable. Some years ago, before a limit was placed on such fees, the county sometimes paid Oceanside officials as high as $1400 a month for arresting hobos and turning them loose again. The bills now reach the maximum nearly every month.

Intervention of neighbors saved her from the flames which she had kindled.

FORENSIC TRIUMPH.

LIBERAL ARTS MAN WINNER.

INTERCOLLEGIATE ORATORICAL CONTEST INTERESTING.

U.S.C. Senior Excels in Composition and Delivery—Pomona's Representative Given Second Place and Whittier Student, Third — Small Audience.

Leslie F. Gay, Jr., a senior in the College of Liberal Arts of the University of Southern California, won the eighteenth annual intercollegiate oratorical contest, held under the auspices of the Southern California Intercollegiate Oratorical Association at the university auditorium, last night. R. A. McConnell of Pomona College was awarded second place.

The subject of the winning oration was "National Stability," and the speaker voiced as the keynote of his appeal the immediate need of capable, efficient, reliable and honorable citizens if national permanency is to be assured.

"America has no guarantee of the permanency of government," said the orator, "and the secret of national life lies not in the material prosperity of the cities but still deeper, in the character of the citizens. The call is for men of patriotic consecration who will sacrifice all in the recognition of the nobility of service."

In "The Present Crisis," Pomona's representative urged international peace as a balm for the present complications in world relations. He made a strong plea for the abolition of navies, saying: "We cannot fight the battles of the future warless years with the weapons of the peaceless past."

McConnell tied Gay in points on composition, but his delivery was not as excellent.

H. F. Pelligrin spoke for Occidental on "The Cry of the Children," showing why child labor does not pay. He argued for national care of the working children and giving them opportunities to study. He received third place at the hands of the judges.

The final oration was delivered by L. M. Graves of Whittier College, whose subject was, "The Evolution of Fellowship." There was only a small audience and the speakers were handicapped by the echoes. The University of Southern California has won eleven of the eighteen contests held.

"DRS. SHORES CURED ME OF A BAD CASE OF CATARRH (12) TWELVE YEARS AGO. WELL EVER SINCE."

Mrs. Ellen Smith, 2216 Cove ave., Edendale, Los Angeles, says: "Drs. Shores & Shores cured me of a bad case of catarrh of the head and throat twelve (12) years ago, and I have had no return of the trouble since then. W. J. McFARLAND, 304 E. 13TH ST., LOS ANGELES. READ THE REMARKABLE TESTIMONY OF MR. McFARLAND. HE SAYS: "FOR THIRTEEN (13) WEEKS before beginning Drs. Shores & Shores' treatment, one month ago, I had no use of my voice. I COULD NOT MAKE A SOUND. I HAD LOST MY VOICE ENTIRELY. I consulted noted doctors in the city and treated my throat, but to no avail. I also had lots of trouble with my HEART. It would palpitate. I was weak and run down in every way. This was my condition when I began Drs. Shores' treatment one month ago. THEY HELPED ME IN TWO WEEKS, AND IN A MONTH MY VOICE WAS COMPLETELY RESTORED, and I feel better in every way, thanks to Drs. BREVITIES.

To "Liner" Advertisers: Dating from June 1st, classified advertising in the Times will be charged by the word at the present established rate of 1c per word in the daily issue and 1¼c Sunday. Close calculations covering a period of several months develop the fact that the average number of words to the line are a fraction over seven. This basis for charge, therefore, will prevail after June 1st. Cash "want" advertising has always been calculated by the word, and this regulation will not change the manner of handling it. The present "want" ad rate has been in effect, for many years, though the circulation of the paper, now more than 50,000 daily and 80,000 Sundays, has trebled during this period. No paper in the United States, rate considered, compares with The Times in "want" ad service. The Times-Mirror Company.

Remember the slogan: "Buy and Boost Home Products." For daily references, see page 11, part II, of The Times, containing list of wide-awake manufacturers, under the heading "Made in Southern California." There are none better. Buy and Boost, and keep your money at home where it will do you and yours the most good!

BITTER.

LOVE-MAD, SHE TAKES ACID.

DESPERATE WOMAN ATTEMPTS TO END HER LIFE.

Her Affections Spurned by Man With Whom She Is Infatuated She Reaches for Bottle of Poison and Swallows Some Before He Can Stop Her.

Fighting desperately to end her life by swallowing carbolic acid, Mrs. Lucretia G. Robinson, a dressmaker residing at No. 1210 South Figueroa street, was foiled in the attempt by J. L. Burton, the man who spurned her love, and with whom she had been having a stormy interview.

Burton, who is but 21 years of age, is a son of James T. Burton, a real estate man who is interested in the Chiapas Land and Stock Company. The young man had been paying some attentions to the woman, who is much older than he, and the infatuation, on her side, became desperate love.

At about 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Robinson sent for Burton. He called at her room. What was said between them, nobody knows—the young man was too agitated yesterday evening to give a coherent statement. The upshot of the discussion, however, was that he refused to consider the love affair seriously enough to think of marriage, and Mrs. Robinson became frantic.

Feverishly piling on a small table in the center of the room the various trinkets and knicknacks the young man had given to her, she hysterically upbraided and pleaded with him, but he continued indifferent.

"Take them all back; I don't want anything from you," she cried tragically, and before Burton could stop her, Mrs. Robinson had snatched up from the dresser a bottle of carbolic acid, and lifted it to her lips with a wild sweep.

Burton was on the hysterical woman like a flash, struggling to wrest the vial of poison from her, but she had already swallowed more than a tablespoonful of the burning liquid, and lay fainting in his arms.

Placing the insensible form on the floor, Burton rushed from the house and called a doctor, who applied the proper antidotes, while the police were summoned.

Mrs. Robinson was conveyed to the Good Samaritan Hospital for further treatment, and late yesterday was reported to be resting easily and on the way to recovery.

Mr. Burton, the father of the young man, said last night that he understood that his son had been paying some attentions to Mrs. Robinson, but that he had not given the subject much thought, as the boy was only 21 years old, while Mrs. Burton was several years older—how many, he would not say. Young Burton was not at home.

ROB WATTS JAP.

Highwaymen Compel Him to Part With His Shoes in Which He Has More Than $500.

K. Murakami has learned with sorrow that in this land of the white man one may not trust even his boots. Also, he has paid $517 to learn the lesson.

Murakami owns a restaurant at Watts. He has been sticking to business, and business has prospered. Murakami felt that he could afford a little pleasure. He came to Los Angeles for a really good time down on the east side, where the descendants of the mighty Samurai are many.

At the corner of Seaton and East Fifth streets, Murakami was rudely accosted by three masked men. They stuck pistols under his nose and commanded him to throw up his hands. Murakami's face was blank. He felt secure in the possession of his treasure, relying upon his oriental craftiness to outwit the robbers. But the highwaymen apparently knew the ways of the Japs. After going through their victim's pockets, they forced him to sit on the curbstone and pull off his shoes. Murakami's serenity was all gone. He suffered considerably from his feet, he told the robbers, but robbers are notably unsympathetic. The Japs shoes came off with a yank while he dodged a pistol butt.

Snug in the lining of one of the shoes was the money, $517 in crisp banknotes. And Murakami was kicked and started down the street in his stocking feet, the thieves keeping his shoes. He reported the case to the police, but could give but a meager description of the bandits.

TONG LONG ON QUARTERS.

Chinese Arrested on Lottery Charge Deposits Bail in Form of Two-Bit Pieces.

Arrested last night on a charge of conducting a lottery, Woo Tong, a Chinese, sought revenge on the police by making Desk Sergt. White count $100 in quarters.

Woo Tong was in his shop last night serenely consulting the green tickets that told of his day's profits, when Patrolmen Hartnagel and Level entered the place. Woo, as soon as the officers crossed the threshold, clutched the green tickets in his hand and assumed an air of the most sublime indifference. He could not "savvy" a word of English and force was necessary to make him understand that he was to open his tightly-clutched fist.

He was overcome with a sudden illness when asked to open his locker, and coolly sought his couch. Hartnagel procured a hatchet and forced the locker open, uncovering a dozen lottery tickets. At headquarters Woo was told that he could go if he deposited $100 as a cash bail. "Sure," he said suavely as he fished from the ample folds of his blouse a sack, from which he dumped the exact amount—all in quarters.

PRINCESS IS HEIRESS.

PARIS, May 8.—Princess Robert de Broglie, who, three days ago, was granted a divorce in Paris, has sent the following telegram from Genoa to a friend here: "I have just received news of my father's death in Chicago. As the heiress to a fortune I am happy to scorn the miserable pittance offered me through the Paris courts by the De Broglie family. I am leaving shortly for America with my baby."

Princess De Broglie was formerly Miss Estelle Alexander of San Francisco.

WITH SUPERFLUOUS HAIR ON THE FACE, ARMS, HANDS, NECK, EYEBROWS AND BUST.
We make a specialty of removing superfluous hair, moles, warts, birth marks and guarantee our work absolutely.
REMEMBER—We use the latest scientific FIVE NEEDLE method so extensively used in the East, and remove 250 to 300 hairs per hour, while no operator using only one needle can remove over 60 per hour and do good work. We have tried it for years.
REMEMBER—We guarantee to kill every hair we treat, and should any return we will gladly remove them FREE OF CHARGE and thank you for the privilege of doing so. Try it; it's your only hope.
REMEMBER—The same number of hairs we remove, costing you $10, would cost you $35 elsewhere. One treatment will convince you how quickly we do it. NO PAIN, NO SCARS—this we guarantee.
REMEMBER—Your face is getting worse daily. Pulling, cutting and depilatories only increase the growth. A talk with us will do no harm. Consultation free.

THE NATIONAL ELECTRIC AND MAGNETIC Company owns many generic patents upon inventions of Mr. Fred Harvey Brown, the well-known scientist. Among these are his wireless telephone, covering an immense field in commerce, amusements and therapeutics. This is practical, commercially profitable, "fool-proof," inexpensive and will be soon popular in presence and approximate amount of gold, silver, copper, etc., in the rock, or the absence of these minerals. Also an electrical "water-finder" which has been proven accurate in government surveys. These and several other very valuable patents are property of above company, which purposes exploiting and manufacturing the inventions and devices here, and offers a small amount of stock at 20c per share. Actual investors will be given practical demonstration of each patent held. Curiosity-seekers will later be accommodated. At present we need the money. Address for appointment, G, box 107, TIMES OFFICE. 9

TO "LINER" ADVERTISERS:
Dating from June 1, classified advertising in The Times will be charged by the word at the present established rate of 1c per word in the daily issue and 1¼c Sunday.
Close calculations, covering a period of several months, develop the fact that the average number of words to the line are a fraction over seven. This basis for charge, therefore, will prevail after June 1.
Cash "want" advertising has always been calculated by the word, and this regulation will not change the manner of handling it.
The present "want" ad. rate has been in effect for many years, though the circulation of the paper, now more than 50,000 daily and 80,000 Sundays, has trebled during this period. No paper in the United States, rate considered, compares with The Times in "want" ad. service.

PROF. W. E. KING, Los Angeles' celebrated psychic, is permanently located here. His honesty, test of time and 23 years' continuous practice as a psychic have proved beyond all doubt that PROF. W. E. KING is the leader of his profession.

LIVE AND LET LIVE.
Never before in the history of occult science has a man of PROF. W. E. KING'S professional standing consented to place his services at the disposal of the public for such a nominal consideration. Realizing that this city has been overrun with pretenders and that many of its citizens are anxious to visit a genuine psychic PROF. W. E. KING has decided to place his consultation fee within the reach of all.

EXTRAORDINARY PSYCHIC POWER, combined with his superior knowledge of occult force, enables him to read human life with unerring accuracy from infancy to old age; his powers are wonderful and indisputable; his advice is reliable, his information clear, concise and to the point; will tell you every hope, fear, ambition, better than you could tell it yourself.

"Arise! Throw off thy shackles!" Exchange sorrow for joy, darkness for light. "Be master of your own destiny."

SUCCESS AND HAPPINESS, pointed out to all. The grand results obtained by those who have consulted W. E. King is positive proof of his superior power to reveal the mysteries of the future. When truth is revealed, as it always is when they consult the peer of all life readers, the universal expression is, I am satisfied and happy since I consulted W. E. King.

Call and he will guide you with certainty higher than human power; tells you the truth, good or bad.

FROM LILLIAN RUSSELL, THE WELL-KNOWN ACTRESS.
I was greatly impressed with PROF. W. E. KING'S reading. His powers are truly marvelous. He develops in one a force that enables them to attract people, to interest them, and to please them to their good and to your advantage without the least effort on one's part. His advice and assistance have been of great benefit to me.

FROM A PROMINENT MINISTER.
I desire to bear evidence to the genuineness of PROF. W. E. KING'S work. God gives to us an intuition whereby we may guide our lives. That PROF. W. E. KING possesses this guiding power to a marvelous degree is evident. The fact that his clients are his warmest and truest friends is alone a tribute to his sincerity and honest methods in dealing with all. He has rendered me immeasurable assistance. Rev. W. C. Jessup.

FROM M. ROTHSCHILD, THE WELL-KNOWN FINANCIER.
For the past five years PROF. W. E. KING'S advice and assistance has been of great benefit to me. I have tested nearly every psychic in this country, and find PROF. W. E. KING'S advice reliable and far superior to any that I have ever met.

To Whom It May Concern: We take great pleasure in recommending our brother, PROF. W. E. KING, as a psychic of good standing, having to our knowledge been fully developed in all the various phases of mental psychicship. We cordially recommend him to any individual or society that may need his services.

MRS. MASSON, the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at 322 S. SPRING ST. (over Owl Drug Store,) by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND-READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.
The earnest student and thinker will soon learn in his investigations along psychological lines, that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HIMSELF HAS WRITTEN THAT INFORMATION.
PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in every-day life.
Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health and domestic life, financial conditions, success and prosperity, can all be told you through scientific palmistry, WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.
MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

PERSONAL—TO "LINER" ADVERTISERS.
Dating from June 1, classified advertising in The Times will be charged by the word at the present established rate of 1c per word in the daily issue and 1¼c Sunday.
Close calculations, covering a period of several months, develop the fact that the average number of words to the line are a fraction over seven. This basis for charge, therefore, will prevail after June 1.
Cash "want" advertising has always been calculated by the word, and this regulation will not change the manner of handling it.
The present "want" ad. rate has been in effect for many years, though the circulation of the paper, now more than 50,000 daily and 80,000 Sundays, has trebled during this period. No paper in the United States, rate considered, compares with The Times in "want" ad. service.

There is a good reason for it, too.

We do not blame you for moving every month.

The wonder is that you can stand it that long.

DARWIN'S SECOND.

RETIREMENT OF BATTLER.

Famous Fighting Scientist Is Out of His Chair.

Jena University Will Miss Prof. Haeckel.

To Begin Writing Gigantic Work on Biology.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

JENA, April 20.—There has just resigned from his professionship at the University of Jena, possibly the greatest living man of science. Ernst Haeckel, expounder of the monistic theory, and long the most militant and powerful disciple of Charles Darwin, retires to semi-private life, but those who know him well are sure that his pen will still be busy and that he will lay about him with the same vigor that has always characterized his controversial style. For Haeckel is one of those fighting Germans who live and thrive on battle and to whom heated controversy is [illegible].

Although Prof. Haeckel recently celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday, he is a man so full of irrepressible energy that he can only lay down his work with life itself. Like great actors, he has more than once threatened to "leave the stage," but only to return again and again for a last performance. In 1899, in the preface of his "Middle of the Universe," he bade good-by to his many readers throughout the civilized world. But that "last performance" proved also to be the "last but one," being followed five years later by the "Wonders of Life," and some shorter works.

As a matter of fact, for Prof. Haeckel, be the artist that he is, work is pleasure. Thus his retirement at the beginning of April from the professorship at Jena, which he has held for forty-eight years, will only mark a change in the form of his activity and not a cessation of his labors. He proposes to devote his "leisure" to writing a history of biology. It is not yet certain whether this work will be confined to the progress made in that branch of science during the last century in which it was completely transformed, or whether it will cover the entire story from its tentative beginnings in antiquity. One thing, however, is quite clear; it will be a work of exceptional interest and value, in that will be given to the world for the first time a mass of correspondence between Darwin and all the great biologists of the age and the author. It will thus constitute a résumé of all their achievements, as well as of the latter's own work, during the most important period in the development of that science.

A MUSEUM.

With the preparation of this book will unquestionably constitute the most important part of his new task, Prof. Haeckel, in concert with his distinguished pupil and successor, Prof. Ludwig Plate of Berlin, will complete the organization of his Phyletic Museum at Jena. This institution, founded by Prof. Haeckel and handed over by him to the Jena University last year, is intended to promote an interest in and knowledge of the theory of development. This is done by the exhibition of natural objects as well as of pictures, arranged systematically, showing the development and the relationship between the various forms of plants and animal life, crowned by an anthropological collection establishing man's place in nature. This museum is further intended to promote an appreciation of the esthetic aspects of biology by the exhibition of numerous pictures and drawings, as well as by Haeckel's beautiful collection of valuable corals, one of the finest in Europe. It will also contain manuscripts, documents and correspondence and comprise a library of all important works on the theory of development and of the monistic theory of natural philosophy.

The significance and educative value of the museum is rendered evident by the work which Haeckel published on the opening of the institution: "Our Ancestors; Critical Studies in Phylogenetic Anthropology," in which he gives the genealogy of man from the primeval universe to the anthropoid ape. The foundation of the museum, which will doubtless serve as a model for many others throughout the civilized world, together with his history of biology—crown his labors of nearly half a century as one of the most ardent and effective champions of Darwinism.

These two great tasks will form the chief occupations of his leisure, but his friends know that, notwithstanding his seventy-five years, Prof. Haeckel, artist and nature-lover, who would probably have become a great landscape painter were it not for his absorbing devotion to science and the love of life in all its forms, will continue at intervals to seek refuge and rest in the fields and on the sea [illegible].

It must be remembered that this indefatigable toiler, nine-tenths of whose readers are only acquainted with his products—his scientific labors with his technical works, the cultured public with his philosophical disquisitions and his brilliant expositions of science—is an enthusiastic and eloquent apostle of the beauty of nature, the study of which has been to him one of the joys of existence from boyhood. The open air, the fields, the woods, [illegible] and the depths of the sea are a living poetry, which he prefers even to that of his adored Goethe. Indeed he gives precedence to Goethe, the scientist of powerful and piercing constructive imagination who has had great influence on his own development, over the poet and dramatist. Another characteristic of his inborn devotion to fact and truth is the preference which he gives to the newspaper over belles lettres, a preference which, however, only finds practical expression when he needs a change from the heavy daily task of keeping abreast of the overwhelming flood of technical literature with which he is inundated.

HIS JAUNTS.

When worn out by reading and study, or by the preparation of one of his works, which are done in a white heat to the neglect of sleep and rest, Prof. Haeckel has been accustomed to go off on long and lonely excursions in the Canary Islands, Madeira, Sicily, India and Malaysia, of which he has given entrancing descriptions. Such excursions and long walks in the fields, botanizing and "naturalizing," are his sole hobby, his recreation consisting exclusively in a change of occupation.

It would be an utter mistake, however, to regard this "child of the nineteenth century," as Prof. Haeckel has described himself, as a bloodless, Dryasdust, or mere intellectual machine. He is, on the contrary, one of the most human—"all too human"—of philosophers. A hard fighter, he bears no ill-feeling, as was shown by his generous appreciation of Rudolph Virchow, one of his teachers, who afterward became a bitter and powerful opponent. Indeed, a touching characteristic of this Nestor of living biologists, who might very well be spoilt by popular adulation and world-wide fame, is the modesty with which he attributes his success, first to the training of his mother, and then to the inspiration and encouragement of his different teachers. He hits hard, for plain and open speaking is part of his ideal of "truth, goodness and beauty," but he bears no malice and has always been not only ready but glad to admit and correct his own errors.

Nothing could prove more clearly that he is no mere bookworm than a glance at the tall, handsome figure and bright, clear blue eyes of the man who all through life has cultivated his physical powers. As a young "privat-docent," or university lecturer, he won a prize at a meeting of German athletes, for a six-meter-long jump, and in his seventy-second year he could be seen with a knapsack on his back making a tour on foot through the Harts Mountains, beloved of Heine.

Haeckel possesses an invincible good nature, which the attacks of a whole lifetime spent in intellectual strife has not been able to sour, an engaging simplicity and lack of all self-consciousness and a keen sense of humor. The goodness which is such a striking feature of his nature as well as of his ideal, is shown not only in his gratitude and attachment to relatives and friends, but in his sympathy for the less fortunate of his fellows. This was evident even in boyhood, when he frequently gave his pocket money to the poor, and took food to an ailing fellow-pupil at the national school to which he was sent by his well-to-do parents.

PERSONALITY.

In dedicating his "Travels in India" to his mother, he says: "It was you who from my earliest childhood cherished and developed in me a sense of the infinite beauties of nature. At an early hour you impressed upon the growing boy the value of time and the happiness of work. You have followed my many changing movements with all the tireless thought and care that can only be expressed in the words, 'mother's love.'"

His warmth of affection is evident in the gratitude which he has constantly manifested for the princely house of Saxe-Weimar, which afforded him a secure refuge at the Jena University during a period of storm and stress when the clerical and other defenders of the old school strained every nerve to silence the most eloquent German advocate of the theory of evolution. One day an ardent and irritated theologian complained to the late Grand Duke Karl Alexander of Haeckel's lectures, and begged that they should be prohibited. "Do you believe that Haeckel is convinced of the truth of what he says?" quietly asked the Grand Duke. "Certainly, I do," was the reply, "and what he says is all the worse for that very reason." "But then," retorted the Grand Duke, "in that case he is doing nothing more than what you are doing yourself."

Haeckel's frank simplicity and openness of character is well illustrated by the remarks he made at his last lecture at the Zoölogical Institute of the Jena University on February 10, when he said:

"I must frankly confess that I have never been a good teacher: Often when I had taken special pains to prepare myself on a subject in which I was particularly interested, I fell into a melancholy state of depression because I could not find the right words. I have seldom been able to teach as I would have liked to do. I am firmly convinced that my successor, Prof. Plate, one of my most capable pupils, will not only fill my place but surpass me."

This public statement in the presence of the students who had just honored him with a manifestation of boundless admiration and attachment, helps to dispose of the unfounded charge that Prof. Haeckel is disposed to assume the attitude of an infallible Pontiff of science who lays down the law for his fellows. The same modesty is evident in all his acts.

NO AIRS.

SIMPLE LIFE FOR ALDRICH.

CONNECTICUT SENATOR NEVER WEARS FROCK COAT.

Is a Poor Orator, But a Good Mixer Among the Members of the Senate and Is the Chief Authority on the Tariff Legislation Which Is Now in Progress.

[Washington Correspondence of Brooklyn Eagle:] Senator Aldrich is one of the simplest men in Congress. The popular idea that he is a Senatorial "high-brow," with so much dignity that it hurts, given to stiff and formal ways, is all wrong. He is the one Senator who never wears a frock coat. He looks more like a keen, wide awake successful broker than a United States Senator. He has a tall, well-built athletic figure. What little hair he has is dark gray. His mustache is white. The Aldrich eyes are the color of steel and as clear and direct as a hawk's.

As an orator, Senator Aldrich would rank at the foot of the Senate list. When he rises he talks. There is no attempt at rhetorical flights, no fancy figures of speech and no gesticulations or other tricks of the orator.

"He talks just like a business man would at a meeting of the board of directors of a national bank," was the comment of a man in the gallery the other day, as Aldrich was explaining the intricacies of the metal schedule in the tariff bill.

Aldrich talks directly at his listeners, and his words count. His simple addresses carry more weight than all the florid speeches of Beveridge, Dolliver and other real orators put together. Aldrich believes in concentration. The tariff and currency are his specialties, and he believes in acquiring every bit of knowledge about them that he can. A Democratic Senator said recently that he believed Aldrich had read more on these two subjects than any other man in the United States. He not only intimately knows the currency and tariff laws of the United States, but is acquainted with the same kind of laws in practically all the civilized nations. When a new work by a financial authority is published, he buys it and reads it. He talked a veteran correspondent into a severe headache one afternoon when he was asked to give his views upon the reorganization of the national banking act.

The Rhode Island wizard is regarded generally as an aristocrat, yet he is one of the best mixers in the Senate. He has mastered the knack of controlling men. He knows the subtle art of persuading your opponent to vote with you.

"That man Aldrich spends more time on the Democratic side than in his own seat," remarked an observant gallery attendant a week or so ago.

It is the Aldrich habit to hobnob with Bailey, Rayner, Bacon, Tillman and the others of the minority whenever important legislation is pending. He flits from Democrat to Democrat, telling them informally what is being done and getting them to agree to his programme. Unlike Champ Clark, he believes in compromise and conciliation. Senator Allison said of Aldrich:

"Not once in all the years of our association has there been anything like a jar in our relations; not once has there been a suggestion of dictation from Aldrich."

The Rhode Islander is the antithesis of Hale of Maine; yet the two are close friends. Hale is gruff, abrupt and supercilious with almost every one save Aldrich. The latter finds it just as easy to be good friends with Hale as with the peppery Tillman and the punctilious Bacon.

Aldrich is a rich man. But his tastes are simple. He could buy a string of automobiles stretching from Washington to New York; yet he walks to the Capitol when it rains or snows. Until this year he has lived in an apartment at the Arlington. Now he owns a handsome home on Massachusetts avenue, in the fashionable quarter. He has a beautiful summer residence at Warwick, R. I. He has no taste for society and dislikes evening functions. His name is never seen in the list of Senators who accept dinner invitation six nights every week. Aldrich finds his diversion in the winter evenings in reading.

Aldrich is looked upon by many people as the personal representative in the Senate of the Standard Oil trust and the Wall street interests generally. This is due in part to the fact that he is the father-in-law of John D. Rockefeller, Jr. Aldrich has been roasted scores of times by muckrakers because of this relationship. The Rhode Islander is never worried by newspaper criticisms. He never takes the trouble to defend himself or correct popular misapprehensions regarding his motives as a Senator. He once smilingly made the following statement to a friend:

"They say I represent the oil trust because my daughter married Mr. Rockefeller. The fact of the matter is, I have never seen John D. Rockefeller, Sr., but three times in my life. The first time was the occasion of the marriage of his son and my daughter. Subsequently, I met him twice, and the extent of our conversation was some casual remark about the weather and our health."

RIGHT AND WRONG.

LEGAL JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE.

LENGTHS TO WHICH JUDGES CAN GO WHEN ONCE AROUSED.

Human Life the Basis of Civilization and Should Be Saved—Losses Suffered by Clients Because of the Inefficiency of Their Lawyers and Technicality of the Laws.

[Collier's Weekly:] Inu Tacoma, Wash., Salvador Pagano keeps a fruit stand. He was charged in 1892 with murder in the first degree. Because he was a foreigner and believed to be of a vindictive race, feeling against him ran high. He was convicted on the flimsiest evidence. One of the facts proved that Pagano had cut a piece of cloth out of his vest. Pagano, in his defense, innocently pointed to his pantaloons, to which garment he had removed an unnecessity bit of waistcoat to make a necessary bit of pantaloons. The piece of cloth was supposed to have contained blood, though it was never proved. Pagano's lawyer was a day or two late in filing his statement on motion for a new trial. He explained to the court that Pagano was so poor that he had been unable to raise the money to prosecute his appeal sooner. The Supreme Court said they were sorry, but Pagano would have to hang—this was a case where he could not afford to be late. Meanwhile public sentiment had changed. It was discovered that another, not Pagano, was most likely the guilty person. The Legislature was in session, and a special law, clumsily drawn, was hastily passed to try to fit Pagano's case. The Supreme Court being, after all, human, having taken note of these things, the lawyers got together and agreed to waive all technicalities, and the case was submitted to the Supreme Court—irregularly, but submitted, nevertheless. That court (Seventh Washington State Reports, p. 549) wrote an opinion in favor of Pagano's innocence on the evidence which it would do any one good to read, it is so in contrast with the one written the year before, when, with the same record before them, they decided to let Pagano hang. Of course, the statutory time within which an appeal may be perfected is held by the courts to be jurisdictional; that is to say, that if the time is allowed to go by, the court loses all power to pass upon the case. But here is an instance where, under the spur of public sentiment, the court awoke to a realization of the fact that human life and liberty, and not red tape, were, after all, at the bottom of civilization.

This same red tape which so often defeats justice in criminal cases operates in hundreds of civil case to the abuse of justice. I have in mind a citizen of one of our Western State who had a case involving $100,000,000 worth of property. He lost it in the lower court through a judicial ruling which, in another case, was afterward reversed by the Supreme Court; but he lost his appeal and his property because his lawyers failed to comply with the rules of the Supreme Court in the preparation of their bill of exceptions; that is to say, they did not set out the points of the case in the particular manner required by the rules of court last promulgated. This case is found in the published reports. That court had licensed those lawyers; their fault was not the fault of the client, who had done his share when he employed three lawyers coming to him with credentials from the very court to which his appeal was directed. Those lawyers are still practicing law; they were not even fined or reprimanded; but the innocent, plundered client is working for day wages, all he had swept away by a rule of court which favored the mental indolence of the judges, but which touched no point of his controversy.

In Seattle last year a man was charged with and tried for practicing dentistry without a license. Each particular piece of evidence necessary to make out the case on the part of the State was proved, except that the prosecutor, having procured the prosecuting witness to exhibit his botched tooth to the jury, either forgot or didn't think it was necessary to ask the witness if it was a natural or an artificial tooth, and so lost his case. It seems the statute made it a misdemeanor to mend a "human tooth" for a fee without a license. Now the sensible presumption—the presumption that men or judges would naturally indulge in if they had not become imbued with the passion of peering for loopholes—would be that the tooth was natural and not artificial. But if we presumed that the law would cease to be an "exact" science, and many gaping spectators on the back benches would be deprived of the joy of watching to see which lawyer came out winner in the match of wits.

All in the Mind.

On the opening day of one winter session the late Prof. Tait of Edinburgh University, entered the natural philosophy classroom in the midst of the uproarious applause common to those occasions.

Presently he looked up at the tumultuous benches above him with the smile of one who had known the ways of students for a lifetime.

At last, when a momentary lull came, he remarked, his gray eyes twinkling: "Gentlemen, I must remind you that there is really no such thing as noise. It is merely a matter of subjective impression."—[The Youths' Companion.

CITRUS PROBE.

LEMON MEN AFTER FACTS.

Suspicious About Actions of Customs Officers.

Want to Investigate Eastern Ports of Entry.

Think Foreigners' Lobby Is Getting Undue Aid.

The Lemon Men's Club, which, it is said, includes 85 per cent. of the lemon growers of Southern California, is considering the advisability of appointing three men to investigate the actions of the revenue officers in charge of the receiving of lemons at Baltimore, New York and New Orleans.

Members of the club have been led to believe that customhouse representatives are, for some reason, favoring the foreign shippers in tariff legislation. It is stated that a committee will be appointed, not only for the purpose of learning the methods of the revenue officers, but also with a view to detecting corruption.

A. F. Call of Corona and C. C. Teague of Santa Paula have been appointed to reinforce the committee now in Washington, which is endeavoring to secure action in tariff matters favorable to local lemon growers, and they are now en route.

MUCH FRUIT IN STORAGE.

A Pasadena member of the Lemon Men's Club stated yesterday that there are at present 2500 carloads of lemons in storage in Southern California, and that this exceeds storage figures at this time last year by 1000 cars.

He says that all lemons are being shipped at a loss; in many cases, as much as 50 cents a box, and that, unless tariff measures provide for an import duty of at least 1½ cents a pound on the Sicily product, this branch of the citrus business in Southern California will be in many instances abandoned by growers.

"Already 500 cars in excess of the amount shipped at this time last year have been forwarded this season," he said, "most of them at a loss to the grower.

"From statistics carefully compiled, it is estimated that the lemon producers have only realized an average of 4.8 per cent. on their investment per year for the last ten years. In 1901 87 per cent. of the lemons consumed in the United States were supplied by home industry. Last year the figure had dropped down to 54 per cent. The importation of lemons has increased 100,000 boxes this year. Sicily, it is estimated, sends 2,000,000 boxes per year, paying a duty of 1 cent per pound.

"It costs us in Southern California $2.32 per box to produce and land our lemons in New York City. During the last three weeks the lemons have been selling at auction at from $1.60 to $2.25 per box. Sicily producers can land their lemons in New York at a cost of $1.84, and have 18 cents advantage over the California growers.

LOBBYISTS AT WORK.

"The situation in Washington is that the bill passed in the lower house, providing for an import duty of 1¼ cents per pound was amended by the Senate and the duty was raised to 1½ cents a pound. This threw the question open for further action and a tariff clause is now being lobbied, providing for a charge of 30 cents per cubic foot, putting the import duty on the basis of cubical contents instead of on the pound basis. This, if passed, would amount to about 72 cents per box, as against approximately 84 cents a box, which is now charged under the prevailing tariff, and would make the situation worse than it already is.

"I do not expect to see lemons sold at a profit before the middle of July, and yet the growers are forced to ship because the lemons will not keep."

In Pasadena packers are holding in storage in all about twenty carloads of lemons, awaiting an advancing market. The Lamanda Park Citrus Association will ship 100 cars of lemons this year, says its superintendent, E. B. Owens. Jesse Knight of La Cañada in the past week forwarded two cars, both at a loss. He is under contract to handle practically the entire crop of the district north and west of Pasadena, and is working twenty-three pickers and packers.

LOUDEST SALOON FIGHT GUN.

Contest Filed of Recent Fresno Election—Desperate Effort to Nullify "Dry" Ordinance.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

FRESNO, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] By far the loudest gun in the saloon fight was fired today, when Attorneys Carter & Carter filed a contest of the recent city election, in so far as it relates to the passage of the "dry" ordinance. Mayor Rowell and all of the Trustees are named as defendants. The plaintiff is Harry P. Black, a local saloon man.

Among the grounds for contest set forth in the complaint is one to the effect that J. D. Statham never was "Mayor pro tem.," and that the only claim he had for calling himself the "Acting Mayor," and for approving the ordinance bearing on the saloon question, which was voted upon at the recent election, was by virtue of "an attempted and pretended appointment" by former Mayor Lyon.

While many of the allegations are similar to those made in the application for an injunction, recently filed against the city officials, and which is now pending in court, sensational charges are made against Rev. Irving Briston, Attorneys J. N. Sprouse and G. L. Aylesworth and Rev. Duncan [illegible]. It is asserted that prior to the election they carried on a campaign of intimidation, and that they went so far as to cause the arrest of W. J. Ellert, a local brewer, upon the charge of registering illegally. Ellert was acquitted.

BODY MASS OF WOUNDS.

Sanger Man Kicked by Maddened Horses and Dragged to Death Over Farm Implements.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

FRESNO, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Kicked and bruised into unconsciousness by frightened horses and later dragged over farm implements until his body was a mass of wounds, Leman F. Smith, son of George Albert Smith, a well known Sanger fruit packer, received injuries that resulted in his death today. The accident occurred near Caruthers.

Smith led two horses from the barn to a watering trough in the yard, the halter ropes became tangled about his body, the horses started to run and Smith was unable to control them. He was kicked and bruised by the frantic animals and finally dragged over some farming implements, violently striking his head on a disc. His aged companion hurried to the scene and succeeded in controlling the stock and extricating Smith, who by this time had lost consciousness.

MELANCHOLY.

WON'T TELL WHAT POISON.

Wife, Returning from Outing, Finds Him in Convulsions—At the Hospital, Half-Conscious, He Fights the Doctors and Their Assistants and Refuses to Say What He Took.

Rendered despondent by lack of work, Carl Bodendick, a photographer residing at No. 561 Agate street, swallowed a large dose of poison yesterday afternoon. Officer Fowler of the East Side station administered a heavy dose of mustard and warm water, after which the patient was taken to the Receiving Hospital, where he seemed to be recovering last night.

Bodendick had been much depressed by his failure to secure work. He had equipped a small photograph gallery, but met no success. At 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon his wife, Mrs. Lydia Bodendick, returned from an outing to find her husband in convulsions on his bed, and neighbors, hearing her cries of distress, summoned the police.

At the hospital, Bodendick, half conscious, fought off the doctors and their assistants, and stubbornly refused to say what he had taken, answering only with curses the questions that were put to him when he was forced out of his lethargy.

WORLD'S GREATEST BRIDGE.

Will Help People of New York to Reach Their Homes on Long Island.

Measured by the combined length and capacity of its five main spans, says Collier's Weekly, the Queensborough bridge, across the East River from Fifty-ninth street, New York, to Ravenswood, Queens, is the greatest bridge in the world. Including approaches, its total length is 8600 feet, width 86 feet, and greatest height over 300 feet above the water. It crosses from shore to shore, 135 feet above the river, with three enormous spans of 1182 feet, 630 feet and 984 feet, the middle one reaching across the full width of Blackwell's Island. Besides these there are two more great "anchor" spans, one at each end, wholly over dry land, with a length of 3724 feet for the five, which, together, contain over 105,000,000 pounds of steel. No other spans in this country, except suspension bridges, approach the longest of these, and the only trussed span in the world which exceeds it is the Forth bridge, which, although 1710 feet long, has a capacity for only two railroad tracks, less than one-third of this. There are two decks, the lower one designated for a wide driveway and four electric car tracks, and the upper one for two sidewalks and two elevated railroad tracks, and having, in all, an estimated capacity of 200,000,000 car passengers and millions of vehicles and pedestrians annually. It will cost over $20,000,000.

Were Nice Children.

A maid servant in the employ of a Brooklyn woman was left the other day in charge of the children while her mistress went for a long drive.

"Well, Mary," asked the lady on her return, "how did the children behave during my absence? Nicely, I hope."

"Nicely, ma'am," Mary answered; but at the end they fought terribly together."

"Fight! Mercy me! Why did they fight?"

"To decide," said Mary, "which was the best."—[Harper's Weekly.

Queen Quality SHOE

WE never had any doubt about the great progressive spirit of the "QUEEN QUALITY" organization—but shipments of new Spring shoes just received—and which go on sale tomorrow morning at both our stores—will certainly compel every woman who sees them, to instantly acknowledge their world famous merit. Judged by the most critical standards, carefully compared with other shoes sold at much higher prices—without making any allowance for the differences in price—the vast superiority of "QUEEN QUALITY" shoes is so monumentally apparent—that no sane person will ask for further reason of why the "QUEEN QUALITY" output has almost doubled in less than two years. Last season we placed before our customers some wonderful "QUEEN QUALITY" shoes, but so many vast improvements have been incorporated in the designing and shoemaking of these new Spring models, that we have no hesitancy in pronouncing it the longest step forward that has ever been made by any industrial organization in the world.

OLDEST MAN IS DISCOVERED.

PREHISTORIC REMAINS FOUND IN A FRENCH CAVERN.

Members of Academy of Science Pronounce Them the Oldest Human Fossils Known—Believed the Man Lived During the Mousterain Age. Relics Show Human Burial.

Prof. Perrier, curator of the Museum of Natural History, his colleague, Prof. Marcelin Boule, the eminent paleontologist, and a score of geologists, together with the members of the Academy of Science, have completed their examinations of the skull and part of the skeleton, at first supposed to be fossil remains of the missing link, recently dug up by three priests and archeologists, MM. J. and A. Bouyssonie and L. Bardon, in a prehistoric cave at La Chapelle-aux-Saints, near Tulle, in the department of La Correze.

The skull and bones have been brought to Paris and were exhibited at a meeting of the Academy of Science. They were found in a quadrangular pit or grave situated in a cave at about three yards from its entrance. The skeleton rested on its side, with the legs drawn up and tightly folded.

After careful research the scientists feel convinced that the grave was made by human hands and that the body has been the object of ceremonial burial—the earliest instance of the kind recorded—and that the skull and skeleton were those of "the most ancient man in the world." The fact of ritual burial makes it probable that those who buried this prehistoric man were endowed with sentimentality and perhaps religion.

Prof. Perrier, at the meeting of the Academy of Science, placed the skull found at La Chapelle-aux-Saints on a long table side by side with skulls of a chimpanzee, gorilla, primitive Australian, copies of the skull of the primitive man found in the Neanderthal, near the Rhine, in the early '60s, a copy of the frontal bones of the primitive skull dug up at Spy, in Belgium, and the top of the skull of the pithecanthrope found in Java in 1903 by Dr. E. Dubois.

Each of these specimens was placed in front of skulls of modern Parisians. This arrangement greatly facilitated the comparative study of the La Chapelle-aux-Saints skull. It was with almost mathematical precision shown that the newly discovered skull had its place between the skull of the pithecanthrope of Java and that of the primitive Australian.

This is of great importance because scientists have not yet decided whether the pithecanthrope skull is that of a very highly developed monkey or that of the absolutely primitive man. Long discussion ensued as to whether the La Chapelle-aux-Saints skull was that of a human being, a monkey, or of the famous "missing link,' says a cable dispatch from Paris to the Chicago Inter Ocean.

The members of the Academy of Science are unanimous in their opinion that the skull and skeleton of La Chapelle-aux-Saints are those of a man, but of a man of the very lowest degree, and also that they are the oldest, as well as the most complete, of all the human fossils known.

At one time it was thought—and Virchow was of this opinion—that the Neanderthal type was pathologic. The French scientists consider the Neanderthal man, that of Spy, and the La Chapelle-aux-Saints man are all representatives of normal proto-human races, that of the pithecanthrope and the other being of a slightly higher race than that of Neanderthal and La Chapelle-aux-Saints.

As compared with contemporary skulls, that of La Chapelle-aux-Saints has characteristics of a simian type. The absence of the forehead gives a flat, bestial appearance. An enormous development of the arches of the eyebrows surmounts deep tubular orbits. The backward position of the occipital hole shows that the head was not placed in a vertical position on the vertebral column, but was bent forward.

The prehistoric Correzian must have walked about with his eyes constantly looking at the ground. The front part of the skull shows a marked projection of the lower jaw, which, together with a retreating chin, gives the appearance of a snout. The wide but short nose is separated from the forehead by a deep depression.

The upper jaw reaches forward abruptly without being hollowed out, between the nasal and the check bones, by a furrow, as is the case with skulls of today, and which, in living heads, causes the wrinkle extending from the lobes of the nostrils to the commissure of the lips. Prof. Brandidier points out that it is this wrinkle or fold that by its mobility and rapidly-changing aspects, conveys to human physiognomy the expression of gayety or sadness.

The absence of this facial line in the La Chapelle-aux-Saints skull shows that it belonged to a man who could not smile. Many of these osteological characteristics are of the simious type, but there are many others, such, for instance, as the marked capacity of the cranium, that are essentially human. The evidences of human burial also indicate that the skull and bones were those of a very primitive man, and not of a monkey nor of the "missing link."

Geologists have been able to determine the period of the burial of the La Chapelle-aux-Saints skeleton. It was found in a tomb, some distance in the interior of a grotto. In this grotto a number of bones of animals were found, such as those of the rhinecerostichorinus, reindeer, hyena, mountain rat and wolf. Three yards from these animal fossils the tomb was found containing the human skeleton and skull.

At the foot of the tomb there were the bones of the hind leg of a gigantic bovine beast with its hoof. Prof. Marcelin Boule thinks it likely that this was put there in accordance with the primitive custom of placing provisions in a burial place. The grotto bears no signs of ever having been used as a human habitation.

The pieces of silex found near the skeleton are those of the finest Mousterian age. Moreover, the débris of fauna are of the same period. From these data French scientists decide that the skeleton of the La Chapelle-aux-Saints tomb is of the Mousterian epoch, when the climate of the region was not tropical, but temperate, or almost frigid, forming part of the pleistocene period that came immediately after the last era of the glacial extension.

The skull and skeleton are consequently, in the opinion of Prof. Perrier and his colleagues, the most ancient human bones known to exist.

TRANSPARENCY OF GOLD.

Copper Shows the Same Quality, While Silver Remains Opaque Except in Thin Atmosphere.

[Exchange:] Transparent sheets of gold and silver were formed by Faraday half a century ago by mounting thin films of the metals on glass and beating, says the Detroit Free Press. Continuing the investigation, Prof. Thomas Turner, a British physicist, has now shown that a gold film 1-300.000 of an inch thick becomes transpartent in a few moments at 550 deg. C., in an oxidizing or a reducing atmosphere, aggregation of the gold permitting white light to pass through the intermediate spaces.

With silver the effect is different. A sheet 1-120,000 of an inch thick remains opaque in a reducing atmosphere—like hydrogen or coal gas—or in a vacuum, but in air or one-fifth of an atmosphere of oxygen it becomes beautifully transparent in a few minutes at 390 deg. The transparent silver does not appear to produce the change.

A sheet of copper 1-75,000 of an inch thick becomes transparent in air or oxygen when heated to 200 deg., showing brilliant emerald green transmitted light, which passes through olive and dark red to black as the temperature rises to 400 deg. In this case oxidation is very evident.

Deepest Canal Lock in World.

The foundations are being laid for the deepest canal lock in the world on the line of the New York barge canal at the lower end of Moss Island, near Little Falls. This lock will drop boats forty-two feet from the barge canal into the Mohawk River. The foundation for the lock is in the present bed of the Erie Canal, where it will have to be excavated about thirty feet until rock is reached. Around the lock proper a temporary lock will be erected so that navigation will not be interfered with the coming summer. It is one of the most difficult engineering feats along the entire length of the canal. More than 500 men are engaged on the work night and day, and the effort is being made to finish the lock foundation before the water is let into the Erie Canal in the spring.—[Exchange.

ST. YVES WINS BIG MARATHON.

Frenchman Easy Victor in Fierce Struggle.

Svanborg of Sweden Follows Him Across Tape.

American, Third, Collapses as He Finishes.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Before a crowd of more than 25,000 people, gathered in the polo grounds this afternoon, Henri St. Yves pattered across the tape, an easy winner in the great $10,000 international Marathon race of 26 miles 385 yards. His time for the entire distance was 2:44:05. Svanborg of Sweden was second in 2:50:54, and Crook of Fall River, staggered over the tape in 2:52:10, and collapsed as he finished.

Weather conditions for the race were ideal, and long before 4 o'clock the immense spaces of the Polo Grounds began to turn black as the crowds poured through the gates and over the stands. The hills in Central Park and even the pillars of the elevated structure of the Ninth-avenue elevated, were soon swarming with spectators. There was a brisk breeze blowing from the Hudson River, and a few fleecy clouds trailed across an otherwise perfectly blue sky.

RACERS TUNE UP.

One by one the thirteen contestants emerged from their dressing rooms under the grand stand, and trotted to and fro on the track waiting for the signal to face the starter. Henri St. Yves, winner of the Marathon derby a few weeks ago was greeted with a rush of shouting that fairly swept the little Frenchman from his feet.

Cheers greeted others of the famous runners, including Dorando, the Italian, Cibot, Orphee, both of France, Svanborg of Sweden, Marshall, the Canadian, Appleby, the Englishman, and Simpson, the Canadian Indian. Carvajal represented Cuba, Maloney and White, Ireland, while Crook of Fall River and Morrissey of Yonkers were the American competitors.

THE RACE IN DETAIL.

Thirteen runners were off at 4:06. Marsh led out to the first mile with St. Yves half a stride behind him. Time 5:02. They ended the second mile as follows: Marsh, St. Yves, Appleby, Simpson and Dorando. Time 10:33.

Marsh and St. Yves made the pace for the third mile, the two running nip and tuck, Marsh doggedly holding the lead. Time 16:07, which is a new record.

The same furious pace was maintained throughout the fourth mile, no change in the positions occurring. The best record previous made for the distance again being broken, the new figures standing at 21:51.

ST. YVES TO THE FORE.

In the fifth mile St. Yves shook off his Canadian rival and completed the distance, almost 200 feet, in the lead in the fast time of 27m. 26s. Carvajal lost lap after lap and fell a mile behind St. Yves; Dorando one lap behind the Frenchman, leading the second division with Svanborg.

The followers of Dorando, the Italian, were thrown into a frenzy in the last lap of the sixth mile when the little runner won back nearly three quarters of the lap separating him from the leader, but St. Yves pattered comfortably along. Time for the six miles was 33m. 6s.

St. Yves again quickened his pace, and at the second lap of the eighth mile, Marsh was compelled to let the Frenchman go by him. Time for the seventh mile: 38m. 50s. The Cuban was still eight laps behind the leader.

St. Yves led at the end of the tenth mile; time, 56m. 2s. At the end of the eleventh and twelfth miles, Svanborg and Crook, carrying respectively the Swedish and American colors, maintained their positions with apparent speed in reserve, with St. Yves leading easily.

'POOL CHAMPIONSHIP GAMES.

Close Contest Between Banks and Brown With Banks Leading on Totals for Match.

The second round in the match for the pool championship of the Pacific Coast between Champion Banks and Dr. Brown of Portland, played Friday night at McCormick's, was a close and exciting contest which resulted in a score of 149 points for Banks to 145 for his opponents, and left the totals for the two evenings standing: Banks, 301; Brown, 270—a total lead for Banks of 31.

To win the match of 500 points, Brown is now handicapped to the extent that he must make 230 points to Banks's 199; but he shows no lack of confidence in his chances for next Sunday evening, when the final round will be played. The fact that he started last night's game 27 points in arrears, and after losing an additional 7 points pulled up to within a single point of tying Banks at 238, where only a careless shot forfeited his opportunity of taking a strong lead, gives reasonable excuse for his confidence.

The slight difference between the two experts is largely that of temperament. Banks is always the studious, careful player, making the best use of his opportunities and leaving nothing for an opponent which can be avoided; while Brown is rapid in execution, placing his shots with precision and easy confidence, but preferring the risk of a break up rather than "play for safety."

FIREMAN FOR CHANCE.

CHICAGO, May 8.—Fred Hopp, a giant fireman, may be a new recruit to complete Frank Chance's aggregation of heavy hitters. He announced his intention yesterday of making application for a position with the club. Hopp has played with the team of the firemen for several seasons, and his batting has been the cause of much talk. Yesterday in a game between the teams of the fire department and the police Hopp batted the ball a city block for a home run and a victory for the firemen.

NEW ATHLETIC CLUB PLANNED.

Outdoor Exercise Is to Be Leading Feature.

Big Clubhouse Is to Adjoin Fiesta Stadium.

Athletic Association to Promote Sports.

The Fiesta Stadium Athletic Club, the purpose of which is to conduct outdoor training and contests and promote all branches of wholesome sports, is being formed by local men and it is expected that a complete organization will be effected before the end of this week.

The work of organization is being conducted by A. W. Sorenson, W. H. Leonard and C. O. Bergelin.

The club is to be housed in a building to be constructed by Victor Ponet at Pico and Hope streets, adjoining Fiesta Park, to be leased to a corporation to be known as the Fiesta Park Building Company. The plans for the building are being drawn by C. O. Bergelin, and it is the intention to erect a four-story edifice with about 150 rooms, at a cost of $60,000.

The building is to be used for business and by the athletic club. Although the purpose of the club is to conduct outdoor sports on the stadium field and track, a small gymnasium will be equipped for the use of members desiring indoor work. On the first floor is to be a garage for automobiles and motorcycles, and two store rooms. Lodging apartments for members will be arranged on the third and fourth floors, and a hygienic training café probably will be installed.

The six-lap running track and the athletic field in the stadium will be the recreation place for the members of the club and the club managers purpose to conduct all training in the form of outdoor games that will provide the players with plenty of exercise in the open air.

Eddie Robinson, who has been physical director of the Jonathan Club and boxing and wrestling instructor of the local Y.M.C.A., has been engaged as trainer and physical director for the gymnasium work of the new organization.

The plans of the officers include the forming of a football team next fall, which will train with the U.S.C. Law School team, under the direction of A. W. Sorenson, and play games at the Stadium on alternate dates.

The captain to be chosen for the Fiesta Stadium Athletic Club eleven also is to aid in coaching the team, under the direction of Sorenson.

All kinds of games in which large numbers of players may compete are to be conducted at night, the object of the officers being to provide a means for taking vigorous exercise in the open air.

The Fiesta Stadium Athletic Club is the first organization to join the Southern California Athletic Association, which has just been organized for the purpose of promoting clean sports and to fix such classifications and records as will best serve the interests of athletics and the greatest number of persons wishing to take part. Athletes are to be classified as professionals, semi-professionals, instructors and amateurs, and otherwise as circumstances may determine, in order that every one wishing to engage in sports may enter a class in which he will have competitors.

Under the present conditions of ranking athletes as either amateurs or professionals, it is estimated that about two-thirds of the persons who wish to engage in sports are barred from doing so, and the new association believes that the new classification will greatly promote all branches of athletics. No athlete of clean character is to be refused membership in the organization.

The temporary officers of the Southern California Athletic Association are: President, W. H. Leonard; vice-president, H. M. Walker; secretary, Ed Moriarity; treasurer, A. W. Sorenson.

The Classification Committee is composed of five local sporting writers as follows: Chester Lawrence, Edmund W. Pugh, E. L. Sarre, Randolph Madison, Harry Williams. This committee is to be assisted in assigning athletes to their proper rank by subcommittees in the other Southern California athletic centers.

GOES AFTER WESTON.

CHICAGO, May 8.—"Sergeant" John Walsh, a former Chicagoan and veteran of the Civil War, aged 57, has arrived in Chicago, declaring his intention of overhauling Edward Payson Weston, on foot. Walsh said he had walked to Chicago from Boston, en route to San Francisco, and already had gained 500 miles on Weston. Weston is near Kansas City.

NEW LEAGUE WATER POLO.

Amateur Swimmers to Turn Into Professionals.

Frank Holborow Lays Claim to Championship.

Radical Move to Provide for Old Athletes.

A professional water polo league, to include teams representing the bathhouses of the principal beach resorts, is to be formed in a short time for the purpose of supplanting the amateur water polo league, practically all the players of which have been charged with professionalism and are now under temporary suspension by the local commission of the Amateur Athletic Union.

F. K. McCarver of Venice has undertaken the organization of the "pro" league and he believes that Redondo and Long Beach will join with Venice in forming a three-cornered organization that will include the best players in the South, who, being out-and-out professionals, will be without the jurisdiction of the A.A.U.

George Freeth, the crack water polo player of Redondo, went to Honolulu last week, and said that he intended to bring back with him several professional swimmers who would be employed as life guards at the beach resorts and would play on the professional water polo teams. Freeth said just before his departure that the bathhouse people were in favor of substituting professional teams for the amateur organizations if there would be less interference with the games and a higher grade of playing, and upon his return he intends to coöperate with McCarver in making the arrangements for the "pro" league.

FLEE TROUBLE.

McCarver believes that inasmuch as nearly all the men in the amateur water polo league have been getting into trouble with the A.A.U. that they will be glad to declare themselves professionals. Tom Wild, George Wild, Marco, Ralph Farey of Venice, and several other water polo players, are said to be willing to relinquish their

LAPSE OF TEN YEARS CLOSED AT FIESTA TODAY.

Professionals and Amateurs to Begin Season of Contests on New Saucer Track This Afternoon. Champion Ivor Lawson to Appear for First Time on Coast Bowl.

After a lapse of ten years bicycle racing is to be resumed in this city this afternoon. The new five-lap saucer track at Fiesta Stadium is to be opened formally with a ten-event meet, in which the best available professional and amateur riders in the West are to compete. The racing is to begin at 2 o'clock.

About thirty professional and amateur sprinters have been collected by Manager Pickering and for ten days the men have been practicing in the bowl, chief among whom is the champion, Ivor Lawson. The sprinters say they expect to dedicate the wooden path by bettering the performances they have made elsewhere.

Senhouse and Walker, the Australian riders, are expected to set a fast pace for the other entries, and they have a long list of victories to their credit. Williams, who arrived here from Boston last week, has been riding with the leaders, and seems sure of finishing within the money in all the "pro" events. Achorn, Agraz and Furman have been in the racing game for ten years and are consistent place winners. They rode at the Velodrome when bicycle racing first became popular in this city.

W. E. Samuelson and J. G. Walker, who are to meet in a ten-mile motor-paced race, are expected to furnish the feature of the opening meet. The men will be paced by T. M. Samuelson and Arthur Mitchell, respectively, and have been training daily for ten days.

Lines are painted on the track for the purpose of aiding the riders in keeping from varying in their course,

ANNUAL MEET.

BARACA LADS ARE ATHLETES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL BOYS WIN TRACK CONTEST.

Los Angeles High and Polytechnic Sprinters and Jumpers Are Big Point Winners for Their Respective Leagues—"Micky" McClure Captures Sprints.

The second annual track and field meet of the Los Angeles City Baraca League held at Bovard Field yesterday afternoon was won by the team representing the First Congregational Church with a total of 57 points. The other competing teams and the scores made, follow: Vernon Congregational, 14; First Methodist, 13; Third Presbyterian, 8; First Baptist, 7; St. James Methodist, 5; Immanuel Presbyterian, 4.

McClure, Ward and Hixson were the main point winners and annexed eight firsts, all for the First Congregational. Ward captured the low and high hurdles, the high jump, and second place in the shot put. McClure easily won the sprints, taking the century, furlong and quarter mile dashes, while Hixson took the lion's share in the distance events, winning both the half and mile races from a large number of contestants.

The time recorded in the track events was medicore, but the poor marks in the sprints is probably attributable to the inexperience of the officials.

A large crowd of rooters occupied the bleachers and were enthusiastic in the support of their favorites.

Summary:

The 100-yard dash: Won by McClure (First Congregational;) Lillard (Vernon Congregational,) second; Bailey (First Congregational,) third; time 11 2-5s.

The 220-yard dash: Won by McClure (First Congregational;) Riordan (First Baptist,) second; Wiggins (Third Presbyterian,) third; time 24 1-5s.

ANOTHER YEAR.

CRISP NOTES FOR AUTOISTS.

Ten Thousand Dollars Pass at Dealers' Banquet.

Anthony Springs a Joke on Gordon and Leavitt.

New Officers Toasted and Royally Feasted.

Ten thousand dollars in crisp, new (humbug) bills was presented to Huntley L. Gordon of the Stearns agency and Ralph J. Leavitt of the Locomobile last night, at the banquet given by the Automobile Dealers of Southern California at the Alexandria. Gordon and Leavitt were dumbfounded when Toastmaster Earle C. Anthony made the formal presentation. The bills were not worth the paper on which they were printed, but will be used by both auto dealers as souvenirs of the money they did not risk.

When the guests were well fed, and just as the toastmaster was beginning to call on the several speakers, the money was unrolled from a fat-looking wallet. Anthony carefully counted the alleged currency, and then made the presentation. Gordon received $5000 of bogus paper, and Leavitt a like amount.

There was much good-natured joshing regarding the proposed Stearns-Loco return match, and Gordon and Leavitt were bantered by their brother autoists. They were both asked whether they really intend to race again, and whether they are going to use real money as wagers.

LEADERS TOASTED.

The banquet was the best ever given by the association. It marks the close of the most successful year in the history of the body. There was a larger number present than has ever before attended a like gathering of the dealers.

The officers of the association, who have just been elected, were the honored guests. Ralph Hamlin, the president, made an address, in which he outlined what is to be the policy of the association for another year. He spoke briefly of the work that is yet to be done on the road race plans, and urged all the dealers to aid the committee in its task of whipping everything into shape for the contest.

Leon T. Shettler, the vice-president, said he was glad to have the position, because it entails less work than any any other place on the directorate. Shettler is also a member of the Road Race Committee. He promised to do all in his power to make the two automobile events successful.

J. S. Conwell, the secretary, gave a brief history of what the association has accomplished within a few months. He explained the purpose of incorporation and prophesied greater things for the year to come than has ever before been accomplished.

Conwell will manage the autofest billed to open September 18. His reception last night showed he has the entire support of the association in the task which he has been asked to take upon himself.

MONEY JINGLES.

W. K. Cowan, the treasurer, spoke briefly. He is to be the watch dog of the treasury, which contains more money than it has ever before held. The dealers are satisfied with Cowan because he is one of the most conservative of their number.

Toastmaster Anthony had something breezy to say about each speaker. The toasts were well received, and though some of the jokes were well aimed, each was taken as pleasant repartee for other jests which have been handed out at previous affairs.

The association starts its new year with a large surplus in the treasury. It has outlined for itself several big jobs. The road race will take plenty of money to launch it successfully, but the returns should be large.

It was shown last night that much money must be expended for the autofest, but as it is planned to run the show for two weeks, the dealers hope to secure an even greater gain than from the recent automobile show when more than $2000 was netted.

Reports from the several working committees had been received before the gathering last night. The directors had attended to the routine of receiving and discharging or continuing the committees which the association has had to use in the last year.

There was nothing last night to annoy those who had come to enjoy themselves. The speechmaking was not made tedious or burdensome with lengthy details. Those who talked had boiled down their information into choice pointed remarks that served to give everything necessary for those who want to know what has been done and what the association is planning.

The meetings of the association will be held as usual this year on the first Tuesday of each month. The directors will meet each Monday to discuss the affairs of the association. The incorporation papers should be received this week from Sacramento.

BANQUET NOTES.

The banquet table was arranged to represent the Santa Monica road race course. Around the table was a sand road, with small power poles like those of the Los Angeles-Pacific Railway Company lining the shore leg of the course. Miniature automobiles were racing over the roads, and at one end, representing the dangerous curve, No. 13 had gone into the ditch.

At the upper end of the banquet hall a small stage was erected. One of the interesting sketches of the evening was given by Leon T. Shettler, with Earle C. Anthony as accompanist. Shettler sang a ninety-nine-verse ditty, each verse of which contained a good take-off on the autoists present.

Those present were: Earle C. Anthony, toastmaster; William E. Bush, Ralph Hamlin, J. S. Conwell, Leon T. Shettler, W. K. Cowan, Volney A. S. Beardsley, R. J. Leavitt, Rene Brassy, C. Z. Salling, C. W. Thompson, D. B. Rose, E. B. Smith, P. A. Lord, P. H. Greer, H. Bireley, Harry Olive, Herbert Brown, William Gregory, Mel G. Johnson, Henry I. Fennimore, A. G. Woodill, Harry Girard, Walter Sahling, Robert Atkinson, T. J. Williams, William R. Ruess, P. A. Renton, B. B. Brentner, H. Carson, Dick Ferris, Harmon D. Ryus, Don Lee.

AUTO HILL-CLIMB.

Arrowhead Grade to Be Course for Strenuous Contest Latter Part of This Month.

SAN BERNARDINO, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The directors of the Southern California Automobile Club are arranging a hill climb for some time during the coming month, the run being from Los Angeles to Pine Crest, on the San Bernardino Mountains. The course will be over the Arrowhead-Waterman Cañon road to beyond the hot springs hotel. At Pinecrest Dr. Baylis will act as host, and the hill climbers will enjoy a barbecue.

The automobile club holds its annual meeting on Wednesday, May 12, at which the date for the hill climb will be definitely agreed upon, and details worked out. It is expected that a number of machines will make the run.

Many auto owners in the San Bernardino Valley have signified their intention of participating in the climb.

The completion of the Arrowhead road to automobiles is regarded here as an epoch in the history of the community, as it opens a beautiful mountain drive to autoists.

MAXWELL RUN FIERCE TEST.

TEN THOUSAND MILE MARK SETS RECORD HIGH.

Four-Cylinder Touring Car's Great Achievement Proves Staying Qualities of Nineteen-Nine Motor and Shows Wonderful Possibilities of Late Type Automobile.

When the Maxwell touring car which smashed the world non-stop motor record in Boston was stopped by President Speare of the Automobile Association of America, the car had more than doubled the former mark by running 10,074 4-10 miles. During that long run the motor was not stopped once. From Boston to Worcester, Providence, Newburyport, Nashua, Falmouth and South Framingham, the car sped on over rough and smooth highways.

When the crew started from the Maxwell factory it was with the intention of doing more than 5000 miles. The car behaved so well, and the motor purred so pleasantly at the end of the 5000-mile run, that it was decided to strike for the 10,000-mile mark, which was reached.

Charles J. Glidden, originator of the Glidden tour, rode as observer in the car during the last leg of the journey. Glidden was on the front seat with C. E. Goldthwaite when the run was concluded, and a crowd of enthusiasts saw the finish of the world-record run.

After the conclusion of the severe test the car was turned over to the Massachusetts Technological Institute officials for inspection. To prove the Maxwell was strictly stock the car was disassembled in the presence of an expert committee.

As one of the tests the Maxwell was driven up Corey Hill in Boston, one of the steepest climbs in the city; was stopped on the center of the hill, and started again. The car made good.

That the motor and transmission might be even more thoroughly tested the car was then backed up the steep grade with five passengers. This test was not too severe.

In more than doubling the world's highest non-stop mark, the Maxwell puts the new record at a figure which is remarkable even for 1909 cars. The run throws an interesting light on the possibilities of the new motors which are made more carefully than ever before and whose running powers are smoother.

The gasoline consumption for the record run was 679 gallons, giving an approximate mileage of 14.8 miles to the gallon. This was made in spite of the numerous stops of the car for fuel, oil, and for changing drivers.

The drivers on the record run were C. E. Goldthwaite, Arthur See and Ellery Wright, who worked in eight-hour shifts day and night. The observers were Joseph George, Carl F. Lawrence and Adam Schnieder, members of the Bay State Automobile Association.

START FROM HUB.

Boston has been made the starting point of a 3200-mile automobile tour through Europe, from Glasgow to Naples, by the Motor Touring Club of Syracuse University. The college men will sail on June 25, with their cars, and expect to be home by September 12, making a tour of eighty-one days. They calculate their expenses at about $650 per man.

AUTO FIRE ENGINES.

New Jersey fire chiefs are united in the belief that the fire engine of the future will be of the automobile kind, which can travel to the scene of the fire much faster than the horses now used, and then transfer the driving power to the rotary water pumps and develop a pumping capacity of 700 gallons a minute with a 70-horse-power engine.

INTO THE WILDS.

CHALMERS MAPS RUN TO MEXICO.

FLAG-TO-FLAG TOUR TRAIL NOW BEING BLAZED.

Into New Mexico Starts Car on Strenuous Stunt—American Autos Will Invade the Land of Manana for First Time—Roads Are Rough and Stumpy.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ALBUQUERQUE (N. M.) May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Chalmers-Detroit "Thirty," pathfinder for the Flag to Flag tour from Denver to the City of Mexico, reached Albuquerque this afternoon in good shape, and ready for the remainder of the journey. The car is holding up well, and has given no trouble.

The work of laying out the route for the tour takes time, as many stops are necessary, while the route is mapped and the stopping points are charted. The Chalmers left Santa Fé this morning and crossed a country of half-desert mesa, where the road in places almost loses itself in the sagebrush.

During the run from La Glorietta Pass to Santa Fé on Thursday, the car twice lost the road, and for hours the crew wandered about in the sagebrush, trying to find themselves. The road had become obliterated, and was little more than a cattle trail.

Stumps of trees left standing in the highway made the going particularly rough. The car had to bump over these, and finally was driven out to the main road to Santa Fé, where the going was somewhat better.

Apache range was crossed over a steep grade. After topping Cañon City hill, over a 30 per cent. climb, the motorists were met by a number of automobile enthusiasts from Santa Fé, and were escorted into the city. After a good night's rest the pathfinder went on its way early this morning, and though the road of today was particularly rough in places the car kept moving, and is making a good mileage.

The Flag to Flag tour will start in October from Denver. The automobiles will follow the route now being laid out by the Chalmers-Detroit crew. They will go to the City of Mexico and return. The car making the best score will win the G. A. Wahlgreen trophy, which has been offered for the run.

This tour is the first of the kind ever held. It will mean an American invasion of motor cars into Old Mexico. For the first time in the history of the automobile, a tour will have its terminus in the Land of Mañana.

NEED MORE CARS.

Within a radius of 100 miles of Philadelphia there are seven concerns of note working up to a capacity to produce cars to supply orders received from all over the country. The estimated aggregate output of these concerns will be between 3500 and 4000 automobiles.

Introduction of the New RICKETTS SIX

"I Told You They'd Come Down"

Only $1800 Will Buy This Automobile f.o.b. Los Angeles $1800

This car is developed and placed upon the market to supply the long-wanted demand for a medium-priced six-cylinder car. We have put into its construction the very best materials and workmanship obtainable. This car is built to stand the road abuse under the most strenuous conditions, and is so proportioned that the wear on the working parts is reduced to a minimum.

A Few of the Advantages of Our Cars

No. 1. Three-point suspension which has been fully demonstrated and found to be the greatest advantage in automobile engineering. This avoids any strain upon the crank-shaft bearings of the motor, taking away the strain and spring of the engine base, allowing the car a greater flexibility and naturally a longer life on every wearing part.

We wish to call your attention to the value of our driving construction, in the manner that we distribute the pushing power of this car. From our rear axle a large steel tube is carried to the center of the car, and on the end of this tubing is a 6-inch steel ball which fits in a ball and socket joint, firmly screwed to a pressed-steel cross member of the frame, and into this member the driving power from the rear wheels is transmitted. By the use of this universal drive it is impossible to get any strain either on the axle, transmission, or motor, as one wheel may be allowed to drop into a rut a foot deep, while the opposite wheel may strike an obstruction and raising it above the level, still through the universal drive, the power is equally distributed to the car. Another advantage is that we have a tendency to raise the front wheels permitting us to go through a muddy or sandy road, that could not be accomplished by the ordinary drive, without the use of chains on the rear wheels.

We have several features on this car that have never before been used on automobile construction, as we have placed into its construction all that we have been able to accomplish in our fourteen years as manufacturers of automobiles, together with all the advantages we have been able to obtain from the latest engineering, both foreign and American made cars.

Motor

Our engine and power plant is built complete in one unit, including the transmission and clutch. This power plant is three-point suspension, supported by steel arms in the front end of motor, and a pressed steel cross member, carrying the rear end of the engine, held in position by a large ball (section) universal joint.

Motor is six cylinder, cast in pairs, water cooled.

The crank case is cast aluminum, divided in the center as usual practice; all bearings suspended from the upper half of crank case.

There are four large bearings on the crank shaft, the end bearings are provided with packing boxes, avoiding any leakage of oil. The workmanship and material used in the construction of this motor is the very finest to be found upon the American market, not excluding any.

Each piston has four rings, and an oil ring; bearings are Parson's white brass; bearings in the pistons, or known as the piston wrist pin, bearings are bronze, and in the special construction of this wrist pin, there is twice as much wearing surface as is found in the usual engine practice.

Each valve is constructed in perfect ground fits to the cylinder heads. Exhaust and intake valves are interchangeable, and in a few moments any valve can be removed for inspection, without the aid of tools, more than the ordinary monkey wrench. Size of cylinders 3¾x4 inches. Carburetor and spark plugs on the right hand side of motor; exhaust on left hand side.

Exceptionally large hand hole plates are provided for inspection of the bearings, and are so constructed that repairs to the bearings, or replacing bearings, can be done without removing any other part of the motor.

The oiling system on this motor is undoubtedly the king of all oilers. First, the oil is carried in the lower chamber of crank case, and is drawn from the crank case by a double gear pump and is carried through a chamber cast in the upper half of crank case, and distributed to every moving part of the motor in the form of a stream of oil, and the cylinders are also fed from this same supply pipe, and is thoroughly strained through a series of brass screens and is used over and over again. This oiling device gives two complete oiling systems, the force feed lubrication, and the splash feed, assuring the occupants of the car that the engine has plenty of oil.

Ignition System

Our cars are provided with double ignition system, separate and independent of one another; they are equipped with an imported U. & H. high tension magneto, which is one of the highest priced and best magnetos in the world. A six-cylinder Heinze coil and dry cells are used and storage battery furnished when required.

Carburetor

The Well-Known Stromberg

is three speed selective type sliding gear; gears are cut from the best quality of steel, and are of ample size, mounted in an aluminum case together with a multiple disc clutch, and is absolutely oil tight. Transmission case is provided with a large hand plate on top, permitting a thorough inspection of the working parts.

One of the greatest advantages we have is our construction-accessibility, as any parts can be removed, such as the upper half of transmission case, any bearings in the motor, water pump, oil pump, magneto, cam shaft, rocker arms, valves; any of these parts can be removed in a few moments' time.

Radiator honey-comb Wright cooler.

Dash on Touring Car solid mahogany trimmed in brass; dash on Baby Tonneau and Roadster, mahogany with steel shield cover, following the lines of the radiator.

Front floor boards and front part of body is cast aluminum, screwed together with dash; body is removable without moving floor boards or dash.

Steering gear is worm and secta, very large and powerful gear; steering wheel solid mahogany, spark and throttle control on top of wheel; steering wheel has aluminum webb, column heavy brass tubing.

Frame, pressed steel 4 inches wide, 1½-inch channel.

Front axle I-Beam, 1¾ spindles all drop forged from one solid bar; it has no welded joints.

Rear axle semi-floating nickel steel shafts, hardened and ground outer bearings 7-inch Hyatt roller, inner bearings Hess Bright, bearings on pinion shaft 7-inch Hyatt, with ball end thrust, differential bevel gear; pinion shaft, or rather known as the driving shaft, is inclosed in steel tubing, having a large 7-inch Hyatt roller bearing on each end of shaft; axle is well trussed, and has two [illegible] brace rods, bracing the axle from the spring blocks to the center tubing that carries the pinion shaft.

Brakes are 12-inch internal expanding, [illegible] inches wide, are constructed in a very powerful and simple manner, and are operated by foot pedal and side lever, connected together in one unit, either one performing its duty without moving the other.

Operating levers are finished in polished brass quadrant, the regular H slot.

Front springs semi-elliptic, 37 inches long; rear springs three-quarter elliptic, 45 inches long; all spring eyes are bronze bushed; bushings can be removed in a few moments for replacement, naturally allowing the car to run more silent than the ordinary spring construction. We also have 52-inch rear semi-elliptic springs. These springs are practically flat, assuring the easiest possible riding qualities of either of our spring constructions.

Wheel base 116 inches, wheel equipment 34x3½ inches. Goodyear quick detachable rims.

Running boards pressed steel, very durable and stylish in appearance.

Fenders are made from the best quality of sheet steel, and are inclosed down to the frame, the entire side of the car is closed, from rear fender to front fender, preventing any mud or displeasing appearance to the car.

Touring-car body is a five-passenger, constructed on the latest lines of the day; body is massive in appearance and pleasing to the eye. The construction is of the very best that can be produced, the panel under front seats is finished in mahogany, mahogany strips are used on the tops of tonneau doors, solid mahogany cushion strips, the very best one-piece brass hinges are used, and the latest automatic locks, and in fact the highest priced trimmings made are used on all bodies. They are upholstered in A1 [illegible] class leather, tufted with horse hair spring backs, the cushions are made in the same manner, neatly finished and put together for service. Every body has [illegible] coats of paint, and only the best of varnishes are used.

Our baby tonneau body is built to carry four passengers, and is constructed and completed in every respect as good as the touring car body. Our roadster is also the same class. The roadster is provided with separate seats in front, and a rumble seat in rear, a very stylish and well-made trunk is carried beneath the rear seat. Any of these bodies are interchangeable on the same chassis. Every body is ironed for a top, and are all ironed uniform to one template, assuring that when tops are required, we can guarantee a perfect fit and that all side curtains will also fit.

Equipment

Two large gas lamps, Rushmore pattern, two large oil side lamps, and generator, and one rear light, one large box, with cast aluminum top, large enough to carry tools and batteries, complete kit of tools and tire outfit, six dry cells, horn with brass tube connected to bulb on seat.

Price complete as specified, $1800 f.o.b. Los Angeles.

All models same price.

We guarantee our cars for one year from date of shipment from the factory against defective material or workmanship, and if any parts are found to be defective we will replace them free of charge.

HEAVY WEATHER

E. M.F. MAPPING GLIDDEN TOUR.

LIGHT CAR SPURNS MUD AND SLUSH ON SEVEN DAYS' RUN.

Pathfinder Chugs Over Wisconsin Roads Made Heavy by Recent Rains and Shows no Distress—Beautiful Country Is Mapped Out for This Year's Motor Car Classic.

One of the hardest tasks which an automobile has been given this year is that laid out for the E.M.F. Pathfinder, which must map the route for the 1909 Glidden endurance contest. Over roads deep with mud, and through a country made almost impassable by late rains, the E.M.F. is being driven on the severe task. The route is being carefully laid out and the task of the car will be completed in ample time for the start of America's classic tour in July.

D. H. Lewis, who for seven years has laid out the routes for the Glidden tour, is on the E.M.F. He says the run this year is more severe than ever before. Weather conditions have never been so bad, says Lewis, and the roads are in a worse condition than he has ever seen them.

Exactly seven days were consumed in covering that portion of the route which will constitute the fourth day's run of the tour. Some idea of the obstacles which have to be encountered by the E.M.F. can be gained when it is learned that much of the country is almost under water because of the rains.

The clay roads of Wisconsin have been almost impassable. Many times horse-drawn vehicles were overtaken on the road bogged in places through which the car was sent under its own power. The crew has been obliged to remain at farm houses for days to recuperate and to wait until the rain ceased in order to continue the tour.

According to Lewis only a light car of the E.M.F. type could have hoped to make the journey. Planks had to be used several times when a mud hole was reached to prevent the car from becoming hopelessly bogged.

Near Sparta, Wis., an amusing incident almost put an end to the tour. A high-powered sixty-horse-power car came out from the town to meet the E.M.F. and its plucky crew. The big car turned in the road ahead of the pathfinder, but in making the circle buried itself in the mire. The big car stuck and could not be moved. The E.M.F. could not pass, and itself became bogged as it stood in the road. Horses were necessary to snake both machines from the miry clay.

Indications are that the roads, which are in wretched condition now, will be in shape for the Glidden tour by July. The scenery through Wisconsin will be unsurpassed anywhere in the East. Over a country rich in agriculture and dotted with beautiful farms the cars will tour.

GLIDDEN TOUR.

As the Glidden Tour has been tentatively planned it will cover a period of about eighteen days and a distance of about 2000 miles. This is a little longer in both time and distance than any former tour, and, without being exactly rougher, it will afford a better test of cars under the rules. Denver motorists are raising a fund of $10,000 for the entertainment of the tourists. Charles J. Glidden will accompany the tourists as usual, riding in the pacemaking car.

WOMEN'S RACE.

Permission has been granted by the Fairmount Park Commissioners for an automobile obstacle race to be held by the members of the Movoganto Klaubo, a body of enthusiastic women automobilists.

ROLLS ALL WAY ON HIGH GEAR.

D. B. ROSE CLAIMS A UNIQUE AUTO ROAD RECORD.

When Gear Lever of Elmore Snaps Motorist Drives from Santa Ana to Los Angeles on High Speed Without Changing Gears—Loses Road and Runs Over Watch Dog.

D. B. Rose, manager of the Elmore Motor Car Company, has caught the record-breaking fever. Rose declares he has a record that is unique. He claims to have driven a 1906 Elmore Roadster from Santa Ana to Los Angeles, Thursday night, without shifting gears. Rose had a good excuse for not changing the gears. The gear-shift lever snapped soon after leaving the Orange county town.

Miles away from home, on the country road, Rose, with E. B. Smith of the Elmore concern, seemed fated to pass the night at a ranch house. An examination showed the lever to have been snapped close down to the rod on which the gears slide. There was nothing to do, it seemed, but to roll the car to the side of the road and wait for a tow to town.

A bright idea struck Rose. He would drive to Los Angeles without changing gears. He was in the "high." The Elmore was cranked and the peculiar run was started. While the road was level, and no deep ditches yawned in the path, all went well. If a team was overtaken the Elmore had to be nursed until an opportunity came to pass the horses on the fly. It would not do to drive up behind the team and risk the chance of stalling the motor.

When ten miles had been covered the two autoists were feeling particularly gay. They were making about fourteen miles an hour and stood a good chance to get home by bedtime. For another half hour they rolled on comfortably and then Smith took a notion that he would like to drive.

E. B. Smith is a good driver, but he has a failing. Whenever a chance offers he is sure to miss the road. During a recent run to San Diego, Smith, who had a perfect score to within ten miles of the southern city, missed the road, digressed into the country for forty miles and reached the Coronado late at night with his perfect score shattered.

Again Smith had a desire to rave. Near Downey he made the wrong turn and wound up with his Elmore in the back yard of an angry rancher who was awakened by the howling of the watch dog which Smith had run over.

The Elmore had to stop and it stopped under the rear porch of a walnut grower who does not like automobilists. Smith had to explain while Rose pushed the car backward. Finally the machine was trundled back to the high road and the run into Los Angeles was resumed.

At 10 o'clock at night, after a three hours' run from Santa Ana, the Elmore was driven into the garage on Olive street and Rose and Smith sought needed refreshment. The ride was one of the most unique experiences in the touring history of the two men.

As a result of his drive Rose claims to have made the only run ever made on the "high" from Santa Ana to Los Angeles. His claim will probably hold, and as evidence of the record he offers to show the gear case, which will not be repaired until tomorrow.

RANDOLPH TRUCK.

Schwaebe-Atkinson Motor Car Company Has Agency for Commercial Vehicle for California.

The Schwaebe-Atkinson Company has taken the California agency for the Randolph truck. Three machines have been ordered, and will be here for demonstration June 1.

The truck is one of the largest of the commercial automobiles on the market. It comes with a two and a four-cylinder engine, and can be secured with any style of body, from the light delivery runabout to the steel-covered van for carrying valuables. There is a one-ton truck and a larger car capable of moving several tons.

Robert Atkinson has studied local conditions and believes the West is ripe for a high-grade truck, which will do business at a minimum expense. The Randolph trucks have been thoroughly tried out in eastern cities and is one of the most popular.

There is a field for the commercial vehicle in Los Angeles which has been almost untouched. There are a number of other commercial car agencies preparing to open here.

LIKE FAMILY HOTEL.

Chalmers-Detroit Fitted Up for Long Camping Trips With Many Novel Contrivances.

J. G. Vance of the La Paloma Rancho, in Chichuachua, Mex., has purchased a Chalmers-Detroit "Thirty," which is equipped like a summer hotel. The car has two tops, one for flyabout trips for ranch work and the other to be used for long tours. The automobile was built on specification sent to the factory by the Western Motor Car Company.

All of the seats in the car are detachable. It can be made into a comfortable interior, where meals can be served. The top can be entirely inclosed, and the occupants are protected from dirt or dust. There is a comfortable bed in the car.

For long tours the auto is ideal. It is equipped with a gas tank that can be attached to a camp stove for cooking purposes. There are electric lights inside the coach, which make it a room in which the campers can sit at night and read or chat as easily and as comfortably, almost, as if they were in a first-class hotel.

The car resembles any other Chalmers, only that it has in addition the extra equipment which the owners will use on the long tours.

SIEFERT TO PORTLAND.

Stoddard-Dayton Driver to Pilot Fast Car in Road Races in the North.

Frank Siefert, the local Stoddard-Dayton driver, who drove the Stoddard on its record-breaking Santa Barbara trip Sunday, will leave May 15 for Portland, where he will drive in a series of track and road races.

Norman Church received the first definite information regarding this race in a telegram from Fred A. Bennett, the Portland Stoddard agent, last week.

The road races will be held June 12. There will be an event for cars costing $1650 and under. The distance will be forty-five miles. Cars costing up to $3000 will go over a seventy-five-mile route. The open race will be 100 miles. A small and large Stoddard will be entered. On June 5 there is to be a series of track races to raise money to hold the road event. Siefert will drive in all the races where the Stoddard is eligible.

Immediately after the Portland races Siefert will return to prepare the Stoddard for the Santa Monica race.

The Stearns racer is also in Portland and has been entered in the main event on June 12. The car will be brought here in time for the proposed Stearns-Loco match on July 4. Gordon had the car shipped to Portland for the races there, and it is possible that a new car will be brought here from the factory for the road race.

Autoists are casting longing looks San Franciscoward. Two firms in town are preparing to take a crack at the automobile road record this month.

W. H. Whiting, chief adjuster of the Fisk Rubber Company, is in Los Angeles. Whiting is on a tour of the Coast and will visit all Fisk tire agencies in the West before his return to the factory.

William R. Ruess announces that he has closed a contract with the Pope Hartford Company for 1910. He will have seventy-five cars, and is now ready to close contracts with subagencies.

D. L. Burke and Bill Ruess took parties to the North Baldy country last week in their Pope Hartford touring cars. Ruess went two miles above Old Point Comfort, but found very few trout.

Peerless cars have been sold to H. Newmark, A. J. Stewart and H. Clay Breeden, by the H. O. Harrison Company; Oldsmobiles were sold to the following named persons: Judson M. Davis, Benchley Fruit Company, E. S. Foote, W. H. Ham, Arthur Farrer, Harry D. Pyle and R. G. Simons.

H. O. Harrison left Friday for San Francisco in a Peerless touring car. He will drive overland and expects to reach the Bay City this morning.

All previous sales records for Peerless cars in this territory have been broken by the H. O. Harrison company. Thirty-three Peerless cars have been sold to date, and Harrison's entire allotment has been disposed of. He is taking 1910 orders, as no more 1909 cars are to be had.

The Winton garage reports the sale of a six-cylinder Winton, to W. A. Baughman. A Winton touring car was purchased by J. L. Hancock of Colegrove.

The H. T. Brown Auto Company, agents for Olympic cars, have taken the Stearns' agency. George Barnes will handle the Stearns at the Olympic garage.

BRIGHT SPARKS OF MOTORDOM.

The Berlin (Wis.) Automobile Club has been permanently organized and already has a membership of thirty-five.

The Minneapolis Automobile Club membership has passed the 800 mark and 1000 is hoped for by fall.

Although there are no cabs operating now in Indianapolis, within sixty days there will be three separate lines working, with some twenty or thirty cabs.

The annual hill-climbing contest of the Wilkesbarre (Pa.) Club up Giant's Despair Hill, to be run this year on May 31, is expected to have 135 entries.

A number of members of the Automobile Club of Washington, D. C., formed a dining club under the name of the Non-Skid Club.

More than 111 entries have been received for the Prince Henry of Prussia Touring Competition, which is to be held next month.

The Delaware Automobile Association has decided to hold an endurance run during the latter part of May. The route will probably be to McCall's Ferry (Pa.) along the Susquehanna River.

Unless the driver of an automobile is certain that there is no vehicle close behind him, he should never make a sudden reduction of speed or come to a quick stop without giving a warning signal.

The Quaker City Motor Club has practically completed the preliminary plans for the five-day endurance run from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh and return in June.

BROADWAY CLUB BOUTS.

Four Short Contests Are Scheduled Between Good Scrappers for Wednesday Night.

The Broadway Club will hold its next boxing exhibition Wednesday evening, May 12. The club has greatly increased its membership since the last bouts and the boys are working every day at the club to get into condition.

With the best boys in the club boxing, this looks as though it might be the most interesting card yet pulled off. The bouts are as follows:

Long and Kyle, at 125 pounds.
Clark and Anderson, at 130 pounds.
Jacobs and White, 154 pounds.
Rodney Hill and Jones, 145 pounds.

SHRUBB BEATS INDIAN.

MONTREAL, May 8.—Shrubb defeated Longboat, the Indian, in a fifteen-mile race here this afternoon. Shrubb won by nearly a third of a mile in 1:23:52.

CONCRETE ROAD.

The reinforced concrete road surface of the Long Island speedway, 22 feet wide and eleven miles long, has withstood the action of the elements during the winter, and is in as excellent condition as when used last October.

NIP AND TUCK.

MADISON (Wis.) May 8.—Chicago and Wisconsin opened the outdoor track season with a dual meet here this afternoon. When eleven events had been disposed of, the score was a tie, 49 to 49.

RED ABOVE GREEN.

CAMBRIDGE (Mass.) May 8.—Harvard defeated Dartmouth in the track meet, 79 to 25.

COLLEGE BASEBALL.

NEW HAVEN, May 8.—The game between Yale and Andover at New Haven resulted in the following score: Yale 2, Andover 1.

WORCHESTER, May 8. — Holy Cross lost to Harvard by a score of 2 to 1.

MADISON, May 8.—Chicago beat Wisconsin 5 to 1.

PHILADELPHIA, May 8.—Pennsylvania beat Princeton by a score of 4 to 3.

ANNAPOLIS, May 8.—Annapolis 8, Navy 12.

amateur standing if the other water polo players in a body will do likewise. It is said that many of the local swimmers have tried to keep within the amateur ranks only because they feared that if they admitted their professional standing they would have no one to compete with.

The players in the professional league chiefly would be paid life guards. McCarver is in favor of giving the players a percentage of the gate receipts in order that they would have an incentive to play their best game.

McCarver intends to consult with the managers of the present amateur teams this week and endeavor to effect the formation of a professional league.

Several members of the A.A.U. commission are of the opinion that if the water polo players insist upon working at the bath-houses as life guards and attendants that they might as well meet the issue squarely and declare themselves professionals. There is no odium connected with the professionalism of an athlete, but the general opinion in amateur circles is that it is unsatisfactory to all persons concerned for an athlete to fail to conform to the amateur rules and still endeavor to keep within the amateur ranks.

TURNS "PRO."

Following out a similar plan among swimmers, Frank Holborow, the local swimming champion, who was declared a professional by the local commission of the Amateur Athletic Union, has been proclaimed the professional short distance swimming champion of the United States by McCarver, who probably will look after Holborow's interests in the future. Holborow claims that his time for the 50 and 100-yard races has been beaten only by C. M. Daniels, the national champion, and McCarver believes that the local crack could dispose of Daniels in a match race. Holborow claims to have covered the shorter distance in 25s. and the 100-yard race, with one turn, in 1m. ⅘s.

McCarver says that Holborow will not be deprived of the chance of competing at the Pacific Alaskan-Yukon-Pacific Exposition by the action of the local A.A.U. commission as he will enter the professional championships that are to be held along with the amateur events.

Holborow purposes to tour the country with George Freeth, the crack swimmer of Redondo, who also was declared a professional by the A.A.U. commission, and compete in professional events. Holborow is the only swimmer in the South who has beaten Freeth in the short distances, and Freeth is Holborow's superior in the middle and long distance races.

Holborow still maintains that he was deprived of his amateur standing without sufficient evidence and will appear at the meeting of the registration committee of the A.A.U. Thursday night to endeavor to controvert the charges.

The principal reason for his being "set down" was a letter written by him to one of the beach bath-houses inquiring about a position as a life guard. The Registration Committee claimed that the letter contained an application for a position and thereby showed that Holborow manifested a breach of faith in abiding by the amateur rules.

Holborow, however, claims that he wrote the letter at the suggestion of F. K. McCarver of Venice, who was desirous of getting particulars regarding the life guard positions at the various beaches. McCarver corroborates Holborow's statement and probably will appear at the meeting of the Registration Committee and testify in Holborow's behalf. Holborow probably will not ask for a renewal of his amateur card, but he desires to show that there is no reason for his being "expelled" from the amateur ranks.

Professional swimming races are to be among the features of the sports to be held at Venice on Elks Day, July 17.

REDONDO TEAM.

AFTER THE CHAMPIONSHIP.

The Redondo water polo team intends to make a strong bid for the championship of the Southern California water polo league in order that it may represent the South in the national championships at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition.

Some of the players are at present under the ban of the Amateur Athletic Union but Manager Gulliver believes that his men will be able to clear themselves of the charges of professionalism that were preferred by George Freeth.

The Redondo team won the local championship last year and has not lost a match this season. The loss of George Freeth did not materially weaken the team, as its last game was won against a picked sextette composed of the best players of the Bimini and L.A.A.C. aggregations.

PASSES FOR MINISTERS.

PORTLAND (Or.) May 8.—"For some time I have been thinking about it, and I have at last decided I will give to each minister in Portland a season pass to the baseball games," is the announcement of Judge W. W. McCredie, owner of the Portland teams in the Pacific Coast and Northwest leagues. "I believe they would enjoy going to the games, and are entitled to passes. If they care for them I am going to have them issued."

ST. YVES WINS.

Time for the eleventh mile, 1h. 1m. 49s; and for the twelfth, 1h. 7m. 49s. St. Yves's time for the thirteenth mile, 1h. 13m. 53s, and for the fourteenth mile, 1h. 20m. 7s.

At the conclusion of the fifteenth mile St. Yves led Marsh by a lap and a half, while the Canadian Marsh, was thirty feet ahead of Dorando, Svanborg was fourth, thirty feet behind Dorando. Time for the fifteenth mile, 1h. 26m. 27s.

DORANDO FAGS.

In the last lap of the fifteenth mile Dorando stopped. After a rest of three minutes he again entered the race, costing him third place which went to Svanborg. St. Yves's time for sixteen miles was 1h. 32m. 35s. In the fifth lap of the sixteenth mile, St. Yves again lapped Marsh.

In the sixteenth mile Morrissey collapsed, and was assisted from the track. In the fifth lap of his seventeenth mile, Dorando gave up, but reentered later. St. Yves's time for the eighteen miles, 1:45:21; for nineteen miles, 1:51:46.

In the fourth lap of his nineteenth mile, Appleby fell over in a faint, but soon regained his feet, and was once more in the race. He collapsed again in his twentieth mile, but pluckily resumed.

SVANBORG TOPPLES OVER.

In the fifth lap in his twenty-second mile, Svanborg fainted, but after being soused with ice water, reëntered the race amid a storm of cheers.

St. Yves finished his twentieth mile, leading Svanborg by two laps, Appleby by five laps, and Marsh by an even mile. Crook was fourth, half a lap behind Marsh. Simpson, the Indian, was sixth, a lap behind Crook, and Maloney trailed in seventh place, a lap behind the Indian.

St. Yves, with the race apparently well in hand, finished the twenty-first mile in 2:05:20, and the twenty-second mile in 2:11:08.

RUNNERS EXHAUSTED.

At the twenty-fifth mile, all of the contestants showed signs of exhaustion, with the possible exception of Dorando, who had recovered and was running strong, but under a tremendous handicap from his many halts.

When the pistol announced the last lap, St. Yves plodded along at his steady gait, finishing the race a winner by five laps. The fight for second place brought the crowd, which had increased to 25,000, to their feet, as Svanborg and one of the other starters fought it out inch by inch. Svanborg had an advantage of a lap.

Simpson finished fourth, also falling over at the tape.

Appleby, who finished fifth, electrified the crowd by running his last lap with great speed. He tumbled over at the finish. Dorando also ran his last lap at terrific speed, but finished apparently in the pink of condition.

VICTORY HIS.

WINS LONDON MARATHON.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

LONDON, May 8.—H. Barrett, who finished nowhere in the Olympic Marathon last summer, today defeated a string of sixty-eight competitors over the full Marathon distance of 26 miles, 385 yards, in 2:42:31.

The race was under the auspices of the Polytechnic Harriers for a trophy. The competitors were all amateurs, and represented most of the nations of Europe. Barrett is a member of the Polytechnic Harriers. The first men home were Britishers.

"I Want to See Those '$10,000 Man Made' $15 Suits at $15

—that advertisement sounded good to me. If it had read $20.00 SUITS AT $15.00 I wouldn't be here now," said one customer, a cool, level-headed business man who was on the third floor the other morning.

$20.00 Suits at $15.00—wouldn't appeal to him. Why?

$20.00 Suits at $15.00—ought logically to be the stronger statement of the two, and yet it would be the weaker. Why?

$20.00 Suits at $15.00—should appeal to business men quicker than to any other class, for business men are quick on an investment that pays 25 per cent. Yet $20.00 Suits wouldn't strike this business man as a good investment. Why?

—There is something wrong somewhere—

—Real $20.00 Suits at $15 are investments no man should overlook—but real $20.00 Suits at $15.00 are not obtainable every day in the year. The 25 per cent. dividend-paying investments come few and far between—so do the real $20.00 suits at $15. Yet nearly every day one reads announcements of sale after sale, holding forth inducements of similar values.

This business man saw the fallacy.

Hundreds of other men have seen it and recognized it, and acted by ignoring sale after sale, by negatively giving the greatest of arguments for honesty in advertising.

This store is just as eager as can be to provide $20.00 values at $15.00, and will do so whenever it can; but when you read $20.00 values at $15.00 at Bullock's rest assured that the values will be $20.00 values worth coming fast and far to share.

In the meantime the business methods which we have made our own, demand the that money can buy—that brains and genius and knowledge can contrive.

We resolved to specialize on $15.00 Suits for Men to Sell at $15.00.

We went to the best clothing makers in the world, solicited their aid and co-operation—consultation after consultation toward gaining the one end—that of getting

The Best $15 Suits for Men That Could Be Made to Sell at $15

And finally we got at the very heart of things, aroused the interest of the designer himsel "$10,000 man"—got him up to the top notch of enthusiasm—and how resultfully is show the values.

Probably you've seen some of the suits that have been making such a stir already. Each seems to get better than the last.

We're enthusiastic because we've a right to be. Remember Bullock's.

Monster Steelhead Trout Caught by Thomas McD. Potter in the Lower San Gabriel River. The fish was twenty-three inches long and weighed four and one-half pounds.

TROUT FISHING.

MONSTER STEELHEAD CAUGHT BY POTTER.

A TWENTY-THREE-inch steelhead trout, the largest catch of the season, was landed by Thomas McD. Potter in the lower San Gabriel River during the week. Potter returned to this city Friday night after passing several days in whipping the San Gabriel, and says the fishing is better than it has been for several years.

Potter's big catch was landed after a ten-minute struggle, after he had pulled it out of a couple of tight places, and finally stranded it on the beach. The catch was made above the Santa Fé bridge.

As soon as the fish was hooked it made for the rocky bottom, but by heading it down stream Potter got it out into the open and began to pull it up the beach. When the trout felt the smooth bottom it put up a terrific fight, but it was well hooked, and Potter succeeded in getting it up the beach.

Inside the fish were a couple of quarter-pound trout, which it had swallowed almost intact.

MANY LIMITS.

Limit catches of trout were made by several anglers at all of the favored haunts of the mountain-stream fighters last week, and the partial subsiding of the high water that filled the streams on the opening day of the season was much more favorable to the fishermen.

Fred Hartman and S. K. Edwards of Los Angeles, with two companions, fished Friday morning at Cook's Camp, above Fellows's Camp, and made limit catches. Fourteen persons from Los Angeles went up the San Gabriel on the stage yesterday morning, and about thirty have made arrangements to go up this morning. Row Sanderson and Dr. Tibbetts went up the river Friday night.

"Billy" Boyle made the best catch of the season at Matilija Springs last week, landing a limit creel, which included twenty-nine trout that averaged twelve and one-half inches in length.

John Clarke went up to the head of the Sespe River Friday night for a two days' outing. The fishing in the Sespe is reported to be good, although the water is said to be higher than it is elsewhere.

BEACH FISHING.

Fair catches of surf fish were made during the last week at the beach resorts by local fishermen, the only unfavorable reports being received from Avalon, where Pat Gray says the surf fishing is the worst he has seen for several years. He believes a little warm weather will bring the small fish into the surface water, and that the angling for the big fellows then will improve.

Yellowfin, croakers, perch, smelt and kingfish were running in fair numbers at Ocean Park last week, and the fishermen believe the angling will be good as long as cold weather does not chill the water. Many good catches of kingfish were made.

A large variety of small fish were caught at Long Beach. Bass were running strong at Balboa and croakers were landed from the pier. Barracuda were caught from boats outside.

Halibut have been running at Sunset Beach and good catches of surf fish have been made.

MORE IDEAS.

MODELS OF AIRSHIPS RECENTLY INVENTED.

A. O. PAULSON of No. 1349 South Westlake avenue has constructed a model of an aëronef which resembles a flexible box kite. Believing that the box kite possesses the most stable form for horizontal translation, the inventor has adapted that style and added features that are intended to permit vertical translation.

The plan of the model is very simple. The craft consists of two large rudders, having supporting surfaces. One of the rudders is for the purpose of changing the angle in order to ascend and descend, the other is the steering plane. The propeller and propeller-shaft are also adjustable, to aid in changing the angle of flight and to regulate the speed.

Paulson believes that on account of the design of the craft it is possible to make a machine with 1000 feet of supporting surface that will not weigh more than 500 pounds, including the weight of a fifty-horse-power engine. By using aluminum in the construction of the craft, he believes that the gross weight could be reduced to 400 pounds.

The name of the new model aëronef is the "Gold Bug," and it was on exhibition at the aëro show. Paulson believes a craft built according to his plans would be able to develop great speed, although its carrying capacity would be limited to four or five passengers.

NEW WHALEBACK.

AIRSHIP MODEL IS NOVEL.

W. E. Kent of this city has invented a whaleback airship that is a decided departure from any aërial models that have been constructed in Southern California. Instead of a cigar-shaped gas bag, Kent proposes to use one which will present the appearance of having been sliced horizontally, leaving something like the lid of an old-fashioned soup tureen, minus the handle. This odd-shaped balloon will be placed over a rigidly-trussed frame, the gas within helping to lift the load, while the bottom of the bag, stretched hard, will act as a sort of aëroplane.

The inventor has accepted the Zerbe idea of a gas bag used merely to lighten or balance the load. It is his aim to have the lifting capacity of the gas bag so calculated that it will be within a few pounds of the load, leaving the machine and whatever it carries just a little heavier than air.

The Kent machine is equipped with four propellers, the two acting horizontally, being mounted on universal joints, so that they may be tilted to any angle, right or left, up or down, obviating the need for rudders in turning in either direction.

Two other propellers acting vertically place the machine in the helicopter class. One of these propellers, designed to lift, is placed in the center of the lower surface of the gas bag, and the inventor proposes to use part of the air it set in motion for the purpose of cooling his engines. The other vertical propeller is hung over the center of the gas bag in such a fashion that when a descent is being made it will force the machine downward.

A model of the Kent machine was among the exhibits at the Aëro Club show at Fiesta Stadium.

A. O. Paulson and His Model of Aeronef, with which he expects to fly when he get a big machine built on his new plans.

BIFFS AND BANGS.

Jim Cameron, the long-legged negro fighter who beat Ralph Calloway, another negro, at McCarey's Pavilion last month, has jumped the punching game, and will devote his talents to his old trade of sewer building. He seems to think that there is small chance for a fighter to advance, while as a sewer contractor he can always make a good living and not have his face mashed every month for a few dollars. He has sufficient class as a pug to defend himself in a street fight, and this is probably worth all the time he has devoted to learning prize-fighting.

Jimmy Austin, who is now the champion paperweight of this end of the State, by having defeated all of the boys in his division, is looking for a match with some boy from San Francisco, and may be put on at McCarey's Pavilion within the next month, if a suitable opponent can be found.

Frankie Sullivan is taking things easily at present, waiting for a boy of his class to show up, and is not anxious to tackle Danny Webster, who is too good for him. Webster challenged the winner of the recent Sullivan-Hefron bout, but Sullivan does not want any of Webster.

Martin Hefron seems to have dropped out of the local horizon since he was beaten by both Webster and Frankie Sullivan, and has doubtless gone back to Goldfield to pick up some easy ones. Hefron made a good showing here with Turner, but was outclassed by Webster and beaten by Sullivan.

Jim Flynn's challenge to fight any one at catchweights shows that Jim is always trying to "kid" some one. He is a good fellow, but he should remember that "catchweights" include Jack Johnson, Tommy Burns, Sam Langford and Al Kaufman, among others, and Jim would probably refuse to meet any of these fellows on a winner-take-all basis, which always indicates how much a man wants to fight. Flynn is game enough to fight any of them, but there is little money in it for him to meet the big fellows.

Dave Rennie is anxious to get back into the game again, having recovered from the lassitude caused by a fractured jaw which Frankie Sullivan inflicted on him.

The fight bugs would like to see Young Solomon and Young Kaufman brought together again, for they put up one of the most furious battles ever seen at Naud Junction.

John L. Sullivan is coming back to town to tell the reporters and the press agents how many dubs are now in the ring, as compared with his generation. It will be remembered that Johnny was badly whipped by one of the present generation, who in turn was trimmed to a frazzl by a Los Angeles alfalfa farmer, who had to quit the ring because there was no one that wanted to be thrashed. Johnny makes lots of noise in his old age, and with the present epidemic of sore lips in town he should not try to make people laugh.

AMATEUR BOXERS ENTER.

Los Angeles Athletic Club Expects Forty Athletes to Compete in Championships.

Twenty-one entries have been received for the Southern California amateur boxing championships to be held under the auspices of the Los Angeles Athletic Club at Turners' Hall May 18, 19 and 20, and DeWitt C. Van Court, who is managing the tournament, believes that at least forty boxers will participate in the bouts.

Other athletic contests are to be held in connection with the boxing bouts. The ring contests will be three rounds long, and science will be the only thing that will count in the point scoring. The local Y.M.C.A. is to have representatives in the various classes, and the men will be chosen in try-outs to be held this week.

The entries received up to date are:

The 105-pound class—Roy Snyder.

The 115-pound class—J. Hutchins, S. Levingston, Alfred Jones, Herb Armstrong, Walla Wheeler.

The 125-pound class—Frank McDaniels, E. Clark, Walter Haster, W. Felsman, Charles Boscha.

The 135-pound class—A. Beauchamp, L. O'Neil, Jimmy Hayes, Floyd Webb, Sam Coulter.

Welterweight class—F. Barry, Ivan Kahn.

Middleweight class—Sidney O'Neil, A. Barry.

Heavyweight class—Clark Jorgstorff.

TENNIS TOURNAMENT.

Occidental Students to Begin Play Tomorrow for Individual and Class Honors.

The annual home tennis tournament at Occidental College is to begin this week, and about thirty players from the various college classes will compete for individual and class honors. The intercollegiate team, including three men and two women, also will be picked from the players making the best showing in the interclass tourney.

Garyson Merrill, '10, and Paul Lowry, '12, who have represented Occidental against Pomona and U.S.C. for the last two years, are entered in the tournament, and are looked upon as probable winners in the men's singles and doubles. Merrill won first place in the singles last year. Preston and Lockwood of the freshman class are strong players and are expected to make a strong bid for first honors. Weller, '09; Gordon, '12; Sweet, '11, and McPeak, '12, have had considerable experience and will die hard in the trials.

Eleanor Richards, '12; Aileen Riggins, '11; Edith Osmond, '12, and Louise Chamberlin, '11, seem to be the leading candidates for first honors in the women's events. Miss Richards has been playing the strongest game in informal matches, although Miss Riggins and Miss Osmond are very clever. Flora Clark, '10, who won the individual championship last year, probably will not play in the tournament this year.

PRINCETON, May 8.—By the final score of 58 to 46 points, Yale's track team defeated Princeton this afternoon, after a desperate contested struggle, in which the fortunes of the two teams fluctuated like prices in the wheat pit, with Jim Patten angry. In full, the results were as follows:

BASKETBALL TROUBLES.

Los Angeles Y.M.C.A. Refuses to Play at Orange and Demands Neutral Court.

The Los Angeles Y.M.C.A. basketball team, which holds the championship of the State, refuses to meet the Orange Y.M.C.A. quintette at Orange on account of the poor condition of the court, and unless the Peatlanders agree to play in the local cage or on a neutral court, they will not be given an opportunity to get a crack at the championship.

C. H. Price of the local Y.M.C.A. received a letter last week from H. M. Strickler, chairman of the State Y.M.C.A. basketball committee, advising him to arrange a game with Orange but not to specify where the game shall be played. Orange insists that the local team play at Orange, but the local team absolutely refuses to do this, but as a compromise is willing to play at Long Beach Y.M.C.A., which has, the local team claims, the only indoor court in the South, except the Los Angeles Y.M.C.A. court.

It is said that the Orange court is only fourteen feet high and about one-half as large as the regulation court and that the Peatlanders are so familiar with the place that they have never lost a game on their own floor, although they have not met with the same success in games away from home.

After the local team won the State championship from the Stockton Y.M.C.A. at San Francisco, it was instructed by J. Gossman of the A.L. and A. that it should play Orange Y.M.C.A. at Orange, and the Peatlanders have been trying to hold the local team to this ruling. W. A. Reynolds of the Los Angeles Y.M.C.A. claims that this ruling was unfair, for in case the Stockton team had won it it could not have been required to play the Peatlanders at Orange.

If Orange agrees to play at Long Beach, the Los Angeles Y.M.C.A. will at once enter into arrangements for a championship match to be played this month.

SENATORS WIN BY SLUGGING.

oth Brown and Hosp Are Touched Up Frequently.

eall Hits Doubles Against the Far Fence.

ig Crowd of Fans Sees a Pretty Contest.

Sacramento, 3; Los Angeles, 2.

Dummy base running probably beat · locals yesterday as much as anyng else, but as there is always supsed to be some excuse for a beating · any team, this one is as good as y other. There was a little luck xed in with it, however, but as s butts in on everything you cant exactly blame it on that. The s off Brown and Hosp were pracally the same but as things broke ter for Brown his victory must be s to the fact that he had the Indian n on Dillon.

Hard hitting and beautiful fielding re the features of the game, which s witnessed by a large and enthusiic crowd of fans, kept busy every nute on account of the close score. ward made the only error of the ne on a boot of a grounder in the t inning, but as the batsman was ght between bases a moment lathe blunder cut no ice. Every one the players was on his toes from rt to finish and the big crowd had the excitement it wanted.

Umpire McGreevy was a trifle off or on a few of his decisions and ne of the fans thought that one of se in the third inning helped the ators to one run they might not e secured. Zamlock was on third e when Brown smacked a long fly right field and he left the base bee the ball was caught by Beall dashed home with a run, but as Greevy did not see the trick he ld not decide against the runner. s might or might not have made ifference in the score but there is ays a bunch of rooters there with big thought that every little g changes a ball game. McGreevy robbed Zamlock out of a hit in ninth inning by calling a bounce oul that Jud Smith trapped in fair ind, but umpires make errors the e as players. Two examples of k coaching at third base also ht have changed the result but hard luck stories are generally tiresome as the good tales.

POOR HEAVING.

either Hosp nor Brown heaved very d ball, as far as swats were coned, for each was soaked a dozen s, but those off Hosp came at the t time. Zamlock opened the inning with a swat to field, and Graham fold with one to right which sent lock to third, and he scored on wn's sacrifice fly to right, after ing the bag before the ball was ght. Graham ran to third on the and scored on Doyle's fielder's ce to Howard, who tried to throw am out at the plate, but failed. final run started with Brown's le to right, and ended with Shinn's ifice and Flanagan's double to t.

the fourth, Beall doubled high up he left fence, and then, after Howhad fanned, the Slugger tried to e from second on Smith's drive to t, but was out by twenty feet. h opened the seventh with a single ight, went to second on Delmas's , to third on Dillon's out, and to plate on Hosp's scratch bounce hit the pitcher. In the eighth, Beall bled against the right field fence, scored from second on Smith's nce hit over Brown.

e hitting of Hosp was the feature he game, for in four times at bat smacked out a double and three les, and Smith also shone with singles out of four times up. nagan and Godwin had fine assists he plate from the outfield and in infield Raymer, Smith and Howpulled off many pretty plays. If fans think Graham has a weak n, some one is crazy.

COLLEGE GAME.

ANOTHER GAME TO BE PLAYED.

HIGHLANDERS AND QUAKERS EACH HAVE VICTORY.

Whittier Defeats Occidental in Ten-Inning Game Characterized by Timely Hitting and Occasional Pretty Pieces of Fielding—Lockwood Strikes Out Eight.

Whittier College, 5; Occidental, 4.

After tying the score in the ninth inning, the Occidental Tigers were beaten by the Whittier College baseball team in the tenth inning of one of the most closely contested intercollegiate games of the season yesterday afternoon at Highland Park.

The Quakers showed unexpected strength, and by walloping the ball at the right time batted out the runs that won the game. The home team outplayed the visitors in the field, but they could not hit Short safely when men were on the bases.

The Quakers made their killing in the fifth inning, when they started a batting rally that drove Patterson from the box, and, supplemented by an error, gave them three runs. They added another run after Lockwood went in the box. The Tigers made their first tallies in the eighth, and added two more in the ninth that tied the score, but "Big" Renneker landed on Lockwood for a two-bagger in the tenth and scored the winning run on an error. Blount killed the Presbyterians' hopes in their half of the tenth by squeezing Sweet's foul fly with two men on bases and two out.

The Renneker brothers led the batting for the Quakers, "Big" Renneker coming through with a two-bagger and a three-bagger, the latter hit scoring two runs. "Little" Renneker got three singles.

"Little" Renneker made a circus catch of Johnson's liner in the eighth inning and accepted nine chances without an error. Blount played a good game at first. Preston played gilt-edged ball on the initial sack, handling everything that came his way.

Patterson was pitching a steady game until the Quakers landed on him hard in the fifth inning. Lockwood replaced him in the middle of the period, but the Quakers added another tally to their score before the end of the inning. Lockwood was a puzzle to the Quakers, striking out eight men, but they managed to find him when they needed a run.

The Quakers scored the first run of the game in the fifth inning, Feeler walking and scoring on Pickett's single. With Pickett and "Little" Renneker on bases, "Big" Renneker rapped out a three-bagger. Lockwood replaced Patterson in the box. Blount hit to Sweet, and Renneker was safe at the plate on a close play.

The Tigers' runs in the eighth and ninth resulted from hits and errors, Sweet figuring prominently in the batting.

"Big" Renneker made the winning run in the ninth, hitting for two bases and scoring on McKenney's failure to handle Blount's difficult grounder. The score:

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CLAREMONT, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Pomona Preps won from the U.S.C. Academy nine on Alumni Field this afternoon, 13 to 6. Pomona won by consistent work in the field, supplemented by fair batting. U.S.C. could not hit, and made fifteen errors to Pomona's four.

Pomona's big inning was the fifth, when with three men on bases and one out, Stelzner's two-bagger scored three runs. Three more tallies came in before Miller was out at first, stopping the slaughter. Daniels fanned eleven men. Score:

ENLOE POUNDED.

POLY BEATS LONG BEACH.

The Polytechnic High School baseball team defeated the Long Beach nine yesterday afternoon by the score of 11 to 4, on the Long Beach diamond.

From the first Poly seemed to have things all their own way, and it was not until the ninth inning that Long Beach managed to bring in a single score. Thompkins, the Polytechnic pitcher, was in excellent condition and put up a good game, fanning eleven men and giving no bases on balls, and during the whole game allowed Long Beach only six hits. Enloe, the Long Beach man, was touched for fifteen hits, walked two men and fanned six.

In the seventh R. Pierce, Pratt, Sebastian and Thompkins scored, Pierce and Thompkins getting in three-baggers. In the ninth Bibo brought in a homer that scored three runs. Young Coughan Fulton and Peterson scored for Long Beach in the ninth.

YOUNG SAINTS WIN.

BAD ERRORS BEAT GRIEFERS.

The cub team of St. Vincent's College defeated the San Diego High School team yesterday on the St. Vincent's grounds by the score of 3 to 2, in eleven innings, the Griefers losing through costly errors in the eleventh. It was a fast and snappy game, full of pretty plays, and should have been won by San Diego on the pitching alone, for Anderson held the Saints to three singles, and struck out fifteen batsmen.

San Diego scored in the first through an error and a two-bagger, and the Saints tied this in the fourth on an error and three stolen bases by Brady. There was no more scoring until the eleventh, when San Diego made one run and the Saints two.

This was the final game of the season for the young Saints, and their record is twelve victories, three defeats and one tied game.

BILL REIDY MANAGER OF OAKLAND TEAM.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Bill Reidy, with the Oakland Club two years ago, as a pitcher and before that one of the leading twirlers of the New York Giants, has been selected to manage the Oakland club. Reidy will not assume control until Tuesday, but when he does go on the bench he will be in absolute authority. There will be no divided management as has been the case since the first of the playing season, when it was announced that Van Haltren and Bernie McCay would divide the responsibilities.

The Oakland owners, with a team that has been continuously losing games, have concluded it is high time to make a change.

Reidy has no definite plans as to what he will do. In fact, the deal by which he was made the manager of the club was only concluded this afternoon.

"I will be on the bench in uniform," said Reidy. "Whether I will do any playing, depends. I expect Van Haltron will remain with the club, although I have not had a talk with him as yet. I would like to keep him. I am going after some new men and we hope to win a few games from now on. At least we will be fighting all the time."

LONG FARMS PITCHER.

Danny Long has loaned Pitcher Joel Berger to the Tacoma club in the Pacific Northwest League for the balance of the season. Berger will revert to San Francisco in the fall.

"Berger has given me good service and improved very rapidly," said Long. "I have been well satisfied with his work, but I have so many pitchers that I could spare him and I thought it would be better for Berger to have that experience. He is satisfied with the change and will leave at once."

Touring Car Tops $50

It has always been a question among the Automobile Trade about having the people come down onto Los Angeles street, among the carriage trade, for a top or anything pertaining to the business. I can only say that the people who have set up that argument have never sent out the right invitation to the customers. When you tell a man that you make a first-class automobile top and sell it for $50, and show him beyond any question that you make good every time, he will not let the location and distance enter the question. And evidently it does not take a very elastic imagination for them to see that they have to go to the carriage trimmer to get the result. M. L. MORAN, 154-6 N. Los Angeles St. Phone Main 5416.

FOR FAIRNESS.

GIVE AUTO DRIVERS THEIR JUST LEEWAY.

BY LEON T. SHETTLER.

EVERY few days some misguided, pessimistic writer takes a fling at the automobilists through the columns of our local papers. I would like to point out a few facts, which can be readily verified and might tend to soften the criticisms of these self-imposed critics.

With a population of 300,000, Los Angeles pleads guilty of over 5000 automobiles; one to every sixty inhabitants. There are about 80,000 registered voters in this city, or one automobile to every sixteen voters. Practically every owner of an automobile is a man of some little influence, is a taxpayer and an employer of labor. They are, almost to a man, registered voters. It may readily be seen from these figures that the automobile owners of this city could be an important factor in politics, should they so desire.

Automobiles outnumber street cars over five to one and I defy any one to show statistics disproving my assertion that there have been ten people killed by street cars to one via the automobile route, and the list of injured would easily be twenty-five to one for a period covering the last three years.

The automobile is not a fad. It is a necessity. Hundreds of business men are using them in the city. Business men will tell you that they are cheaper than horses, and that they absolutely could not do their work without them. It is an accepted fact that a salesman can cover two and one-half times as much ground with an automobile as he can by using the street cars, or with a horse and buggy. I maintain that automobiles are doing more actual good for Southern California than any other commodity sold on this market. They were the direct cause of our good roads movement, and they have been the means of bringing the different towns and cities much closer together. They have enabled thousands of strangers to see more of our beautiful country. More well-paid, skilled mechanics are brought into Southern California by the automobile industry than all other trades combined, excepting those trades dependent upon building operations.

Automobiles do not injure our pavements.

Automobiles do not deposit filth in our streets.

Automobiles do not make dust; they simply scatter it after the horses and wagons have done their work.

Try and picture to yourself, some future day when all of our streets are paved, and all of the horses turned out to pasture. Then let our street department give our pavements just one thorough cleaning, and the net result will be no dust, and practically no street repairs. Believe me, the time is not far distant when all these things will be realized. It takes no great stretch of imagination to see the handwriting on the wall.

Of course, all of these advantages cannot be brought about without some inconvenience to the general public. The railroads, steamboats, telephone, street cars and bicycle have all passed through that very unpleasant stage of their progress that the automobile is passing today. The only consolation that we can offer our critics is that while they may have to brush the dust from their eyes and step lively while crossing the streets, we, on our part, are spending our good money for the purpose of developing the greatest of modern inventions, which will be the indirect cause of bringing money into the pockets of every inhabitant of Southern California.

I leave it to your own sense of fairness if it is not punishment enough for us to be registered and carry a tag like a dog, hemmed in by automobile laws made by backwoods statesmen with about as much knowledge of the subject as a hog has of philosophy, and followed around like a horse thief by over-zealous motorcycle cops, without being cussed and discussed by every gloomy Gus who imagines he has a grievance.

Cheer up! Give us fair play. Why should we be expected to keep inside a twelve-mile speed limit and allow street cars to overtake us and cover us with dust?

Whoever heard of a motorman being arrested for exceeding the speed limit? Whoever heard of a motorman being held for trial by a Coroner's jury? Whoever heard of a motorman being thrown into jail for thirty-six hours, after being unfortunate enough to kill one of our fellow-citizens? I might say, further, who ever expects to hear of anything like this happening to a motorman? This simply could not happen to one of the valued employés of a great street railroad corporation. What's the answer? Simply this: the street car is an accepted fact.

Why not give us a fair trial? We are not only prosecuted, but we are persecuted. Take off the speed limit and make each man liable for his accidents. France is the father of the automobile, and that is the way they control the situation; that is the law in New York City, and that will be our own law before many months because it is the only just plan that has ever been devised to control the situation.

We, as automobilists, are here to stay, and you may as well make the best of it. I suggest that our police department put a little more energy into breaking up the gangs of highwaymen and burglars that are terrorizing the city and let the "death-dealing speed maniacs" take a much needed rest.

A few less inoffensive drunks and speedsters, gentlemen, and a little more real police work would not be out of the way. I wish to call the police department's attention to the fact that more people have been killed by highwaymen than by automobiles in this city in the last twelve months.

I will volunteer to show the Chief of Police inside of two hours any afternoon this week fifty horse-drawn vehicles deliberately violating the traffic ordinance. I am also prepared to show him that every street car entering the congested district of Los Angeles willfully violates the traffic ordinance at least ten times in every mile it travels. I ask you why we are expected to obey your traffic laws and all other vehicles that use the streets are immune from arrest. I ask you why your police department collects more fines in one month from the automobile drivers than they have collected in the last five years from the drivers of delivery wagons, who are, without any question, the worse violators of our traffic ordinance.

There must be some reason why these things are so, and we want to know just where we stand. We have been the "fall guy" long enough, and have stood this kind of treatment without a word of protest. We are getting weary, however; we are not children, neither are we criminals. Give us a square deal, or at least tell us why you cannot do so. If the present traffic ordinance is satisfactory to the public, then we ask you to make every driver of a horse-drawn vehicle, every motorcyclist, every bicyclist and every street car obey it to the letter. We not only ask this but demand. If you do not do this, you have no right whatever to expect automobilists to pay any attention to your traffic laws.

The War of the Revolution started over "taxation without representation," and this was considered amply sufficient to provoke hostilities at that time. Do not push us too far. You know very well that we can clog your police courts with cases that you could not dispose of by working twenty-four hours a day if we wanted to show the public just how absurd your traffic laws are. Class legislation is a dangerous weapon in the hands of a careless police force.

Just a word in regard to our State laws. We would like to ask any fair-minded man why in the name of common sense automobilists should be taxed for the privilege of using our highways and forced to carry lamps, front and rear, while horse-drawn vehicles, delivery wagons, trucks, bicycles and motorcycles are allowed to roam around the streets without a single penny of taxation? We ask you if there is anything fair or just in a law of this kind.

In conclusion, I wish to say that even if the above protest does us no material good, I have had at least, the satisfaction of expressing what I earnestly believe to be the candid opinion of practically every motorist of Southern California.

HANDSOME TROPHY.

The Robert Guggenheim trophy cup for the New York-Seattle contest is being made by a San Francisco firm, and will be very unique. The trophy stands forty-two inches in height and will cost, it is stated, $2250. The gold cover represents the northern hemisphere, on which, poised on a flying wheel, is a figure of Victory, draped with a banner bearing the words "New York to Seattle." Polar bears, suggestive of Alaska, are shown at the base of the hemisphere. Immediately underneath are four panels encircling the cut. In the panels are views of Seattle and the exposition grounds.

SAVANNAH RACE.

The Savannah Automobile Club has requested the Automobile Club of America for early advice as to whether another Grand Prize Race is to be held, and if Savannah will be the scene of the event. Not until the A.C.A. is heard from will the Savannah club take any further steps toward the race.

HIGH SCHOOL GYM CLUB.

The Los Angeles High School Gymnasium Club is practicing daily under the direction of Dr. Beach for the annual contest with Polytechnic High School, which is to be held the latter part of this month. Fifteen men are members of the "gym" club, and as the representative team only will include five performers, the competition for places is keen.

AQUATIC TOURNAMENT.

The Southern California Swimming and Athletic Association of Venice is planning to hold an aquatic tournament and field day the latter part of this month. The organization now has a membership of 12[illegible], and includes several swimmers and track athletes of high rank.

W. C. Walker, the Pope, Hartford factory manager, left Thursday for San Francisco, Portland and Seattle.

The Daily Progress, Pomona, March 8, 1909: "Will be of great value to automobile users. Drivers unfamiliar with the road will have no difficulty in finding their way with Thorpe's guide."

$100 REWARD!

To the Person who will Get the Stearns to Race The Locomobile 500 Miles for $5000 or $10,000 a Side.

THE beaten Stearns is trying to get a little notoriety by allowing the report to be published that Locomobile had agreed to race Stearns 100 or 500 miles.

We will give $100 in gold coin to any person who will get the Stearns people to race Locomobile 500 miles for $5000 or $10,000 a side, real money. Locomobile beat Stearns at the latter's chosen distance—150 miles—and stands ready to repeat at 500 miles.

The Stearns doesn't want to race; it doesn't dare to go the distance. It will not risk any money on such a race, though it might chance a silver dollar on its ability to finish inside of twenty-four hours, but that would be its limit.

Last Monday Mr. Leavitt, the Locomobile agent, accompanied by representatives of the three morning papers, called on President Gordon and Manager Salling of the Stearns company, with a certified check for $5000 and $5000 more in currency, and demanded that they either put up or shut up. After considering the matter for eight hours the Stearns people backed down completely, though they were offered the privilege of having a professional driver. No more jellyfish on our plate, please.

WE ARE WILLING TO GIVE THE STEARNS A RETURN RACE, BUT WE WILL NOT HELP THE STEARNS TO WIN CHEAP NOTORIETY BASED ON REPORTS CALCULATED TO DECEIVE THE PUBLIC.

MUCH SPOONING DISGUSTS COACH.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BLOOMINGTON (Ind.) May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Too much "lovey-dovey" business is hindering athletics at Indiana University, according to the opinion of Coach "Skel" Roach of the varsity baseball team. The veteran player looks with disgust on the "lady fussers," especially when they try to be athletes at the same time.

"I attribute the lack of spirit in the university to the girls," said the coach. "This 'lovey-dovey' business attracts the men away from the diamond and athletic fields, and they become more interested in girls and dances. The girls, it seems to me, ought to be the ones to encourage the men to come out and try for the team. Girls are all right to have in a university, but they should not be a detriment to the good of the school along athletic lines."

Coach Roach spoke his mind after Indiana had gone down in defeat 7 to 2, before Purdue, her old rival.

BIKE RACERS.

and the men have been circling on the narrow strips with remarkable steadiness. Only about an inch intervenes between the front wheel of the paced riders' bicycle and the rear guard of the pacing machine, and he is able to reel off lap after lap without perceptibly changing his position.

The two-mile lap races, in the professional and amateur classes, are expected to be hard-fought all the way, as in addition to the regular prizes, bonuses are to be given to the riders who are leading at the end of each half lap. The men who may not figure in the final purses may be able to break into the money by timely sprints at the half-way stations.

The half-mile races in both classes are to be run in heats, the first three men in two trials to qualify for the finals. A mile novice event will open the meet. Six local riders have entered this event.

Manager Pickering purposes to hold races every Sunday for about a month, and then to conduct two meets each week. An exchange of riders with the Salt Lake City and Oakland tracks is to be made, so that competition will be stimulated by the new material.

The first five men to finish in professional races are to receive cash prizes from $40.00 to $5.00 and the amateurs will receive prizes about half in value to the "pro" purses. The winner of the novice race is to receive a $10.00 medal.

SAN GABRIEL SPORT.

AZUSA, May 8.—Reports from the fisher-folk in the San Gabriel Cañon indicate that the sport is excellent. Last year the river was too low for good fishing; this year it is in fine condition. Last year was, however, an exceptional year for breeding, and there is now a large number of small trout in the stream. This is the only drawback to the sport at present, as the more active "small fry" grab the hook before the larger ones get a chance, but it will make fine fall sport.

The average fisherman has no trouble in catching the limit of fish from ten to fifteen inches in length. The two best catches of the season were made by Mrs. Arthur F. Leavitt of South Pasadena and J. B. Cook of Los Angeles. Each caught a trout eighteen and one-half inches long. Mrs. Leavitt's specimen, which weighed two and one-half pounds, was sent by her to Los Angeles to be mounted.

The camping season opens with excellent prospects. There are twice as many people at Rincon this season as there were last year at this time. The air in the cañon is clear and bracing, with no sign of the cloud and fog which has so distressed the people of the lower altitudes.

AUTO CLUB BANQUET.

The annual meeting and banquet of the Automobile Club of Southern California will be held Wednesday evening at the Westminster Hotel. Members who will attend are requested to notify the secretary, Charles B. Hopper, in advance.

ROADABILITY RUN.

Of the sixty-nine cars that left Philadelphia on the roadability run of the Quaker City Motor Club to Atlantic City, sixty-five checked in at Atlantic City before sunset. Prizes were presented to each entrant that finished by the Mayors of the two cities.

GOOD ROADS.

Experiments which are being conducted by the Department of Agriculture are proving conclusively the great value of oil as a road builder. Cars run at high speed on ordinary macadem roads tear the surface severely, whereas they barely affect those that have been oiled.

AUTOS SAFEST.

From January 1 to April 10, 1909, the police records show that in New York City there were 434 vehicular accidents. Of these 162 were due to street cars, 102 to wagons, and ninety to automobiles. The remaining were by horse-drawn trucks, cabs and trains.

TOUR TO SEATTLE.

It is possible that a party of Los Angeles motorists will make the run to the Seattle fair this summer. William Ruess is planning a tour, which will include a party of Pope-Hartford owners. The start will be some time in August. D. L. Burke has already expressed his intention of driving a Pope-Hartford to the fair, and Ruess says there are numerous other owners who would join a party tour.

Thin as a Knife.

"My dear," said a thin little Brighton man to his wife, "this paper says that there is a woman down in Devonshire who goes out and chops wood with her husband."

"Well, what of it? I think she could easily do it if he is as thin as you are. I have often thought of using you to peel potatoes with."

The thin man laid down his paper with a sigh that sounded like the squeak of a penny whistle.—[Tit-Bits.

Over [illegible] people have seen this sensational success and still the Belasco Theater is too small to accommodate the crowds that demand a chance to see what is unquestionably the greatest play that has been written during the past 20 years.

THE DOLLAR MARK

This is the Great Broadhurst play of conditions as they exist in America at the present time—it is positively the most remarkable play that has been written since "Uncle Tom's Cabin"—had it been written two years ago it would unquestionably have upset the financial situation in this country most completely—every business man declares it to be the truest revelation of financial conditions he ever saw—every banker declares "THE DOLLAR MARK" to be startlingly true in all of its details—every workingman and woman sees in it the hope for better conditions—EVERYBODY WHO SEES "THE DOLLAR MARK" IMMEDIATELY BECOMES ITS GREATEST ADVERTISER—the ten big weeks of this big play—its 100 performances at the Belasco Theater—have only been possible because "THE DOLLAR MARK" is A PLAY FOR EVERYBODY.

The Belasco Theater has been crowded to the doors every night since the first performance--this means that the play-goers of Los Angeles appreciate that they are seeing the greatest play of the decade. Seats are now on sale for the 10th big week.

Regular Belasco prices prevail for "THE DOLLAR MARK." Matinees Today Thursday and Saturday, 25c to 50c. Every night this week, 25c to 75c.

Chorus Beauty

as it is to be observed in the contingents at Hamburger's Majestic and the Grand Operahouse. Can you tell where they belong?

TOPICS OF THE STAGE.

By Julian Johnson.

No matter how the grand classics rear aloft in the autumn, or how realism puts on her deadly straight-front effect in winter, the props of the drama are shapely enough at this time of year; to the amusement hunter it is the open season of the chorus girl.

The chorus girl lives in her own little world, governed by original laws, smiling acidly about her own little prejudices, and having joys and sorrows, ambitions and defeats which none of the rubicund joke-pens ever recount or even hint.

And how the chorus-girl loves her sister chorus-girl in a rival show!

The worst slur—by the way—that can be cast upon a member of the pony avocation is unprofessionalism. Better to have been a regular buyer of dancing slippers since the days of the "Black Crook," than to have just come from the ranks of common toil. Oh, far better!

The other afternoon I sat for a few minutes at a Murray and Mack matinée. There were several Kolb and Dill girls distributed in front.

Near one Kolb and Dill girl sat a Murray and Mack girl who was not working that day. She admired, with professional energy and enthusiasm, everything that her own chorus did.

"Look at that girl on the end," she exclaimed, delightedly to Birdie Talcum of the Majestic, "isn't she the swell dancing kid!"

"Oh, just grand!" purred Birdie, saccharinely, "when I was a little tiny girl in Chicago, my mother took me to a show, and I can remember her, just as well!"

This one passed along, and the next day the two Blackwood frivolities sat together at a South Broadway matinée.

"There she is," muttered the one who had listened—"her that handed the age knock to you yesterday!"

Toosie Tootsie studied hard for a moment. And then she banged one little gloved hand into the other. "Aha!" she hissed. "Now I know where our waitress went when she quit the joint last week!"

Of course these left-handed compliments could not be actualities. It is incredible that the Grand could possibly have a chorus girl beyond her teens, while it is equally beyond belief that the other house would tolerate a creature who ever entered a restaurant by any other than the front door.

As time moves along, with its train cluttered up by the dust of tumbling traditions, the environment of our little animated background changes from year to year.

Not so many administrations ago, the best stage director was a sort of Simon Legree. He shouted his directions—once—in a voice like a Catawillian thunder, and if there were misunderstandings he vented his opinion only in laguage traditionally used before the mast.

Those were the days when David Belasco is said to have made a Zaza out of Mrs. Carter by dragging her from situation to situation only by her tumultouus crimson hair. Now the chorus girl is ruled more gently. Her directors have been known to say "Please," and even a "thank you" or two have been recorded.

Possibly the coming ballet-master will serve ices or tea at all his regular rehearsals, with glaced fruit or chop-suey for extra time.

Like any more modern vocation, the chorus is mostly a serious business.

A good "pony" gets, on this Coast, about $25 a week. But she earns it.

A show girl gets $18 to $20.

The "middles," "fill-ins," or "backline" people get from $12 to $18, according to general usefulness and intelligence.

There is no snap in these days, and likewise very little without actual slavery. A pony girl makes more than a restaurant cashier, but on the other hand, she must devote her entire time and a most astonishing amount of energy to her work. She rehearses a certain time each day—which prevents her from long trips or drives—and she plays at night and at matinées.

Her lobster fighting is done mostly in her songs. If her nights are a-la-Newburg her manager's heart will soon resemble an iceberg—and the tables will be turned. Instead of eating the lobster, she will be a lobster.

The attractions of a chorus girl are animation, bright eyes, youthful contour, a firm figure, and lines that are slender but never indicative of mere thinness. To keep all this, the chorus-girl must rule herself as rigidly as an have a stage director who rounds the shows into general shape, while long, lean, sky-scraping Kolb puts on the final trimmings.

Kolb, with the perpetual cigar driven into his face, stalks about the auditorium, listening, dropping in at moments with a suggestion, showing an inflection, and even indicating a dancing step at times.

At the Grand, Florence Leslie is the beloved of the chorus.

This is a compliment indeed, for choruses usually love their ruler as we used to love our teacher—not!

Florence Leslie is an example of serious purpose and persistent American hustle.

She used to be just a little pony girl, and pony youthfulness and nimbleness are still hers. But she was so ambitious that she invented steps, and got off in corners to think up and practice new figures. And she had another thing—the peculiar magnetism that makes either men or women leaders of their kind. So she came out of the ballet, and became its director. And she is one of the best, and at the same time the kindest and most patient, that the town has ever seen.

But out of all the bunch of tighted gáyety, are there none who keep the tradition of revelry?

Sure! I know half a dozen whose "friends" send automobiles for them precisely at 11. And if these "friends" were killed in collision or other accident some night—oh, what a juicy morsel next morning!

But there are other sorts, quite different.

I know one roguish little bunch of attraction whose husband is also in the same show. They are just finishing the sole support of an aged mother, and a father too feeble to do any work.

And one more, who, notwithstanding a starry pointing foot in the early part of each evening, hurries home afterward to a small eight-months édition of herself, gurgling, cooing or squalling, as the case and the colic may be, for her arrival.

Oh, yes, dispelled illusions! Percy Bronson, who is the candy kid at Hamburger's, climbs over a cluttering pile of mash-notes after each matinée. The other afternoon Bronson heard a louder laugh than usual in front, and there beheld his own little son, delightedly viewing papa's performance for the first time this year.

So you can't always tell. Though Percy looks never more than twenty, and Birdie Talcum not a minute past twenty-and-five, both have decided, lusty and vociferous family interests.

The Gamut Club's presentation of "The Violin-Maker of Cremona" will take place at the Auditorium on Thursday evening.

The cast will include George A. Lynch as Sandro, the lover, while Florence Stone will play Giannina. The principal part, however, is that of Filippo, the hunchback. Eugene Nowland, whose talents are histrionic as well as musical, and who had some coaching in this part from Coquelin himself, will take the role. The situations call for Filippo to play upon his violin. In all known presentations previously, the violin playing has been done off stage, but in the present instance the leading actor will exercise his professional talent and play the instrument himself. Hobart Bosworth will be the fourth principal.

lin renditions by Ignaz Haraldi, and piano music by Dalhousie Young. The Auditorium organ will also be heard.

THE LOCAL WEEK.

It has been some time since members of the Burbank Stock Company have appeared in a New England comedy drama, and the patrons of that organization who find in rural comedy one of their favorite forms of stage amusement will doubtless be pleased with the play selected for presentation this week.

The piece is "Our New Minister," by Denman Thompson and George W. Ryer, co-authors of that most successful of all New England plays, "The Old Homestead." It never has been seen in Los Angeles, chiefly because its ownership has been involved in litigation during the past five years, any public performance within that period having been forbidden by order of court.

"Our New Minister" is said to be a worthy successor to "The Old Homestead," which was the pioneer New England play, and which, in a measure, was responsible for the success that later attended the presentation of such popular rural comedies as "The County Fair," "Way Down East," "York State Folks," and "Shore Acres."

In the Burbank presentation William Desmond will play the title role, the character being that of a young divinity student, whose advanced ideas are not readily accepted by members of his congregation, and who outrages the church gossips by falling in love with the daughter of a former convict. Prominent in the cast are Miss Blanche Giblyn, Henry Stockbridge and Miss Louise Royce.

The Orpheum bill for the new week is headed by a sketch, whose subject matter is so plainly productive of comedy that the wonder is no one has made use of it before. The sketch is called "Awake at the Switch," has to do with the telephone switchboard of a fashionable hotel, and is presented by Margaret Moffat. It is by Sewell Collins, who is said to have written a very clever, laughable and human satire.

Herr and Mme. Sandwina, German acrobats of renown, are also on the bill. Mme. Sandwina also presents Theodore Roosevelt Martin Beck Sandwina, who, considering his six or eight weeks of life, cannot do more than bow. Mme. Sandwina is said to be the gymnastic wonder of the team.

Gordon and Marx have a variety of new jokes in Weberfieldian comedy. Step, Merlinger and King are billed as "premier entertainers."

Holding over are S. Miller Kent, Dunlap, McCormick and company, Lew Sully and Joly Violetta.

"The Dollar Mark" will be played for the tenth week at the Belasco Theater, commencing tomorrow night. This will make the George Broadhurst play leave the Belasco stage next Sunday night with the distinction of having been played for one hundred consecutive times in Los Angeles, an achievement that has never been thought possible in the history of stock companies. For the past six weeks the Belasco management has been announcing positively the last week of the "Dollar Mark," but the demand for seats has been so big that as a simple business proposition, the Broadhurst piece has been kept on from week to week, necessitating the postponement of Florence Reed's first appearance in "Miss Hobbs."

Florence Reed's first appearance in "Miss Hobbs" will take place just as soon as the local public is through with "The Dollar Mark."

"A Night on Broadway," as played at the Grand Operahouse by the Murray and Mack company, has been so popular that the management has determined to continue this three act song show for another week. The musical numbers introduced during the three acts of "A Night on Broadway" are of the sort that the average theater patron likes.

Another of the Murray and Mack successes, "Shooting the Chutes," will be given next week, with twenty-two new songs.

"The Politicians," with C. William Kolb as the ingenious and acquisitive corporation counsel and Max Dill as the Mayor, will continue at Hamburger's Majestic Theater for a third week.

There will be two changes in the cast this week, occasioned by the fortnight. The début of Miss Olga Stech with the company will be postponed until next week, when "Playing the Ponies" will be produced, even if it is necessary to revive "The Politicians" later on.

Joe Flynn, creator of the immortal McGinty whose downward trip to the bottom of the sea made thousands sing, comes to the Los Angeles Theater this week, where he will seek to entertain patrons with a few new parodies, written by himself. Flynn both wrote, composed and sang "Down Went McGinty." He has had many successful songs since that time, but none, of course, which has approached McGinty in popularity.

Carlyle's dog pantomine, presented in connection with "Tom," the "college taught pony," should prove an especially strong attraction for children. The dogs are well trained and their playlet is performed in a special stage setting carried for their use.

Hetty Urma, a male impersonator and character change performer; the Wartenburg Brothers, European foot jugglers, whose work is novel and sensational; Delmore and Oneida, the latter a good to look at young woman who poses upon the top of a balancing perch supported by her partner; Welch and Earl, singers and dancers, and colored travel pictures will complete the bill.

John L. Sullivan and Jake Kilrain will play a return engagement at the Empire Theater this week.

Sullivan has spent the past week in San Diego. His monologue for his return engagement will be different, but the leading feature of his act, the three-round go with Kilrain, will remain.

The Empire bill will also include Houseley and Russell, in a comedy sketch; Hearne and Rutter, in eccentric dancing; Arbuckle and Reed, in a mixture of Irish and German comedy; Al Frank, in a specialty, and new motion pictures.

Manager Pieper of the Walker Theater has brought back Clara Dagneau and her dancing boys to head this week's bill.

The list of numbers also includes Tony Ryder's troupe of educated monkeys; Edytha Taylor, soubrette, with a line of new songs and comedy; Harry Cornell, imitator and impersonator; Miss Alberta Lane, lyric soprano; Ernest F. Allison, in a new musical act, and Joseph Manley, in a new illustrated song.

New motion pictures, both travel and comedy, will be thrown on the screen. J. L. Blair, director of the orchestra, has arranged an attractive programme.

A farce with musical numbers, "Stage Struck," will be given at the Unique Theater this week by the musical comedy company, under the direction of Frank B. Blair.

The plot of the sketch is woven about the amusing objections of one Maj. Dennis Sheridan to the attempt of some amateur actors to give a play.

Will Armstrong will play the fiery Irishman, Jack Martin plays Pygmalion Saunders, Arthur Vane is the languishing lover, and Miss Parker and Miss Atkins have good character roles.

Miss Annie Baumann has returned to the Unique, after a long absence. The programme is opened by illustrated songs, sung by Miss Irene Earle, and with travelogues, by J. P. Wild.

Frank Blair will go to Seattle at the end of the present week, and will take charge of a musical stock company to be formed there.

The Mason Operahouse will remain dark until about June 1, when it will be reopened by Ethel Barrymore and her company, in "Lady Frederick."

The theater will be entirely redecorated meanwhile.

In the Spotlight.

D'Annunzio's new tragedy, "Phedra," has just been produced at Lirico Theater, Milan, Italy, and pronounced a failure.

Louis James will make a big production of "The School For Scandal" next season, Mr. James playing Sir Peter Teazle and Aphie James Lady Teazle.

It is stated on good authority that Oscar Hammerstein has purchased a site in Brooklyn upon which he will commence building an operahouse on his return from Europe, June 1.

Daniel Frohman sailed on April 30, on the Holland-America liner Rotterdam, to take a six weeks' cure at Kissingen, in Bavaria. Later in May Mr. Frohman will be joined by William Gillette and William H. Crane. Next season he will produce two new plays.

The will of Mrs. Vannie F. Allen, who left an estate valued at $100,000 to relatives and charity, ignoring Mme. Nordica and other near relations, was declared valid. This decision does not prevent Mme. Nordica and the others who tried to break the will from appealing to the Supreme Court.

Debussy has declared that his engagements will prevent his going to America on the proposed visit until after next season. Before leaving on his tour of England and Italy, where he will give concerts of his own works, the composer has given orchestral readings of some of his less known numbers.

Mary Garden gives this reason for being a suffragette: "I believe in the ballot for women. Why shouldn't I? I am a professional woman making my own way, and I think if a woman earns her own living and has to meet these issues as men do, she should have every right and privilege that is given to man in the making of laws that affect the working man or working woman in any capacity."

The theaters have a great attraction for the present Princess of Wales, and once she was referred to by King Edward as "our musical and dramatic critic." It is largely upon her report that other members of the royal family decide whether to visit a certain play or not and particularly is this the case with the King and Queen.

An actress in Belgrade accepted the leading part in a new sentimental play, "The Flirt." Her husband, Tosha Premwitch, who was not in the play, killed her and then himself. He left a letter saying that he had already warned her against any too realistic performance which would goad him to a desperate act. So much for realism.

"The Servant in the House," in its Swedish version, translated by Miss Hilda Englund, achieved its first European production at the Svenska Theater, Stockholm, a week ago. The cast included the noted Swedish actor, Svenberg, who is credited with a great success in the part of Robert, the drain man, played here by Throne Power. Thirty curtain calls signified the approval of the audience.

Dr. Ludwig Wullner was a passenger on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, which sailed from New York last Tuesday. Wullner has closed this season six weeks earlier than he expected. His cold and the exhausted condition of his vocal cords made it impossible to continue his tour to the end. He will go to Sicily after arriving in Germany and remain there until it is time to begin his American tour next autumn. He will not sing in the interim.

Although Oscar Hammerstein, now in Paris, is trying to induce André Messager, director of the Paris Opera, to come to America next season as conductor of the Manhattan, a cablegram received in New York on Monday indicated that there is little likelihood that success will crown his efforts. From Paris Mr. Hammerstein announced that he will produce M. Messager's new opera, "Bacchus," in New York next season. The impresario has an appointment to hear Lucille Marcel sing this week, and next week he goes to Berlin. He expects to carry his search for new talent into Africa, for, after returning from Berlin, he will go to Algiers.

For the Sangerfest that is to draw seven or eight thousand male choristers from all parts of Germany to Frankfort-on-Main to sing for the Kaiser's trophy the middle of this month, a jury of ten prominent musicians and critics has been chosen. The Emperor has approved the appointment of Ernst von Schuch, conductor of the Dresden Court Opera; Siegfried Ochs, director of the Berlin Philharmonic Chorus; George Schumann, the composer, director of the Berlin Sing-Akademie; Hans Sitt, the Leipsic violinist; E. E. Taubert, the Berlin composer and critic, whose songs frequently appear on the programmes of young artists eager for good press notices; Dr. Rottenberg, the Frankfort Kapellmeister; also Prof. Hummel of Berlin, Dr. Beier of Cassel, Karl Flesch of Frankfort and Prof. Schwickerath of Aix-la-Chapelle.

Henry Ohlmeyer, energetic Southern California bandmaster, who is now perfecting fine summer organization. Mr. Ohlmeyer has announced several programmes of the highest class for Los Angeles, about the middle of June.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

By Julian Johnson.

The concert of the combined Woman's and Symphony orchestras at the Auditorium on the afternoon of May 21, Harley Hamilton directing, will mark the largest gathering of orchestral players under one baton ever recorded west of Chicago.

Further, as the active force of the Symphony numbers seventy-two, while the regular playing body of the Woman's Orchestra is sixty-four, the total will be 136, probably the largest orchestra heard in this country this year on any occasion.

Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and Arnold Krauss will be the soloists.

The programme will include the "War March of the Priests," from Mendelssohn's "Athalia," the Schubert "Unfinished Symphony" in B Minor, the overture to Gade's "Hamlet," the Chopin "Polonaise Militaire," two Grieg "Melodies for Strings," and in conclusion the overture to "William Tell."

The good will which has been manifested toward the coming orchestral combination has led some of its enthusiastic promoters into music festival speculation.

In the opinion of the writer, this is no time for music festival promotion, but doubtless those who are discussing the matter are doing so with a view toward the future rather than the present, so that it will be all to the good, anyway.

The status of Los Angeles, artistically, is rather peculiar at the present time. Growing by the traditional leaps and bounds, the town has come to metropolitan standing as far as the number and frequency of its artistic attractions are concerned, but the reception of art is still a matter of uncertainty. Some very fine things are accorded all the patronage they deserve. Other very fine things get a welcome that chills. Much that is bad and even mediocre is rejected. Much that is mediocre is acclaimed and taken with open arms.

We are far ahead of other cities of even greater size, but in the matter of appreciative solidity and unfailing surety of taste we have much to learn.

In the main, it is only the old, established town which triupmhs with the music festival. A fine example of the ideal American festival city is Worcester.

In the meantime the orchestral concert is to be commended and should be patronized by every music lover and every one who deems it an educational duty to support art in Los Angeles.

Still another thought on this orchestral event of May 21.

It is not the visit of a band of wandering minstrels, traveling a golden road through the West; nor is it like the triumphal progress of some virtuoso or prima donna, designing to illuminate our obscure corner of the heavens for a paltry thousand or so a night.

This is the presentation of the largest orchestra America has seen this year, distinctly as a home affair.

One may say that almost every man player is a Los Angeles taxpayer, and, without exception, every woman concerned has her home in this city.

This will be of Los Angeles, to Los Angeles, for Los Angeles.

Bandmaster Henry Ohlmeyer, who has established himself thoroughly by the performances of his Coronado musical organization in the past few years, is now completing the formation of another band which promises equally good results.

This one is likewise designed for summer service at Coronado Beach, and will give its preliminary concerts, as has been its director's custom, in Los Angeles.

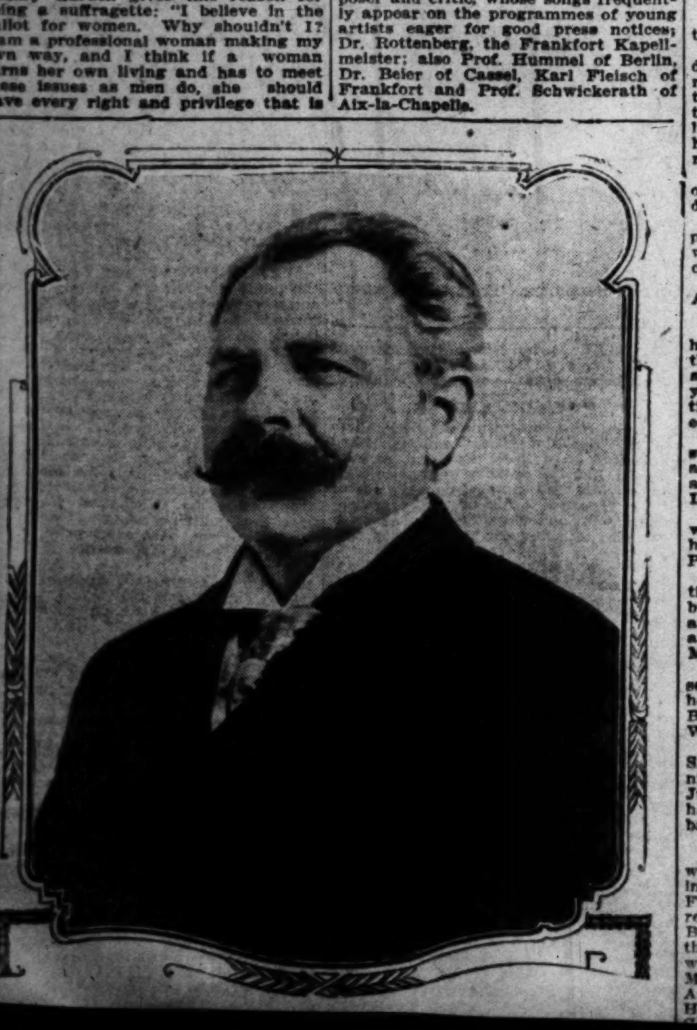
The caliber of Ohlmeyer's company will be realized when it is known that his men come from the Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Thomas orchestras.

He has an especially fine reed section, and much new material in the brass. Among his new engagements are Jack Crozier, first bass with Sousa, and C. F. Whitaker, tuba player of the Metropolitan Operahouse orchestra.

The four principal soloists of the season will be Franz Helle, fluegelhorn; John Hughes, cornet; Louis J. Bennet, trombone, and Walter A. Wood, xylophone.

Ohlmeyer's local concerts will be at Simpson Auditorium and the Polytechnic High School, Monday and Tuesday, June 14 and 15. No finer programmes have ever been announced here by any band.

The programme for the concert which is to be given by Fidelia Singing Society in Simpson Auditorium on Friday evening will include a wide variety of operatic and lyric selections. Bruce Gordon Kingsley will assist at the organ, and Miss Mabel Robinson will be at the piano. Soloists will be Miss Cook, soprano, and Herr von der Aue, dramatic tenor, recently in opera. Herr von der Aue will sing in English, German and French.



Art and Artists.

BY ANTONY E. ANDERSON.

The Sublime.

To stand upon a windy pinnacle,
Beneath the infinite blue of the blue noon,
And underfoot a valley terrible
As that dim gulf, where sense and being swoon
When the soul parts; a giant valley strewn
With giant rocks; asleep, and vast, and still,
And far away. The torrent, which has hewn
His pathway through the entrails of the hill,
Now crawls along the bottom and anon
Lifts up his voice, a muffled tremendous roar,
Borne on the wind an instant, and then gone
Back to the caverns of the middle air;
A voice as of a nation overthrown
With beat of drums, when hosts have marched to war.

—[Wilfrid Scawen Blunt.

At the Little Corner.

While Idah Meachem Strobridge is showing her collection of paintings, etchings and drawings by local artists, in the airy and sunlit outside galleries of her bungalow on East Avenue 41, a much smaller collection, also by local men and women, is exhibited in the small inner gallery—the room known to picture lovers as the Little Corner of Local Art. These pictures are not the property of Mrs. Strobridge, but are on sale.

About thirty-five paintings and etchings are shown, ten artists being represented. Marion Holden Pope has the greatest number of pictures, there being seven etchings from her needle and one drawing from her pencil. These are not new, but some old favorites are shown, full of refinement and delicately suggestive, as etchings should always be—"San Francisco Coasters," "Night, Grand Canal, Venice," "Villa d'Este, Tivoli," "Model Reading," etc.

Norman St. Clair has five water colors, among them "Along the Foothills," whose hills are solid and rocky, and whose sky is beautifully luminous; "The Last Glow of Day," a small landscape, delightfully painted; "The Cross-Roads," a bit of sunlit landscape with blue mountains in the background—a pleasant spot to linger in.

There are four water colors from the brush of C. P. Neilson, who is now in Munich. "Point Loma" shows us a white light falling on a gray-green sea. The foreground is parched earth, yellowish brown picked out with patches of dark green grass. "Eastlake Park" gives us the wet, cool greens of the trees surrounding the lake in the park, with the pavilion half hidden among them. It is a quiet, restful picture, very well painted.

"In Mission, San Diego," we see the sunlight on a wing of the adobe mission, with its red tiled roof. The light is brilliant and vivid. The foreground is solidly painted, but the sky, unfortunately, is of that heavy indigo blue this painter sometimes affects.

There are three oils by William Lees Judson, the largest of these being "The Old Prospector," which shows us the hopeful visionary seated in the shadow of an immense rocky wall with his patient burro, while beyond them the illimitable desert stretches in a glare of heat and light. "The Tranquil Hour," also a desert picture, is a twilight scene with distant mountains touched with the afterglow. "Laguna," in grayish tones, is a solid phalanx of trees leaning away from the winds that blow from the sea, which lies below.

"In the Sespe" is Hanson Puthuff's contribution. This is one of this strong young landscapist's more recent pictures, and also one of his best. Its well painted foreground, all dark browns and greens, lies in shadow. There is a middle distance of dark green bushes. Beyond, bathed in sunlight most truthfully and poetically rendered, lie the valley and far-off hills. The sky is full of wind-blown clouds, some gray, others white glorified with pink.

The two pastels and one water color by Charles Percy Austin have been seen before in other exhibitions. "The Pink Bush," the water color, is a sketch which is treated with simplicity and directness. The pastels are "Midnight Moonlight" and "City Yards in the Snow," both with a play of refined color, and both suggesting much more than they state.

The one oil by Ralph Mocine, "In Holland," breathes a melancholy sentiment. The scene is gray and wet. Tall slim trunks of trees on the foreground are swayed by the wind. The distance gives us a long line of denser trees of a dark gray-green.

Charles C. Selbie has one small oil study, "The San Gabriel." It is somewhat heavy in texture and color, but is painted with sincerity, and has much of the true out-door feeling.

There are four desert studies by Carl Eytel, conscientiously painted, but rendered somewhat chalkily in the painter's efforts after a true scale of light. Mr. Eytel has not yet learned that to get good color, light must often be sacrificed. His titles are as interesting as his themes are difficult, and suggest the poet.

The exhibition will remain open till the middle of the week.

Monotone Pastels.

Some twenty or thirty monotone pastels by G. Thompson Pritchard are now being shown at Green's, Broadway and Tenth street. As their name suggests, they are in one color, a rather warm brown, reinforced here and there with touches of white in the highest lights.

Mr. Pritchard is an English artist who has worked for some years in Australia and New Zealand. He is now living in Oakland, in this State, where he has been for six weeks. The most of the pictures he is showing at Green's are scenes from the islands beyond the Indian Ocean, though "The Oaks" comes from Berkeley, and there is also a San Francisco harbor scene.

Mr. Pritchard draws remarkably well. His cliffs are full of a rugged strength and beauty, and his sea has stress and action. He paints bleak shores with an artist's instinct for picturesque effects. He has studied them in many moods, under moon and stars as well as sun. Some of his landscapes are full of an idyllic tranquillity. Such are "Langlow River, Queensland," "Noontide," and "Nightfall, Curl Curl, Sydney."

A few of the pictures show us the dark shadows that brood under groves of trees, giving grateful rest to flocks and men—"The Oaks, Berkeley," "In the Reserve, Auckland," etc.

There are many poetic night scenes with lighthouses pointing gleaming fingers of warning over turbulent waters and dangerous rocks—"Beacons," "The Bell Light," "Rival Lights, Kiama, N. S. W.," etc.

These interesting one-color pastels will be exhibited at Green's for some weeks.

A New Era.

If the new tariff bill is passed as it now stands, paintings, sculptures, etchings, engravings, pastels, original drawings and sketches, and other works of art over twenty years of age will be admitted free. Artistic antiquities more than one hundred years old will also come in free. It is still possible that during a later stage of the tariff bill, before it is finally enacted, the twenty-year clause will be eliminated, which would be a complete victory for free art. The duty on modern art is reduced from 20 per cent. to 15 per cent. to conform to the present reciprocity treaties. The schedules are so worded that mechanical productions will be excluded. Congress seems to be taking a very enlightened and progressive view of the art tariff, and for this deserves the most hearty commendation of the people.

It is no exaggeration to say that the passage of this bill will inaugurate a new era in American art. Valuable collections of old masterpieces, which the people of Europe have been enjoying for some decades, will now be brought to this country by their American owners for the benefit of our people. The art museums of the country will receive a wonderful impetus. Interest in art will be awakened, and there will be a much greater demand for the work of our own artists. Artists, school teachers, and the thousands of other Americans who each year travel abroad will be allowed to bring home beautiful things without hindrance. The taste of the people will be improved, our designers will find it easier to acquare an art education, and our manufactured products, in which design plays an important part, will be better able to compete with those of Europe.

The antiquity clause will be especially valuable because antique objects, in addition to their cultural and educational value, are worth a great deal to our manufacturers as models.

The art schedule has been drawn in such a way as to remove the inconsistent absurdities which exist in the present law. A wooden statue by Donatello will not receive the same liberal treatment accorded to a bronze statue by the same sculptor. Terracottas by the della Robbias will not be excluded. The word "sculptures" is used instead of the word "statuary," so that sculptures in relief by Michael Angelo, for instance, will be on the same footing as sculptures in the round by Michael Angelo. A painting by Van Eyck will be free, whether it comes in as a separate painting or as an illustration in a book. An original Hokusai will be as free as an engraved reproduction, and a painting by Rembrandt will receive the same generous treatment as an etching by Rembrandt.

Congress will deserve great credit for correcting these glaring faults in the present law.

ART NOTES.

E. A. Burbank is showing at Kanst's two heads of Indian girls which are of unusual interest, both being triumphant solutions of difficult technical problems. In one picture the background is a vivid red and the blanket green, giving a greenish cast to the faces and hair. In the other the background is a vivid green, and blanket red, giving the hair and face a reddish cast.

Hanson Puthuff, who has been sketching in the Valley of the Sespe, is now in Los Angeles for a few days. He will leave again very shortly.

The twelfth annual exhibition of the Ten American Painters has been on view at the Montrose galleries, No. 372 Fifth avenue, New York.

Augustus Koopman has been showing an exhibition of painting, etc., at the Cottier galleries, New York.

At the Goupil gallery, London, the pastels of M. Simon Bussy recently proved an attraction. They are decorative impromptus, inspired by nature, but imaginative in effect.

BENEFACTIONS.

How About Them?—Cases of Garden and Farrar Have Stimulated Interest on This Point.

The publicity which has recently been given the cases of Mary Garden and Geraldine Farrar in the matter of their reimbursing benefactors who have advanced money for their musical education has focused light upon what is a frequent occurrence in the musical world. There has seemingly been a ready inclination to supply the "sinews of war" to the promising young musician or singer, who, without this underground railway to success would probably have stranded on the sands of insolvency.

Americans have been particularly fortunate in finding people who are as prodigal with their funds as with their interest, says Musical America. Emma Eames was financed by a wealthy Bostonian, whom she not only repaid in money, but by demonstrating his good judgment.

Edyth Walker, lacking $1000, wrote to W. K. Vanderbilt that she would have to return home without artistic finish if the same was not forthcoming. It was sent without further question. On the strength of Jean de Reszke's opinion that she would some day be a great singer, friends of Bessie Abott, following her retiring from the music hall stage, lent the means

A Good Time.

I've had a good time.
came with rosy cheeks and tender song
ross the morning fields to play with me,
, oh, how glad we were, and romped along nd laughed and kissed each other by the sea.

I've had a good time.
e came and met me half-way down the road:
ove went away, but there remained with me ttle dream to help me bear my load, something more to watch for by the sea.

I've had a good time.
th came and took a rosebud from my yard;
ut after that, I think there walked with me, prove me how the thing was not so hard,
n angel here of evenings by the sea.

I've had a good time.
. . . . A good, good time.
obody knows how good a time but me.
h nights and days of revel and of rhyme,
nd tears and love and longing by the sea.

The Dreamers.

y read on fancy's glowing wall

do they labor? Not at all.
ey simply sit and sit.

dream by day and dream by night things that they will do n all their wonders come to light nd all their dreams come true.
y see beyond the flimsy screen present need, a crown—
do they grace the present scene?
t much! They just sit down.

dream by night and dream by day things they can attain:
, oh! the wondrous things they say,
nd say and say again!
y see success at every gate nd cures for human ills—
do they labor while they wait?
t much! We pay their bills!

Forgotten Trouble.

you know what it was that caused you to fret
Only a year ago?

long nights were sleepless and troubled your mind,
you can't tell what happened, in looking behind,
Only a year ago?

you know why you frowned as you journeyed your way,
Only a month ago?
n you tell now what made all your blue skies look gray,
Only a month ago?
at trouble was it that your happiness marred,

Only a month ago?

The State of California has decided that it is unlawful to use the feathers of wild birds for millinery purposes.

Cawston Ostrich Feathers are not included in this law; special mention being made of the fact that in taking the feathers from the ostrich there is no pain caused to the bird.

The Most Fashionable People have all adopted the ostrich plume and at Cawston's they are able to obtain the designs and shades which they cannot secure elsewhere.

The Bargain Hunters are all coming to Cawston's because they realize that nowhere else can the finest ostrich feathers, boas, etc., be secured at producer's prices.

Cawston Is the Only ostrich farmer in the world today who is growing the feathers and offering them to the public direct from his own factory. The most skilled workers are employed in Cawston's factory at South Pasadena.

Your Old Ostrich Feathers can be remodeled into the very fashionable willow plume or redeyed to match your costume or cleaned and curled at Cawston's to look like new at a very small expense and only a few days required for the work.

A Big Cut in Millinery Prices

We've just secured from a noted New York firm 250 swell sample hats at a special low price. As the season is well on and we want to make a quick clean-up of the entire lot, we place them on sale tomorrow at a ridiculously low price. Millinery stores would ask $7.50 to $12.50 for every hat in the lot—our usual low price would be $5, but for Monday and Tuesday our price is only $2.75

Secretary Dickinson.

Timely Sketch of and Interview With New Head of War Department.

BY JAMES B. MORROW.

WASHINGTON, April 19.—In beginning his "brilliant and powerful argument," the Lord Chief Justice of England publicly and officially termed it, before the Alaska Boundary Tribunal in London, Jacob McGavock Dickinson, now Secretary of War in Mr. Taft's Cabinet, told a characteristic little story full of human nature and the fragrance of meadows and woods. The speech, which continued during five days, closed the case of the United States. Eminent American and British lawyers had addressed the court. Judge Dickinson desired, with grace and a touch of national humor, strictly to observe the etiquette of the historic occasion with happily turned phrases of compliment for his judges, his colleagues, and his adversaries.

"So far from feeling any sense of confidence," he said, at the close of a classical allusion, in which there was a shrewd and scholarly mixture of English and Latin, "I am in a position to very deeply sympathize with the Confederate soldier who, when the battle line was sweeping forward in the last fearful charge at Chickamauga, and a rabbit jumped up and ran through to the rear, cried out: 'Run, cotton-tail; if I did not have any more character at stake than you have I would run, too.'"

The argument throughout was geographical and legal, including as it did a technical explanation of ancient maps and surveys, and the definition of ambiguous words when clumsily written into old narratives and treaties; but here and there, as in the story of the Confederate soldier and the rabbit, it revealed the wit and common sense of Judge Dickinson, which, with his learning, his aptitude and his comprehension, have made him one of the greatest lawyers in the world. Suddenly halting his stupendous march, one morning, through a wilderness of dry logic and dreary fact concerning boundary lines, he remarked:

"The Attorney-General said America had accomplished a miracle. He said he had abolished the mountains altogether. We have the authority of the Psalmist for saying that the mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs, and that Sirion and Lebanon leaped like a young unicorn."

"Nearly every controversy in the law books calling for construction or interpretation," Judge Dickinson observed at another time, "is simply because people do not anticipate and do not write documents properly. I remember that on one occasion I submitted a paper to a lawyer in whose office I was. He said: 'I do not think this is quite clear.'

"'Why,' I said, 'this means so-and-so.'

"'Oh, yes; I understand it, and you understand it, but that is not the way for you to draft it. You must write it so that no fool can misunderstand it.'"

The court, composed of three Americans and three Englishmen, required four votes for a decision. The United States won its case, Baron Alverstone, the Lord Chief Justice of England, voting with Elihu Root, Henry Cabot Lodge and George Turner, the commissioners from this country, and also saying to Judge Dickinson, at the close:

"It has been my privilege to listen to several of the great leaders of the American bar, and I can assure you that your argument will not suffer by comparison with those that preceded you, either on this or any other arbitration."

"Who designated you to act as leading counsel in this case?" I asked Judge Dickinson.

"President Roosevelt," he replied.

"Were you personally acquainted with him at the time?"

"The year before, 1902, I was a member of his party when he hunted bears in the canebrakes of Mississippi. We lived in the same tent."

"But you killed no bears?"

"The newspapers reported that the hunt was a total failure," Judge Dickinson answered. "On the contrary, the natives who accompanied us got three bears and a deer. It was understood, by those of us who formed Mr. Roosevelt's immediate party, that we were to hold our fire until after he had killed the first bear. His eyes are bad, the underbrush was tall and thick, and none of us could see any too well. The natives, not realizing the unusual obligation of the hunt, hit the trail with considerable energy, and ten miles from the camp, through the thickets and obstructions of the canebrake, proceeded to do business in their own way. The rest of us, however, waited on the President. In a few days we went home."

When I entered his office, Secretary Dickinson was standing up. He is six feet one inch in height, weighs 220 pounds, and measures more around the shoulders than around the hips. Physically, he looks like a farmer who pitches hay and can briskly ride all day on horseback. His hair is brown, his large eyes are gray, and his mustache is as red as a squirrel's tail. There is tan on his face, his nose is large and rather long. The one feature that dominates the rest is the massive chin, cleft in the center and aggressively standing forward with the strength and force of the steel ram on a ship of war. Power is seen in every curve of the body, countenance and

"You are trained down like an athlete," I said. "What form of exercise do you take?"

"While living in Chicago, I walked every day and went fishing and shooting whenever I could."

"Do you hunt?"

"Not mostly, nowadays. As a boy, I spent a good deal of time in hunting. My father gave me a negro named Harper for a body servant, and all that he ever did was to clean my guns, black my boots and go along with me into the fields."

"General Evans," I said, "told me that his youthful negro servant taught him to smoke and chew tobacco."

"My boy had no vices, so far as I know," Secretary Dickinson answered, "but the bloodiest fight I ever had was on his account. One of my acquaintances and a friend he was, called him a liar. Harper couldn't whip the white boy, and so I fought in his stead. Oddly enough, the daughter of that very boy called to see me the other day. After she was gone I got a letter from Harper, who is living in St. Louis. He addressed me as 'Jacob McDixon'—time having dulled his memory as to names—but he had not forgotten him, congratulated me on my appointment to be Secretary of War, and subscribed himself 'Harper Bass Dixon, your old

At the close of my interview with Secretary Dickinson I asked his private secretary to show me a copy of the letter he sent to the negro in St. Louis. The letter of the former master of his slave had all the familiarity of the happy and affectionate relationship. It not only recalled conditions common in times past at the South, but revealed the kindliness and character of Secretary Dickinson himself.

On the same day on which the letter was received, Judge Dickinson glad to hear from him. "The last time I saw you, I believe, was in Memphis, and then, my recollection is, you were making pies or doing something of that sort. I hope you are well and prospering.

"I was in Columbus, Miss., our old home, the other day," the letter continued, "and went down to the Tombigbee River, where we used to go swimming, and also Moores Creek. Jimmie Harrison, Tom Franklin and Ed Sherman are living there. Most of the other boys are scattered around the world or have died. Old Mr. Harrison is still living. He is 94 years of age, and his son, Atwell, is 70, and looks like a boy.

"My father's house looks pretty much like it used to, except that they have cut down the mimosa trees and the cedar hedge around the yard, and the Chinaberry trees in front. I stayed over at the old Maj. Blewett place. I am sorry you have forgotten how to spell my name," Secretary Dickinson wrote, in closing. "I see you spell it 'Dixon.'"

The letter inside and out was addressed in plain typewriting to Harper Bass Dickinson, and so, more than forty years after leaving the home of his childhood, the slave was given the right name of his master, which, in his ignorance and vicissitudes, he had failed accurately to remember.

"The Dickinsons," I said, "were originally English?"

"Yes; the founder of our family in America emigrated to Virginia in 1654. Since then practically all of the Dickinsons have lived in the South. My father was a chancellor in Mississippi for many years, and went as a commissioner to the conference in Delaware that met to discuss the question of secession."

"Where were you during the Civil War?"

"At my home in Columbus most of the time. I saw many soldiers and helped to take wounded men off the train after the battle of Shiloh. Toward the close of the war, when the South was calling for every boy and man between the ages of 16 and 60, I enlisted as a private. I couldn't have been anything but a private, let me add," and Judge Dickinson smiled, "because I was only 14 years old. I went out with my company, under Gen. Ruggles, but saw no fighting or other active service. For many years I have been a member of Isham Harrison Camp of United Confederate Veterans, at Columbus, and was pleased the other day to receive resolutions of congratulations from that organization."

"Where did you go after peace had been restored?"

"To Nashville, in Tennessee, the home of my maternal grandparents. My mother had not seen her relatives for several years, and immediately following Lee's surrender we left for the North. I think we were the first refugees to get out of Columbus. Federal soldiers were then occupying the country. A dozen ladies, whom we knew, accompanied us, and I took charge of the party. We went as far as Iuka on a railway train, which ran off the crooked and broken track a dozen times. From Iuka we traveled to Nashville, principally by water, getting passage on a Federal gunboat. I remained in Nashville and attended school, living meanwhile with my grandparents."

"Who were they?"

"My grandfather, Jacob McGavock, was one of Andrew Jackson's bodyguards during the war of 1812, and, afterward, a prominent man. My grandmother was Louisa Grundy before her marriage. Her father and my great-grandfather was Felix Grundy, Senator in Congress, Attorney-General in Van Buren's Cabinet, and a celebrated criminal lawyer. I have heard my grandmother talk of him many times. While he was a child three of his brothers were killed by Indians. His mother wanted him to be a a member of the Kentucky Legislature, where he had a debate with Henry Clay on currency and banking.

"After serving as Chief Justice of Kentucky he resigned his office, because the salary was inadequate for the needs of his family, and removed to Nashville to practice law. It is said that he defended 105 persons charged with murder, only one of whom went to the gallows. In the United States Senate, to which he was elected three times, he was chairman of the Judiciary Committee. While he was stumping Tennessee for Van Buren, candidate for President, against William Henry Harrison, Henry Clay visited Nashville and called on Mrs. Grundy, my great-grandmother. When she told Mr. Clay what her husband was doing he said: 'Oh, I see, he is still pleading the cause of criminals.'"

"Did you study law immediately after being graduated from the University of Nashville?"

"No; I was made assistant professor of Latin and taught for a year. E. Kirby Smith, the famous Confederate general, was then chancellor of the university. While teaching Latin, I took a course in physiology and anatomy at the medical department."

"Why did you enter the law school of Columbia College, in New York?"

"I had always lived in the South and desired to get a view of the other side. Furthermore, Columbia, under Theodore Dwight, and Harvard were then the best law schools in the United States. I took the junior and senior courses at Columbia."

"What brought about your appointment by President Cleveland, in 1895, to be Assistant Attorney-General of the United States?"

"I don't know. Richard Olney asked me by telegraph if I would accept the place. I had not previously heard that I was being thought of in such a connection."

"You remained in Washington two years and then resigned?"

"After Mr. McKinley's first inauguration I returned to my home and entered again upon the general practice of my profession, also acting as the attorney in Tennessee and Northern Alabama for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co."

"Later you were made general solicitor of the Illinois Central Railroad?"

"The position was offered me in the autumn of 1899 by wire, and was accepted. I moved to Chicago and ultimately became general counsel for the company."

"What have you to say about the regulation of railways by the government?"

"I have thought all along that if the railways were regulated it would be of advantage to the public at large, and to the shareholders. Railway officers, I think, have been of the same opinion. The Hepburn law is not the last word on the subject of railway control and supervision, but it is very much better than no law at all. Rebating has been stopped, much to the satisfaction of railway officers generally, who never, even in the first place, gave rebates voluntarily. The practice was forced upon them. It was not only a great annoyance, but it materially reduced the revenues of the railways."

"Were rebates," I asked, "one of the evils of modern methods of competition?"

"Not at all. A shipper would come along and ask for a rate on 1000 cars of a certain kind of freight. A rate would be given, but there would be no results. Instead, the officer who made it would see some other road hauling the freight. Naturally, he would conclude that the shipper was receiving a rebate. Whether he was or whether he wasn't, the shipper had produced the desired mental effect, and the next time he went after a rate he got what he wanted. You must understand that the directors of a railroad require the officers in

VIENNA EMPORIUM

TALKS ON TEETH

By THE REX DENTAL COMPANY Incorporated

Good Teeth Come First

Good teeth are absolutely essential to the well groomed man or woman.

Even the well kept nails must take second place, for they are not so much in evidence as the teeth.

The eyes may not be good, the features may be irregular. These are as nature made them, and must remain as they are, but not so the teeth.

If nature has failed on them, we can correct the omission and supply a perfect set, beautiful, "dazzling," and as useful as beautiful, for ours, placed in the mouth by our famous method, are close rivals of nature's teeth in looks and satisfactory service.

They are as solid as a rock.

No plates, no ordinary bridge work, nothing about these teeth to suggest the "false teeth" which so many people are wearing because they haven't heard of the Rex Dental Company's method.

Ten thousand people have thrown away their partial plates, which are continually wobbling around in their mouths, had their so-called "bridges" taken out, and are using the Rex Dental Company's new method just as successfully as though they had been grown in the gums.

Do you want proofs?

We can furnish them from patients in all parts of the country, perhaps from some in your own locality.

We make a fair and square proposal to those who have lost teeth, but have still a few left in the gums. It is this:

Come and find out from us about the work we do. Let us examine your teeth, and don't think you must spend any money just because you come for this investigation. There is no obligation of any sort attached to the visit.

We can't tell what we can do for you unless we can see your teeth and show you what can be done.

Good teeth are a necessity, poor teeth an offense to you and to your friends.

If you are not near enough to call, send for our 40-page beautifully illustrated book, which describes the Rex Dental Company's Alveolar Method (teeth without plates). We send it free of any charge. It is a great book on the teeth, the reading of which makes people come to see us, no matter how far away they may be.

MOTHERS' DAY.

DAY is to be known among the churches, and, in fact, by all men of woman born, as "Mothers' Day." It looks somewhat strange to the eye to see words capitalized and quoted. Every day the rose upon this world was mothers' day. Every day through all the ages has been mothers' day, the time the baby's first prattle was heard in the morning before the birds awake to the twilight hour the tired little eyelids fall in sleep upon the tired eyes, and the tired little feet seek the night's renew strength for tomorrow.

are not a few most inspiring suggestions in programme outlining the observation of the day as be kept here in Los Angeles. In the first place, carnation has been selected as the floral emblem of the day. It must have been a mother's heart suggested this. Of all the beautiful creations which Flora spreads with lavish hand over California landscapes these beautiful spring days, there is more fragrant than the carnation. The white spotless in its purity, and this beautiful blossom indeed a fitting emblem of fragrant womanhood, in its purity of heart and spirit.

ing to the Miltonian mythology, it was one of angels in all the hierarchy of heaven that converted in its degradation into the awful hell and death, Satan. By an analogy of reasoning come to be an accepted theory that a good better at her best than the best man, and that woman is worse at her worst than the worst man. poison the sources of a stream, you make the waters dangerous to all, all the way from that where the river empties into the sea. If you rivulet at its fountain head you corrupt it to Through all the ages of the world the man- each individual member of the race has de- marily if not entirely upon the character and qualities of the mother. It is the rarest experience in human life to find a decent family springing from a corrupt motherhood. When you come to corrupt the mothers of a nation in their entirety or even generally, you have a corrupted nation, without virile strength, incapable of great achievements, a prey to foreign foes and always tottering to its decay.

We have an illuminating example of this before us in these current days. We have a nation hoary with years torn asunder by internal commotion, threatened by invasion from without and apparently unable longer to maintain its integrity of being because of the general, the universal corruption that spreads from the throne in the palace to the beggar in the street. And what has been the canker eating at the heart of the Turkish nation and the Turkish people? The Mosaic account of creation presents to us a picture of a monogamous household, Adam the man with the one wife, Eve. You can come down page by page in the history of the world from that day to this and the monogamous nation has, as a very broad rule, been the nation of high spiritual attainment, of high mental development, of achievement, of great men and of long duration. The blood-red rose of lust would typify Turkish womanhood, and the hope of America as of all Christian nations from beginning to end lies in the appropriateness of selecting the fragrant, spotless carnation as the emblem of American motherhood.

Another beautiful suggestion in this programme on Mothers' Day here in Los Angeles today is that contributions are desired for "suffering mothers." The collection will be liberal indeed if it is sufficient to relieve the distress of all the suffering mothers in this community. In fact, the wealth of the world would not meet the demand outlined in this programme. From the day that Eve brought a man-child into the world to today, motherhood has been one of uninterrupted pain, anxiety and suffering. The higher the type of motherhood the more keen the anxiety, the more bitter the tears that accompany this high endowment of woman. The mother of the purest, loftiest, greatest Man that ever trod the earth was the one of whom it was said: "A sword shall pierce through thine own heart also."

But these contributions asked for suffering mothers do not embrace the thought of suffering motherhood. It is simply the mothers whose means are inadequate to meet the demands made upon them for the care and sustenance of their offspring. This is something only mothers can feel or conceive the idea of. Men may feel the pangs of hunger and perish from cold in their own persons, but to the last death gasp they cannot begin to conceive the agony that pierces a mother's heart as she hears her child beg in vain for a crust of bread.

This is a wealthy and prosperous community. The number of indigent mothers in Los Angeles is very much less in proportion to the total population than in any other city in the world. It is easier to meet the demands of this collection to be taken up today here than elsewhere. We pride ourselves greatly upon the high grade of our civilization. This is a city of churches. It contains more professing Christians in proportion to its population than perhaps any other city in America. Even those who do not "name the name of Christ" yet do make perhaps more boast than those that do of their humanitarian impulses and their interest in the race. Here is a common standing ground, we would not say for those who are religious and for those who are not, but here is a common standing ground in common religion for all the men born of woman to get together and demonstrate the sincerity of their religious professions, of their boasted humanitarian impulses, by seeing that the material results of this Mothers' Day shall be larger in proportion to the population and assessed wealth of this city than in any other in the United States.

Motherhood

Interpretation of motherhood as represented in the beautiful painting reproduced on the front page of this magazine.

Oh, life of my life, how precious thou art!
These small quiv'rjng pulses, faint throbbing heart
Imprisoned beneath my warm sheltering breast;
Awaiting the light of Mother Love blest.
Oh, child of my bosom, bone of my bone—
How happily grateful—thou art my own!
What rapture divine thrills through every kiss,
What fondness, what yearning, thousandfold bliss
Surge tremulous through my pleasure-tossed soul.
Sweet infant, my infant—words sacred unroll
Before the rapt gaze of high motherhood:
A spirit to cherish—to mould for great good;
A life to develop, a force to set free—
To love, lift and serve all Humanity.

Sermons in Song..

The Puzzle

By Wilbur D. Nesbit

Yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?—Job xiv, 10.

With bended head and wond'ring eye
We search and ponder long and deep;
We wonder why we live and die—
If at the end we wake or sleep;

If it shall be a silence vast,
Or dulcet sounds shall come to cheer;
If it be first or it be last;
And whether we should flout or fear.

That road beyond the End of Day—
Does it to further toiling call?
Or is it then a happy way?
Or is there any road at all?

The stars laugh at us from the sky
When Night is grave and still and wide,
And we repeat our "Whence?" and "Why?"
And seek to know what they may hide.

So, we will muse and wonder on,
And childishly our doubts recite;
Is it the coming of the Dawn,
Or but the closing of the Night?

Comes Death one day to make us see,
To smooth the wrinkled, brooding brow;
Comes Death, to whisper soothingly:
"Poor soul, you know the Answer now."

THE DESERT SANDSTORM.

The floor of the desert lies gold in the sun,
And along the burnt mountains dull colors are run,
For the dance of the sand,
Through the floor of the land,
Through the sky, through the air,
Here, there and everywhere,
Begins with the day.

The dancers glide out from the ghost-colored dunes,
Swaying most weirdly to fast rising tunes,
Then moving more lithely,
Their skirts sweeping blithely,
They begin a fast swirling,
Their forms widely whirling—
The dancers in gray.

And on through the dust-colored hours of day
They moan and they rush, these slim phantoms in gray;
How they skim o'er the floor,
Shrieking more and still more,
And flinging their arms,
Like a wanton her charms
In the face of the sky!

And then drops the moonlight like fog on the scene
Of desert and sky, with the dancers between;
All else is forgotten
But these wantons ill-gotten,
That hurry and scurry
And sweep with a flurry,
And rush, wailing by.

Do wan midnight hours make the face of night sad?
Or is it the sight of the desert gone mad?
For it's mad with the whirling,
The insatiate swirling,
That is mountains unfurling
And the desert a-twirling,
To chaos again.

The Way Out.

"Think, love!" said Mrs. Gobsa Golde. "I ordered a dinner gown, and that tiresome dressmaker has sent me a traveling suit."

"Well, what are you going to do about it?" Gobsa Golde demanded.

"The only thing is for us to go abroad again," she sighed.

Korea's New Emperor. By Frank G. Carpenter.

AUDIENCE WITH YI CHOK.

HIS MAJESTY INTERVIEWED IN HIS ROYAL PALACE AT SEOUL.

From Our Own Correspondent.

SEOUL, 1909.—I have just returned from an audience with His Imperial Majesty Yi Chok, the Emperor of Korea. It was held in the East Palace, one of the four great establishments which His Majesty owns in and about Seoul, and as we talked I could hear the hammers of the carpenters who are building a great audience hall near by for the receptions of the future. My meeting with the Emperor had been arranged by Viscount Sone, the acting Japanese Resident General, at the suggestion of Prince Ito, of whom I had requested an audience when I met him at his villa near Tokio, some months ago. The Emperor of Korea is now under the absolute control of the Japanese government. Prince Ito is his adviser, and the country is ruled by Japan, with His Majesty as the nominal head. In other letters I shall show whether this is for the good or ill of Korea. Today I write of His Majesty alone and of the royal family to which he belongs.

A Blue Blooded Monarch.

If blue blood means anything Yi Chok ought to be one of the strongest monarchs on earth. There is no doubt but that he is the weakest. Nevertheless, his veins are streaked with a cerulean fluid which began its royal flow a hundred years before Columbus discovered America. Many generations before Shakespeare was born, a hundred years before the first Bible was printed and 200 years before Luther stirred up Germany with his preaching the ancestors of this young man sat upon the imperial throne and governed their millions of cream-faced, almond-eyed subjects. Yi Chok is the thirty-first ruler of the present dynasty, which began to reign in 1392. His father was Yi Hung, the man whom the Japanese forced to abdicate in July, 1907, and his mother was the famous queen whom the Japanese assassinated shortly after the close of their war with China.

The young Emperor in uniform of a Korean general.

The new Empress of Korea

The King and Queen were somewhat related to each other, and Yi Chok is the offspring of the intermarriages of many cousins during these past generations. He came into life a weakling, mentally and physically. One of our early Ministers to Korea, writing to our State Department concerning his audiences with this man's father, mentions in a foot note having seen the Crown Prince. When the state paper was printed, a foot note, which was intended only for the Secretary's eye, was added to the bottom of the message. It stated that the Crown Prince was weak mentally, and that, in the opinion of the Minister this was an evidence of the evil effects of the intermarriage of near relatives.

His Majesty's father has never been noted for strength of character, and he has evidently inherited nothing from his mother, who belonged to the Min family, and was one of the most forceful women who have ever been connected with an Asiatic throne.

A Baby of Thirty-five.

The weakness of the Emperor's mind has long been a matter of remark among both Koreans and foreigners. He has little more intellect than a baby, although, it is said, his mind has brightened since he was chosen Emperor, now only a little more than a year ago. He is a man of no education to speak of, and his life in the palace, where he has been surrounded by eunuchs and the vicious servants of a depraved court, has not been conducive to mental growth. His first wife was only 12 years of age when she married him, and the present Empress is only a few years older. At the time of his last marriage, he was Crown Prince, and when a wife was sought for him, according to custom, a notice was sent out to all the nobility of the empire that they must suspend giving their daughters in marriage until the Emperor's son had selected a wife. Coupled with this was an order for all who had eligible daughters to send in applications, describing the maidens and showing what they had to offer.

At first, only fifteen of the noble families responded, and this, I am told, was on account of the weak mind of the Crown Prince and his apparent unfitness to manage a household. Then the government officials sent out a second order urging more applications. In reply to this, fifty were sent in, and from these the old Emperor picked out thirty. The girls represented by them were directed to come to the palace, and in due time they appeared in great state. Each was borne in a gorgeous closed chair, consisting of a box, about three feet square and not more than that high, in which the maiden sat cross-legged on the floor. These boxes were carried by servants in livery. The manservants of each girl went in front and her slave girls followed behind.

When the procession arrived at the palace, the thirty maidens were carefully looked over by the Emperor, who has since been deposed, and the poorest ones to the number of fifteen were weeded out and sent home. A day or so later another inspection was made and the marriageable ladies reduced to seven or eight. After this there was a third examination, and a young girl of about 13 or so, belonging to the noble Yun family, was chosen. Contrary to the usual custom in Korea, which provides that the groom has nothing to do with the selection of his wife, the Crown Prince himself made the final decision. The girl picked out was the youngest of the whole thirty. She was small for her age, and when the Crown Prince pointed her out as his choice, his father said: "You had better take one of the others. That girl is too small."

"Oh, as to that," was the reply of His Majesty, "she will grow." He insisted upon her at the second selection, and also at the third, and finally got her. He was right as to the growing. She is much larger now, and has developed into a fine-looking Korean woman. She is very bright, and the Japanese are giving her an education which is in advance of that of any Korean queen of the past. She is studying Japanese under the wife of the vice-minister of the household department. I am told the Emperor likes her much, and that the two live together.

On the Way to the Palace.

Before I go further, let me tell you about my audience with His Majesty and describe how he looks. The time fixed for the interview was 11 o'clock in the morning and I was instructed to appear in full evening dress. I understood that I must go in state, and our Consul-General kindly gave me his chair and the official bearers of our government. I started at 10 o'clock in the morning, and in the bright sunshine, rode through Seoul in talk silk hat, swallow-tail coat, white necktie and the other appurtenances which we at home wear only after 6 o'clock in the evening.

I had to stoop low to get my tall hat into the chair, and ducked when the bearers raised me to their shoulders. The chair was not bigger than a dry-goods box, or about four feet cubed, and it was about the same shape. It was open at the front and the upper part of it was walled with glass so that I could look out as I rode. The chair was upholstered in lilac satin and had a red flannel cushion. It was slung between two black poles about sixteen feet long, and at each end of these I had two bearers in livery to tote me along. side walked the keso, or guard of the consulate, in a long blue gown, fat drawer-like trousers the ankles, and a flat felt hat, upon which was American eagle. The bearers had blue gown with red, and their white trousers completed the of the American flag. The sleeves of the bordered with red, white and blue.

Thus carried, I went through the foreign tween the high brick walls surrounding the where the missionaries, consuls and other on by the palace of the deposed Emperor, who prisoner under the guard of the Japanese, and Japanese part of the city. I passed the Finance ment, and finally came to the residence of Sone, the acting Resident General and the real the country. After a short chat with him, it ranged that we were to meet within a half-hour palace, and my bearers were soon again on We now crossed the whole of Seoul, going miles, from one side to the other. The way to ace led up a wide street walled with squalid roofed with thatch or black tiles and intersper and there with petty stores, where white-gowned hatted merchants squatted among the goods and for customers.

The street was filled with the traffic of every rea, and my keso had to go in advance to clear Bullock carts carrying great loads were turned women with green coats over their heads rushed houses, and even the jinrikshas veered off to and to the left. We stopped a moment reached the red gate with its double roof of which forms the entrance to the imperial ground soldiers there had been warned of our coming, soon went in and up to the palaces themselves consist of a large number of low buildings. of only one story, but the floors are well up ground and they have arched roofs of heavy extend far out beyond the walls and make picturesque. I cannot tell you how many building are in this palace, but the number is enough commodious quarters for His Majesty and his When I say that he has 2000 servants and most of these eat and sleep inside the walls, see that they must be extensive.

Palaces Three Hundred Years Old.

The buildings of today are a strange combi the old and the new. The rulers of Korea have palace on this spot for more than 300 years, buildings have been patched up and remodeled to time. Just now new structures are being and the audience hall, in which His Majesty will in the future, will be far different from that in met him today. The waiting-room, where I ceived by the court chamberlains in company Okesaki and a number of other Japanese officer evidently the result of foreign graft, and it think of the Pennsylvania Statehouse, where the ture was paid for by the inch. Outwardly it rean, but the interior was of the cheapest forei as to its decoration and furniture. It had doors, such as one buys at a dollar each at our yards, and the doorknobs were of the plain celain variety. The paper on the walls and not actually cost those who furnished it more cents a roll, and the yellow velvet carpet on would be high at $2 a yard.

In striking contrast with this plainness were forms of the Korean officials and Japanese All were of European cut, but they sparkled lace and brass buttons. The master of ceremoni a gold-hilted sword at his side, and he had a trimmed with ostrich feathers under his arm. anese army officers were clad in fine cloth uni a khaki color, but all wore decorations, accor rank and service, ranging in size from the diame red cent to that of a pint cup.

A Talk With the Emperor.

When the time for my audience came, the ceremonies took me through a long hall into ence-room proper. This was, I judge, about wide and 100 feet long. The Emperor of Korea, of his Cabinet and Viscount Sone stood at the end of this room facing the door. The Emperor the center of the party, and according to eti marched forward ten steps, and then bowed. went on until I reached His Majesty, when I again. To my surprise, the Emperor bowed, held out his hand. I took it and we shook. I could have felt that hand. It was as soft as warm and pleasant to touch.

The man who had been received before me had bowed upon his reception and turned away. posed this was proper, and started to do whereupon the Emperor motioned me to stop, master of ceremonies said that His Majesty speak to me. The Emperor then asked how long been in the country and when I was going away wanted to know whether I had had an audience him before, and when I replied that I had met him teen years ago, at the beginning of the war Japan and China, and diplomatically added Majesty looked as young today as he did then; ceptibly smiled. This encouraged me to beg send a message through me to the United State master of ceremonies pretended to submit this but whether he did so or not I do not know, as in Korean. At any rate, His Majesty did not but in reply said that he was glad that I had rea, and that he hoped I would have a pleasant tour rough Manchuria and China, where, he understood, I going. This was a signal for leaving, and I backed way out, bowing betimes.

His Majesty Looks.

As I stood before the Emperor I had a chance to dy him. He is not bad-looking, and appears tall in trast to the Japanese generals about him. He has a ge head, rather high over the eyes. He wears a black stache, just large enough to enable it to be waxed, d his hair, strange to say, is cut short. His complexion is cream-yellow, his eyes black, his height five seven and his weight, I judge, about 170 pounds. en I saw him today he was clad in the uniform of a rean general, which is now cut foreign style, and the trast of the whole audience with that which I had h himself and the former Emperor, his father, was king. It shows the changes which are going on in rea.

My last audience was in the palace in which the de- ed Emperor is now living. The man who introduced got down on his knees and crawled over the floor, ping his head on the carpet when we entered the dience chamber. He continued to crawl until he ched His Majesty, and then got up and bent half ble, whispering my question to the Emperor and in same way conveying his answers to me. That interpreter was a noble Korean, dressed in Korean dress, h a horsehair hat on his head. The master of ceremonies who acted as interpreter today stood straight and looked the Emperor in the eye. He wore Euron clothes and was so dressed that he would not have eared out of place at a diplomatic reception at the ite House.

When I met the Crown Prince at my last audience, wore a long gown of red silk, with a stiff hooplike t running around his body, under the arm pits. It so large that it extended out six inches from the all around. This belt had decorations of jade precious stones and it was a mark of high rank. gown was high at the neck and embroidered with medallions as big around as a tea plate. There one of these on each of the shoulders and one each at about the fifth rib. His feet were shod with y cloth boots and his head was covered with a navy cap of horsehair net, which was at least five inches . This had no brim, and it came well down over forehead. Inside the cap I could see his topknot. Majesty then wore his hair long and put it up in ean style on his crown. Today the barber keeps it to the length of two inches or less, and the horser hat has disappeared, while in place of the gown he a foreign dress.

During my audience in 1894 this young man, who was n 21, was supposed to be too holy to stand alone, he had a eunuch on each side of him, who held up by placing their hands under his arms while he ed. His father, who was then King of Korea, had same sort of support when I appeared before him, at that time no prince or noble of high rank walked out having servants on each side to help him along. he went upon horseback there was a man on each of the pony to hold his legs in place and keep him falling. These eunuchs were almost as gorgeously sed as the Crown Prince. They wore hats and ns and big boots and had great gold-embroidered ares on their chests and backs. The highest of them golden buttons behind their right ears, attached to ir headgear, and they had long wings on each side of ir caps, which stood out like ears, denoting that their ers were always listening for the commands of the g. There was nothing of the kind in our interw today, and the audience, all told, was not differt from that of the principal courts of Europe, and dress of the officials and of His Majesty was about same.

Emperor and the Athletes.

It seems to me that the Emperor is much brighter to- than when I saw him as Crown Prince. The Japa- officials tell me he appears to be waking up, and t he shows more and more ability from day to day. Japanese are ruling the Emperor through his Cabit, but there are many papers he has to sign and some ments which require his official sanction. He has n taken out of the palace and has visited one or of the near-by towns. He does some things which w the existence of humor in his make-up, and he is ious to know what is going on in the country. The er day, for instance, there was an exhibition of athic sports here in Seoul in which all the schoolboys part. There were foot races and other contests, appropriate prizes, and the people in general came to see. About 10,000 were present. The contests ated a great sensation, and the Emperor, hearing of m, ordered the prize winners to be brought to the ace to run before him. As they did so, he was deted and laughed and applauded. At the close of the s he ordered his highest court officials to come out and run a race among themselves. Many of these men old fellows, accustomed to being held up by the s, as I have described.

Some had never done a stroke of work in their lives, none had ever run before. They tried to beg off, one or two attempted to hide. They were all ged out, however, and made to run, while His Majy uproariously laughed.

New Palaces.

After leaving His Majesty, I met the vice-minister of household department, who has charge of all the es of Seoul, and is practically the business mana- and adviser of the Emperor. We went together ugh the audience hall, which is now being repaired, afterward visited the museum which the Japanese established in one of the old palace buildings, and ological garden, where His Majesty has a tiger, a and the beginning of a collection of the Korean The audience hall is several hundred years old. It is one of the finest buildings of Korea, but it was going to ruin when the Japanese took hold. They are now rebuilding it and adding many improvements.

Imagine a great temple with a double roof of heavy tiles, rising more than a hundred feet above the ground. Let it have a ridge roof, curving after the old style of Korean architecture, and decorate its many rafters with carvings painted blue and red. Let wide stone steps, beautifully carved, lead up to the stone platform and on into a hall, and you have the back of this structure. At the front and on the sides are long halls surrounding a court which covers perhaps a quarter of an acre. These halls are being reconstructed, and they are to be used for the imperial receptions and dinners. The court is to have a fine garden, in which fountains will play. The interior of the audience hall, which has a floor about 100 feet square, is being laid with mosaic flooring. It has a ceiling, wonderfully carved, which rises about seventy-five feet above the floor, being upheld by many red pillars, each as big around as a flour barrel, but in one log as cut from the tree. The carvings and decorations were made by the Koreans of 200 years ago, but the floors are being put in by Japanese carpenters. When completed, this structure will be one of the finest audience halls of the world.

Benevolent Financiers.

THE HOTEL CLERK ON THE ACQUISITION OF WEALTH.

By a Special Contributor.

"I WISH'T I'd been born rich," said the House Detective of the St. Reckless.

"The time for you to begin wishing that wish was about the time your parents first got acquainted with each other," said the Hotel Clerk. "You're a trifle late with it, now. After a man gets to be 40 years old and has a mustache like a pair of epaulettes, it doesn't do him so very much good to go around wishing he'd been born under a different set of plans and specifications. But if it's wealth you crave, or dross, as the pure in mind call it when they haven't got any of it, that's easy enough. This town is all gummed up with philanthropists just palpitating with eagerness to enrich their fellow-men."

"Show 'em to me," said the House Detective. "That's all I ask—just show 'em to me once't."

"I'd be glad to," said the Hotel Clerk. "All you've got to do is to buy a paper and you'll find their benevolent impulses springing at you from every other page. It's a mistake to think that the world is trying to get rich at your expense, Larry, and mine. This great, warm-hearted, loving world of ours, that's round like a ball, except at both ends where 'tis flat like an orange, although some think 'twould be better to compare it to a lemon, is full of people actuated solely by the desire to make every one of us independently well off at comparatively no expense whatever. If you don't believe me, look at some of the advertisements.

"There's the fellow who's worked out a sure system for beating the races, only he's too generous by nature to want to hog it all for himself and is slipping a small card into the sporting page advising everybody to send all their spare money right away to Honest Johnny Grafton for investment in a little pippin that's scheduled to start at Oakland the day after tomorrow and can't lose unless they should cut off all four of her legs and hide them where she can't find them. There's a small picture of Honest Johnny Grafton that goes along with this cordial invitation, to inspire added confidence on the part of the general public. He has a frank open countenance, something like a can opener, and you can tell by the way his eyes are set in his head that he's so busy looking every which-a-way to find good things for his customers that he hasn't had a chance to look straight at any time. He's the fellow you've been hearing about that put all the bookmakers in the poorhouse."

"I ain't heard of no bookmakers goin' to the poorhouse," said the House Detective.

"Well, maybe they haven't started yet," said the Hotel Clerk. "But they'll be on their way as soon as Honest Johnny Grafton and his worthy associates in the winner-picking line can get enough confidential clerks and receiving tellers sufficiently interested in the movement. The only trouble so far has been that so many of the patrons fail to stick until the system has been thoroughly worked out. They start uptown on a car with a bunch of negotiable soap wrappers in their pockets, and absent-mindedly drop off at Toronto, Canada; or they stay in jail for seven or eight years; or they excuse themselves some morning when the bank examiner has dropped in unexpectedly and go down into the vaults with a revolver and shoot themselves in such a manner as to make a very mussy job for the janitor.

"Then there's the alluring prospectus of the benevolent party who drops you a cordial line in print to say that because he abhors the idea of owning all the money in the world, he'd be willing to let a few nice people in on a proposition that looks like a thousand dollars profit on every share inside of ninety days; but will be sold for a limited period only at 30 cents for the common stock, 35 for the preferred; parties taking more than $8 worth at a time being advised to buy a wheelbarrow to take the quarterly dividends home in, or words to that effect. Yet some people are still so benighted and narrow-minded in their ideas as to intimate that the average Wall-street promoter is a kind of financial Luther Burbank who devotes his life to the development of water blisters."

"Did you say water blisters?" asked the House Detective.

"Sure," said the Hotel Clerk, "water blisters, with the promoters furnishing the water and the public furnishing the skin. And when somebody sticks a pin in one, it blows up. But that's only what envious people say. I don't see how anybody can read the statements of those generous mine owners and investment brokers and bucket shoppers, and still have the heart to question the purity of their motives. If you can't trust the man who's willing, without knowing anything about you, to take your money and treat it just as though 'twas his own, who in heaven's name can you trust?

"And we mustn't overlook some of the real estate bargains that are literally thrown at us from time to time, either. This thing of being able for a dollar down to secure title to a magnificent seaside bungalow that has running water in every downstairs room—when the tide's in—always did appeal to me, although, as it happened, I never saw the time when I had the dollar to spare. I guess it's in our blood to seek these desirable treasure troves in real estate that are being literally given away because the owner of the land loves his fellow-man thus deeply. Columbus and Cortez and Balboa and all those other early discoverers were the first real-estate operators we had and they were hits at it, too. One of those old boys would load up a ship with a crew of merry men who'd gone to sea because they didn't want to go to jail and he'd sail west until he came to a noticeable body of land, such as a continent, and he'd say: 'I take possession of all this territory and any other territory there may be in this section, in the name of her Gracious Majesty, Queen Isabella of Spain,' and then declare an open season on the original inhabitants and let it go at that. There was a generosity and a broadness about their way of stating a realty proposition that's been used with great success by the people in the same line of business ever since. And look at some of the bargains there've been in this country. Manhattan Island was bought from the Indians for $24, and now the cheapest election district in town costs more than that every time there's a Democratic primary. A hundred years ago you could get a county in almost any State east of the Alleghanies for considerably less than its present member in the Legislature would cost you, and the county stayed bought.

"But I think it's the generous, disinterested way that the developers have of putting up a realty proposition that lures so many into going into those just-like-finding-it companies. I've known men who couldn't ride in a taxicab without giving a convulsive start every time the meter added another dime's worth on, and they always bit their small change to see if it was good, and yet they couldn't pass up any deal where the noble-hearted proprietor advertised that he was working only for the personal satisfaction of bestowing large profits upon total strangers.

"You recall what was said by the lover of mankind who engineered last month's little corner in wheat, don't you? Naturally we felt a mite peevish when wheat went up so high that leaders of society began to talk about wearing it for jewelry, to the grand opera, instead of diamonds. When you bought a half a dozen rolls for the family, the baker handed you out something that looked like a set of collar buttons, and when you tried to eat one, it slipped up into the side of your mouth and reminded you of a new gumboil. It took two Vienna loaves to equal one five-grain capsule, and the hole in the doughnut grew until there wasn't much difference between swallowing a doughnut and taking deep-breathing exercises. But when people chided the gentlemanly highbinder who was presiding over the corner, he explained that he wasn't doing it on his own account. Any such small matter as the eight or ten millions that he might accumulate would be purely incidental to his real motive, which was to help the worthy farmer along."

"Well, did he help the worthy farmer along?" asked the House Detective.

"About the time he uttered those touching words the worthy farmer was taking off his winter clothes and lending them to a scarecrow," said the Hotel Clerk.

"Young man, go into the summer drink business if you want to retire a millionaire," said Albert W. Braisted of Boston at the Arlington. "I know one man who started twenty years ago with a capital of $40. The first year he made and sold only sixty gallons of a certain drink of which last year more than 1,000,000 gallons were disposed of. In twenty years the man who started with $40 now earns on his summer drink more than $1,000,000 each year.

"He builds every twelve months a great office building in some of the big cities with part of his profits. And his business is growing larger every year. There is a tremendous profit in it, for stuff that he sells to the soda fountain for $4 a gallon costs him about $1.50. Yes, the summer drink business, if one gets started, is better than almost any manufacturing business. There are in this country more than 100 persons who manufacture summer drinks in immense quantities. All of them are accumulating, or have already accumulated, fortunes. Get in the summer drink business if you want to roll in wealth."—[Washington Post.

Mail Boxes on Trolley Cars.

The trolley car has been put to many uses in addition to that of carrying passengers, but it has remained for Grand Rapids, Mich., to find a new use for these vehicles, and this is the collection of mail. Mail boxes are affixed to the cars, and whenever a person wishes to have a letter reach the main postoffice in a hurry all that is necessary for him to do so is to wait on a street corner until a trolley car happens to stop at that place. The letter deposited in the box is sent direct to the trolley terminal, where carriers are in waiting to convey the mail thus collected direct to the main postoffice.—[Omaha Bee.

Guarding Yankees.

TROUBLES OF OUR CONSULS IN TURKEY AND PERSIA.

By a Special Contributor.

IT'S not all beer and skittles and siestas in the shade of the sheltering palms, this Yankee consul business, in the balmy old Orient.

Here in this fortnight we have had one of these near-diplomats bottled up by siege in a God-forsaken Persian town and a whole bevy of others of the same cloth sweating away in Syria, Armenia and Asia Minor, surrounded by massacre and carnage and the shrill shrieks of women and infants put to the heathen scimitar.

He who has been bottled up in the awful siege of Tabriz is our young preacher-Consul, the Rev. William F. Doty. A little while ago when, as Consul to Tahiti, he was basking in the peace and quiet of the Society Islands and reading his Testament to the grinning heathen, he little dreamed that he would now be shut in a stinking Persian city with a lot of revolutionists who were being starved into submission by the armies of the Shah.

Doty was a Brooklyn (N. Y.) boy, and he and his elder brother, Lamb, came to Washington in the early eighties, the latter working as a page in both House and Senate. William went through Princeton with all sorts of honors, and went back there for theology. Then the Presbyterians sent him as a missionary up among the heathen of the Adirondack Mountains, and after he had done good work there, the government sent him as a teacher among the Eskimos up in St. Lawrence Island, Bering Sea. Next his brother, Lamb, was appointed Consul to Tahiti, and he went along as clerk, succeeding to the consulship seven years ago.

In the Siege of Tabriz.

Tabriz, his present post, lies up in that northwestern-most neck of Persia which wedges in between Turkey and the southern point of Russia. Doty saw a strenuous time in this old Persian town the other day when the consulates there were threatened by the starving mobs who had heard of the Shah's order to let through the lines the provisions of the consuls. And even in the best of times this is a bad country, up around Tabriz. It was in this consular district, at Khoi, a hundred miles to the northeast, almost in the shadow of Father Noah's landing-place, Mount Ararat, that the Rev. Benjamin W. Laboree and his servant were murdered a few years ago by fanatical Kurds, who some time before had butchered a British subject.

Near Tabriz is the headquarters of the "American West Persian Mission," and this mixing of missionaries and bloodthirsty Kurds, who go together about as well as oil and water, increases the troubles of an American consul. The missionaries had to look to the British Consul here for protection until lately, when we transferred our consulate from Teheran to Tabriz. Mr. Doty being one of their cloth, of course gets along well with these American missionaries, but he has had some difficulty in maintaining neutrality among mission attachés who have sympathized with the Persian revolutionists—notably Baskerville, the teacher who was lately killed while making a sortie for food through the ranks of the Shah's army.

Kurdistan, the lair of the Kurds, stretches southward across the Turkish border to the plains of Mesopotamia, and just below this territory lies Bagdad, where we have a consulate that is now vacant.

Forbade Consul to Investigate.

Westward some 400 miles from Tabriz, across this treacherous Kurdistan, land of race hatred and religious fanaticism, the traveler comes upon our consulate at Harput, which town is the headquarters of the Protestant and Catholic missions to Armenians. Armenia and Kurdistan meet about here.

Anti-Armenian outrages have occurred from time to time in this district, and our relations with the Sultan became strained to a critical degree a few summers back because the Turkish authorities forcibly prevented Theodore H. Norton, then our Consul at Harput, from going over to near-by Sassoun and investigating the massacres there. Mr. Norton was transferred to Smyrna, and later to Chemnitz, and the present Consul back here at Harput is W. W. Masterson, a former lawyer and country editor of Carrollton, Ky. President Cleveland appointed him Consul at Aden, Arabia, whence he retired under McKinley, to be sent back again by Roosevelt, who transferred him to Batum, Russia, and thence to Harput last summer. He is a man of 48, and well liked.

New Man Sent to Massacre Vortex.

To wade in the gore foaming at the red vortex of the massacres in Southern Asia Minor, Edward I. Nathan, a young Philadelphian, only 30, has just been sent to Mersina, where we had no Consul during the April outrages. Mr. Nathan is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania. He is a lawyer and also a linguist, having a knowledge of Arabic, modern Greek, Russian, French, German, Spanish and Italian. He was made Consul at Petras, Greece, when 28, and he took a young bride with him when he sailed away to that sunny clime.

Since the blood of 25,000 innocents has just been shed in his new district about Mersina, Mr. Nathan has had to take off his coat and work day and night handling relief supplies. It was in this district that the first of this year's massacres broke out, at Adana, during the recent spring festival in honor of Mohammed, and just between this point and Mersina were the awful massacre and pillage at Tarsus. Tarsus was the most important city in Asia Minor at the time of Christ, but is best known as the birthplace of Paul, the apostle. And it was to Tarsus that Cleopatra took Marc Antony in her famous gilded galley, with the purple sails and silver oars. This post at Mersina was given a few w is no heaven in the best of times. The 150,000 people no sooner recover from a very severe winter than a very hot summer is upon them. Over 70,000 of the population were killed by an earthquake in 1822.

Almost due west, and near the sea, lies what is left of "Antioch the Beautiful," whose Armenian quarter has just been burned and pillaged, and part of whose Christian population has just been massacred. This, the most famous city of Mr. Jackson's district, was the ancient capital of Syria, both under the Seleucid kings and under the Romans. It, too, has been an earthquake victim, a quarter million of its then vast population having been killed in 526 A. D., and many others being swallowed up in 1872. While Tarsus was Paul's birthplace, Antioch was the scene of his early labors, and was the starting point of his missionary journeys. The disciples of Christ were first called "Christians" in this ill-fated city. And here, on the same soil just stained by the blood of Christians put to the scimitar by Mohammedans, Christian crusaders were putting Mohammedans to the sword eight centuries ago!

Assaulted Our Consul.

Our Consuls have had considerable trouble in this district. Mr. Jackson's predecessor, Consul Davis, was assaulted by some police and soldiers at Alexandretta while he was placing aboard a vessel there an American citizen accused of being a revolutionist. But this man wasn't taken away from Mr. Davis until the latter had thrashed a few policemen. Next the military governor insulted him, and finally some bricks were thrown at the consulate. Then things got so threatening for the Consul that a warship had to be sent to his rescue. It carried him off to Beirut for safety, but soon our Admiral Cotton brought him back to Alexandretta and made the military governor do some bowing and scraping. Then, after the warship had sailed away, the Turkish authorities snooped around for some means of getting square with Davis. Finally they discovered that he had failed to fly our flag over the consulate on the day of the celebration of the Sultan's accession. This oversight the Turkish government pretended to be a matter so serious that it could not be overlooked, and the State Department had to transfer Davis to another post.

Turkish Insolence to Our Representative.

And it has not been all wild locusts and honey for Gabriel Bie Ravndal, our Consul at Beirut, some 200 miles below, on the Syrian coast. He is a man of 44, born in Norway, but educated at the University of Minnesota and naturalized in this country. Having run a newspaper at Sioux Falls for eight years and having served in the South Dakota Legislature, he is thoroughly Americanized. President McKinley sent him to Beirut eleven years ago, and Mr. Roosevelt kept him there throughout his entire term.

This post demands a man of great tact, like the incumbent, for even in normal times the Turkish officials there are apt to go about with chips on their shoulders. A few years ago young William Magelssen of Minnesota, then vice-Consul under Mr. Ravndal, while returning to his office through the consulate grounds, was set upon by [illegible] natives, whom he gave a thrashing. Mr. Ravndal thereupon had the Turkish authorities establish a police station in the neighborhood of the consulate. A few months later, young Magelssen, while in a carriage near the consulate, was fired at with a pistol. This attack followed indignities to other foreign officials, the Italian Consul being robbed in his bedroom.

Two of our cruisers were sent to the scene, and Mr. Ravndal reported to the State Department that the local government appeared to be "implicated with lawbreakers (smugglers, brigands, etc.,")" and that Christians as well as Moslems were forced to desperate acts to obtain money and "satisfy demands from above." Mr. Leishman, our Minister (now our Ambassador) at Constantinople, vainly haggled for months with Tewfik Pasha over the Magelssen incident, and finally, at Tewfik's assertion, that Magelssen was "under the impression of an illusion," our Minister replied with heat, calling Tewfik's attitude "discourteous," and expressing surprise at the character and tone of his note. The turbulent element continued to murder and pillage at random in this district, and a year following an American lady and her [illegible], while on the balcony of their own house, were fired upon by four young Moslems.

Down at Jerusalem.

Down at Jerusalem our Counsul, Thomas R. Wallace, of Philadelphia, has been having a comparatively peaceful time, although sanitary conditions in this ancient capital of Palestine have long been a menace to the health of foreigners. "The filth is unbearable" here, according to a report to the State Department. Mr. Wallace, a man of 61, was a schoolmaster for ten years, then a lawyer for sixteen and a circuit-court clerk for [illegible] years, before President McKinley put him in the consular service. He has been at Jerusalem two years.

Up at Trebizond, on the Black Sea, is our northern-[illegible] consulate in Asiatic Turkey. In this district lies a part of Northern Armenia, including the recently-troubled city of Erzerum, Armenia's principal center of population. Milo A. Jewett, our Consul at Trebizond, was born of American parents at Sivas, Armenia, 175 miles to the southwest. He was brought back to America and went through the public schools of Milwaukee; also be[illegible] graduated from Harvard and studying medicine. He [illegible] years old and was assistant superintendent, of the Massachusetts State Insane Asylum for ten years, before entering the service as Consul at Sivas, his birthplace, under Harrison, seventeen years ago. He had been at [illegible] nearly fourteen years when promoted to Trebizond, which berth pays $500 more a year. The Sivas post is now vacant. It being in Armenia, the man designated there may see a little excitement.

All of these posts of Asiatic Turkey are under our consulate-general at Smyrna, the chief city of Turkey in Asia. Ernest L. Harris, the Consul-General here, is a young Iowan, still in his thirties, who went through Heidelburg University, taking all sorts of high degrees, including two doctorates. Before entering the consular service, eleven years ago, he was lecturer on Roman law at the Iowa University. He is an authority on international law, and was sent from Chemnitz to the ever-troubled near east three years ago. A Yankee Consul in even this city of Smyrna is not without anxieties for his fellow-citizens. It was here, a few summers back, that Dr. H. C. Shipley, an American, was knocked down, wounded and robbed, in broad daylight, by Turkish police, while walking through the ruins of the ancient castle at the back of Smyrna, but within the city limits.

OLDEST OF ALL THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MISSIONS.

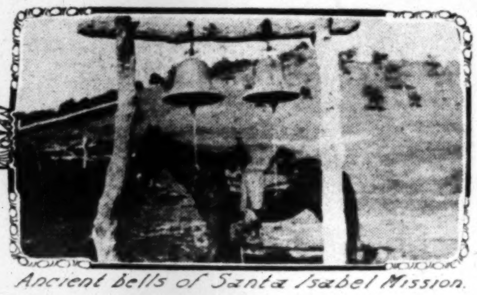
By a Special Contributor.

IN the annals of the Southern California missions there is one which occupies so inconspicuous a niche in the minds of the chroniclers as to scarcely be recognized with a mention, and yet this mission is one of the oldest, possibly the oldest, in the chain whose ruins are now one of the cherished memories of California's history.

This mission, the ruins even of which are now in a condition of decay approaching obliteration, is situated close to the far southern border, directly back of San Diego Bay, the first landing-place of Father Junipero Serra and his little pioneer band of priests.

So little known is it that even to San Diegans "The Old Mission" means the picturesque adobe structure that nestles in its grove of gnarled olives beneath the shelter of a group of ancient palms, in the Mission Valley, some few miles from the heart of the city. And the ancient "San Diego Mission" is indeed conceded to be the earliest of the edifices established, and surrounded by a historical atmosphere peculiarly rich in adventure and romance. But the Santa Isabel Mission is certainly the peer of the San Diego Mission in age, and may well vie with it in a past replete with tragic romance.

Group of oldest living members of Santa Isabel tribe



Ancient bells of Santa Isabel Mission.

This mission, or the tumbled ruins of the original structure flanked by the modest frame of its present-day successor, lies well back in the tumbling mountain country that reaches up to the blue Cuyamaca range cutting the eastern sky line. The Santa Isabel Mission is named for the valley which stretches, some forty miles back from the coast, a broad expanse of pasture and grain land between Ramona and the final mountain slopes that lead to the mining town of Julian.

It is not too much to say that this frontier outpost of a strange religion and civilization possesses a career of picturesque romance that ever hovered on the borders of tragedy, for the Indians of the Santa Isabel, the Mesa Grande, the Agua Caliente, and all the border clans and tribes about, cherish even now tales of those pioneer days, handed down orally from generation to generation, that give a most interesting glimpse into the past character of the Southern California aborigine.

It was plainly not an easy victory for the brown-cassocked priests, the first clashing with the warlike ancestors of the present-day mild, sleek and contented "good Indian" who harvests the ranchers' raisin crops and plays cowboy in the upland cattle ranges.

As told by themselves, the first padre, Father Graegorio, who ventured from the coast into the unknown interior, and coming upon an Indian camp, approached with arms outstretched and holding aloft a crucifix, was greeted with a shower of poisoned arrows, and died in the act of blessing his new-found flock—a crowd of frightened children, mad with superstitious fear of a thing they could not comprehend.

Many other priests followed, however, and the land was subjugated and its people ruled with an iron dominion. Looking upon the ruins of this scene of past effort, set upon a barren hillslope, at its feet lying the desolate Indian cemetery, the brown mounds each inclosed by ominous whitewashed fences, sign of the unsubdued nature forces yet lurking in the sage-covered hills, one realizes to the full the insistent thread of tragedy that bound the two warring human forces, the tragedy of renunciation that was the fathers', and the more bitter tragedy of submission that was the Indians'.

As so little is left now of the original building, the occasional services which are held here when a wandering priest passes through the region are conducted in a small plain frame building, box-like as to the exterior, and its interior fitted with a few wooden benches, on its simple altar an ancient illuminated Bible, bulky, and worn with much use, and the whitewashed walls decorated with cheap chromos, colored-paper frills, and gilt candle sconces.

But the enduring and unchangeable beauty of the mission is still there—the famed, sweet-toned mission bells. These two ancient bronze bells, cast away back in the sixteenth century, in the far-away motherland of Spain, brought on the long, perilous voyage on some early exploring Spanish galleon, around the stormy Horn, and finally in a strange land carried laboriously the forty or so miles back from the coast, to peal the matins for a dark-skinned, alien people—what a varied history they have had!

And how the hearts of the lonely padres must sometimes have ached as the clear familiar chime, the echo of quiet, cloistered, vineclad Spain, rang through the clear sage-scented alien air, across the dry, barren slopes of a strange, harsh land, and the dark, sullen peoples gathered in slow, grudging submission.

These bells, to see which many pilgrimages are made by students and "those who know," are remarkable apart from their historic connection. They hang suspended from a rude support of limbs, beside the ruins, and a touch will set them vibrating with a clear resonance of silvery sweetness. Full-toned, their melody carries for an incredible distance in the pure atmosphere of the Santa Isabel upland. The bells are some four feet in height, and quaintly marked with the date and place of their casting, in raised Latin inscription. Stained and weather-beaten, through the vicissitudes of the centuries, they yet carry unblemished within, the living call that has guided the footsteps of savagery into civilization.

An East-African Carrier.

A carrier costs about 10 cents a day in our money, with a few red bananas and green stuff thrown in for his food. One will "tote" a load of sixty pounds through a place where a Missouri mule would lie down in disgust. Toting here means a good many things. The packers will follow an elephant road, cut their way through flags and reeds high above their heads, wade through black mud waist-deep in the marshes and ford rivers up to their necks, and when they "squat" the bundle from their heads it will be dry and clean. There are many toters in the caravan. Mr. Roosevelt is a rather heavy weight, but the Baganda carriers have back muscles like iron that will hold him above the water unaided, for they are among the strongest men in the world, and "Ndulu" is the song in which they brag of their ability to do "stunts" like this. If Kermit takes a snapshot of his father sitting on the shoulders of a toter, his legs astride his neck, it will probably not be published; but this sort of thing is common enough in the swamps.

Some funny things go into those bundles. Not only food and clothing, dishes, bedding, even stoves; but they tie live goats and calves by their legs, curve them like links of the letter S and make a pack as snug as a blanket roll. To drive the animals on the ground gives a scent, and in many places they cannot walk, so it pays to carry them. Sometimes a pet dog or a calf will be fastened around a carrier's neck, while he balances the pack on his head.—[Day Allen Willey in Putnam's.

Montenegro's National Dance.

The national dance of Montenegro is the "Kolo," somewhat similar to the "Horo" of Bulgaria. Both sexes take part, crossing hands and forming an unjoined circle. The music they supply themselves, each end of the horn alternately singing a verse in honor of the Prince and his warlike deeds. The "Kolo" is always danced at any great national festival, and the effect of the sonorous voices and swaying ring is very fine. Then there is another dance performed by four or five, usually youths, to the accompaniment of a fiddle, the leader setting a lot of intricate quick steps which the rest imitate at once. It is really a sort of jig and makes the spectator's head swim if he watches it for long.

I never saw any dances in Northern Albania, though certain Slav artists love to depict wonderful sword dances, with beauteous maidens swaying gracefully after the style of nautch girls. A casual observer, who has seen the Albanians come into Montenegrin markets or to their great weekly gathering in the bazaar of Scutari, could never picture these stern, lean men dancing or at play. They never smile, and they look the life they lead, each clan ever ready for war with its neighbor and absolutely pitiless in the vendetta. The Red Indian is not more stoical in his bearing than the Northern Albanian clansman.—[Wide World Magazine.

Surgery for Trees.

STUDY METHODS WHEREBY THEIR DISEASES MAY BE CURED.

By a Special Contributor.

SURGERY for trees is the newest kind of experimental study undertaken by the government. In Prospect Park, Brooklyn, and in other suitable places, experts of the Forest Service have recently been engaged in practicing this novel art, performing operations of various kinds with antiseptic treatment, curing a good many sorts of tree diseases, and restoring unsound and rot-eaten monarchs of the grove to health by filling their hollow trunks with cement.

All of this is of great importance to the future of the forests in this country, inasmuch as the latter suffer annual losses from diseases of one kind or another running up far into the millions of dollars. The worst trouble, it appears, is caused by the fungi and boring insects which make their way into the sturdiest trunks and reduce them to mere shells—the death of the tree under such circumstances being of necessity not very long postponed.

A spreading chestnut tree—just such a one as that beneath which the "village smithy" stood—uplifts its mighty crest in umbrageous grandeur. But (as every passer-by might notice) its health is far from good. Of the nature of the trouble that afflicts it, there is no possible question. It is attacked by disease, which has already eaten great holes out of its trunk. If nothing is done to check the malady, the latter will steadily progress until the victim dies.

What is the cause of the mischief? The answer is that the huge plant is assailed by small enemies which it is helpless to resist—boring insects, that is to say, and parasitic fungi, which devour the healthy cellular tissue and transform it into so much rot. One often sees trees in such a condition; but, strange to say, until very recently, nobody thought of trying to cure a tree that was sick. If the "spreading chestnut" lost its health, it was simply allowed to perish. Why not? It was only a tree.

But ideas on this subject have undergone a radical change. It has come to be realized that trees are valuable, and worth saving. Hence the advent of a new art—that of the tree doctor, who is a trained scientific expert. He is a skilled surgeon, as well as a practitioner in the ordinary "family" sense. If it be desirable to amputate a limb, he knows exactly how it ought to be done—the important point being that the severed stump shall receive a proper dressing of liquid cement or tar, to prevent such "gangrene" as would otherwise be likely to follow, owing to attack of the exposed wound by fungi or insects.

The insects that do this sort of mischief are omnipresent. So likewise are the fungi; their "spores" (which correspond to seeds) are everywhere in the air. Painstaking precautions are demanded if such enemies to the health of the tree are to be shut out. If a physician in ordinary practice, where human beings, or dogs, or cats, were concerned, should fail to adopt similar prophylactic measures after cutting off a limb, he would be severely condemned. Yet it has been customary hitherto—and is even so today—to perform all sorts of surgical operations upon trees without any thought of protecting them against subsequent "infection."

It is obvious, then, that a new idea has invaded forest study. In fact, it is the government Forest Service that has taken it up, and is now developing the medical and surgical treatment of trees on a broad scale, through an elaborate series of experiments. Some of these experiments are being conducted in Prospect Park, in the city of Brooklyn—particularly certain ones which relate to the cure of trees that exhibit conditions of serious disease, made manifest by large cavities in their trunks.

One is accustomed to look upon such cavities as the result of decay. Quite correct. But what causes the decay? The answer is that it is a diseased condition attributable to attack by insects or fungi, or both. One effect of their operations is to render the tissues of the tree accessible to and permeable by moisture, which helps on the trouble. A cavity of the kind is like a hole in a tooth; it must be cleaned out and filled up with some rot-proof material, else the disease will steadily and surely spread.

This is exactly the idea on which the experts of the Forest Service proceed. The treatment, after all, is simple enough. They begin by cleaning out the cavity as thoroughly as possible with an iron rod or a short-handled rake—tearing out all of the rotten stuff, and incidentally removing the boring insects (which are using the hole for breeding purposes) and toadstools. The latter will come away, perhaps, in masses; they are active agents of corruption. As far as it is practicable to reach into the hollow interior of the trunk, the operator may find it convenient to use his hand to clear out the débris. But finally he gets the cavity pretty well cleaned up, thus accomplishing the first step in his task.

This, of course, is only preliminary. It is likely that some of the objectionable insects still remain in the cavity. But these, as well as all fungi and spores, are soon destroyed by an ingenious and effective process, which consists in covering the hole with a sheet of tar paper and filling it with a deadly gas—bisulphide of carbon. To make the covering of tar paper airtight, white-lead paint is smeared around the edges with a brush, and then a sharp-pointed syringe filled with liquid bisulphide (which quickly volatilizes) is thrust through the paper in a dozen different spots and emptied as many times.

By this means, the cavity is rendered absolutely void of life. At the end of a couple of hours every insect and every parasitic fungus that may have remained inside of the tree is dead. But, of course, if nothing more were done, the cavity would soon be invaded again, and the last condition of that tree would be much worse than the first. The tar paper would serve as only a temporary protection. It is, indeed, intended for no such purpose—the plan adopted being to remove it and fill up the hollow solidly with cement. When this has been done, and the cement painted over with a coat of coal tar, the operation is complete.

A tree that has undergone such treatment is restored to health. It is cured of a disease which otherwise must have steadily progressed, with, in the end, a fatal termination. Inasmuch as all the life of a tree is in a layer of vital cellular tissue immediately beneath the bark (the substance of the interior of trunk and branches being as dead as any rock,) the great plant may go on living for a long period after its stem has been hollowed out. But the fact that it is not in a healthy condition is shown by a diminution of foliage, and sooner or later it must succumb.

Operated on in the manner above described, however, it becomes like a new tree, showing every sign of augmented vitality. In other words, the patient recovers. It may be a very ancient and valuable tree—in which case the matter is of no little importance, its life being prolonged for a century or two perhaps. In a great park, like the one in Brooklyn, there are sure to be a good many trees that have become badly diseased. At all events, such has been the case hetherto. But, in future, means will be taken to prevent loss due to such causes—which may represent a large sum annually, if reckoned in dollars and cents. No longer will it be considered a matter of course that trees, if sick, shall be allowed to die, without effort to save or cure them. The tree doctor has come to stay, and from this time on, his activities wherever there are trees, whether in forests, parks, or city streets, will doubtless gain increasing recognition and importance.

W. W. Jacobs on Friendship.

The night watchman pursed up his lips and shook his head. Friendship, he said, decidedly, is a deloosion and a snare. I've 'ad more friendships in my life than most people—owing to being took a fancy to for some reason or other—and they nearly all came to a sudden ending.

I remember one man who used to think I couldn't do wrong; everything I did was right to 'im; and now if I pass 'im in the street he makes a face as if he'd got a hair in 'is mouth. All because I told 'im the truth one day when he was thinking of getting married. Being a bit uneasylike in his mind, he asks me 'ow, supposing I was a gal, his looks would strike me.

It was an orkard question, and I told him that he 'ad got a good 'art and that no man could 'ave a better pal. I said he 'ad got a good temper and was free with 'is money. O' course, that didn't satisfy 'im, and at last he told me to take a good look at 'im and tell him wot I thought of 'is looks. There was no getting out of it, and at last I 'ad to tell him plain that everybody 'ad different ideas about looks; that looks wasn't everything; and that 'andsome is as 'andsome does. Even then 'e wasn't satisfied, and at last I told 'im, speaking as a pal to pal, that if I was a gal and he came along trying to court me, I should go to the police about it.—[W. W. Naming a Kansas River.

Practically all the streams in Kansas were named by Indians and carry those names to this day, though in an Anglicized form.

The Neosho, the largest stream in southeast Kansas has its own little story. The Osage Indians at one time lived in Missouri, and when they began talking of trading their lands in that State and moving to southern Kansas, a party was sent out to look the country over and make a report on it. It was in the summer time and very hot and dry. Coming over the prairie northeast of Humboldt, they had a long way to travel without water.

"When they arrived at the river," says A. T. Dickerman of Oswego, "an Indian rode down the sloping bank into the water. But to his surprise, the horse stepped right off into deep water, and the horse and Indian went in all over. As the aborigine clambered back on the bank, he muttered, 'Wugh Neosho.' This, in plain English, means water pocket, or water hole, and the name clung to the stream ever afterward."—[Hutchinson News.

Why an Old Maid.

THE STORY OF A BACHELOR GIRL WHO WORKS IN WASHINGTON.

By Bessie Bunting.

ALTHOUGH I have been a working girl for quite a number of years; and although the girls always refer to me as "An Old Maid," I do not admit to myself that I am entitled to that classification. I am able to do considerable work; able to make a good income; able to look clean and wholesome, without paints, powders and dyes, and able to occasionally attract a second glance from stalwart men.

But, I will not defend myself, nor say as so many maiden ladies do, that "I could have been married a thousand times if I had wanted to be married." No, I shall do nothing of the kind, but simply tell you inquisitive girls why I am single; why I am working; why I never accept marked attentions from men; and why I am so contented with my life of single blessedness.

It came about this way. You see, my papa had been a newspaper man—a managing editor. Brother Johnnie had been a reporter; hard-working, ambitious and with a bright future. There was a street-railway accident upon which I cannot dwell. Brother Johnnie had been instantly killed. Papa was frightfully injured, but he struggled bravely to live, to prolong the life which he knew was so much to us. But, after several weeks of suffering, he followed Brother Johnnie, and we were left all alone.

Like all newspaper men with good incomes, papa and Brother Johnnie lived well, spent their money like water, the most of it for our home, but plenty of it in their fraternal newspapering good-fellowships. When they had filled their last assignments, we were without means and without incomes.

Mother was prostrated. Little Jennie did not understand. She grieved for papa and Johnnie, but the cutting-off of the income did not trouble her. The burden fell on me. The responsibilities submerged my grief.

I was not yet 17 years old, but a big girl for my age, and physically as strong as any boy that ever reported a cock fight or a prize brutality. I knew all of the newspaper "lingo" by heart, and had seen lots of the actual mechanical workings of the big office. I had plenty of self-confidence, and was really glad to get out of school; just like other girls; but I had an ambition to be helpful that other girls never know anything about. Papa had taught me considerable of Latin, and lots and lots of history. I had heard him talk politics with Johnnie, and, while he didn't know it, I was learning all of it as fast as Johnnie was, with my wide-open eyes and inquisitive ears.

Fortunately for me, and fortunately for all of us, the society reporter was married about four days after Johnnie was killed. I am glad to record also that it was fortunate for her, for she did not marry a newspaper man; all of them are night owls, necessarily. Miss Remington married a young man in the railroad offices, and now he is an assistant superintendent, with prospects of wealth and distinction. Inasmuch as he has a beautiful wife who also has gumption and domestic inclinations, he is happy, and of course she is.

Well, Miss Remington came out to our stricken home, and she told me that nobody knew of her intended wedding. She took me with her and induced the new managing editor to give me her place. She promised that after one week of honeymooning, she would come back and practically fill all assignments herself for a month or longer, until I had learned all the ropes. Bless her noble heart, she did it, too. At the end of four months, I was earning $20 per week, and we were out of danger of absolute want. We all made the best of conditions; although it was hard, as you may well understand. Papa had been getting $75 and Johnnie had been earning $28 per week, and that was quite an income for plain, unpretentious home folks.

One year and a half went by rapidly. Mother was contented and was proud of me; and I was proud of myself not a little. My sister Jennie was almost 12, and she was already shaping her views for the work-a-day world. Early in October the managing editor asked me if I could go to Chicago and telegraph the news of the big suffrage convention. I replied like a typical newspaper man: "Sure, Mike."

Then he asked me if I could also look after the doings of some politicians from our State who were expected to be there at the same time, and I replied with moderation that I'd try, and that I believed myself capable of filling the assignment.

He ordered railroad round-trip passes for me, as they could do only a little while ago. He ordered $50 for my expenses, and I went home, packed up, kissed mother and Jennie, and rushed to the depot, as happy a young woman as ever trod shoe leather—and shoe leather of her own buying, too.

When I got back home, everybody about the office took off his hat to me and bowed lower than ever before. The managing editor told me that nothing but absolute respect and love for me kept him from hugging and kissing me. He said that I had beaten all records in my stories about those female cranks and their antics. Moreover, he said that our paper was the only one that got the story of our Governor having been in Chicago meeting at a hotel certain influential railroad magnates, and practically "taking programme" from them, as to his future actions in the matter of the election of a new Senator during the coming winter. He said that if a man reporter had sent such stuff, he would have been afraid to print it, for fear of some error in fact or judgment; but, coming from me, he knew that I had absolute facts and so forth.

When I got home that evening, I told my dear mother that I had the big head so bad and hard that it ached me.

About the middle of November the managing editor sent for me, and greeted me with these words:

"You can't do any more society work on this paper."

I was frightened to death. I trembled and racked my brain to discover any "bad break" that I had made, or any bad "scoop" that might have been perpetrated. I didn't say a word, but tears came to my eyes and ran down my cheeks.

"There, there, don't cry," he said. "It's time to laugh, little friend of mine, for you're promoted."

I was sobbing then. I knew not why. He was a gentle gentleman and kind-hearted as a mother. He meant no more offense than if he had been my own father, and I knew it. Women know lots without words. He came to me quickly, took my cheeks between his hands, and kissed me and patted me on the head, and said:

"You are to go to Washington, just as soon as you can get ready, for I'm going to make you our Washington correspondent, at $40 per week."

I gasped out my surprise, and assurances of incompetency, but he put his kind hand over my lips and said:

"Your society stories alone will be well worth the salary. I've been there, and what you will do in the society line, when it is all new to you, will be a-plenty. Moreover, I believe that you will get better inside political news than any young man could get. At any rate, if you don't like the job, or feel that the job don't like you, the society desk will be open for your return at any time."

The next thing I knew, I was with mother. I have never been able to tell whether I went home on the cars, in a cab, or walked, or flew; but, honestly, I believe that I flew over the houses right through the air, I got home so quickly.

That evening was one long-drawn-out period of gossip and aimless chatterings. My dear mother never in all of her life had occasion to learn as much about business affairs, as I had been compelled to learn in a few years. Mother began planning and counting the cost of all three of us going to Washington; and I let her spend the evening in that delightful delusion. If I had combated the idea or ventured to suggest that I should go alone to Washington, mother would have slept not one wink all night. She would have worked herself up into such a nervous condition that I should never have been able to go to Washington at all. So I let her plan and suggest until after midnight. Then we went to our beds and to sleep.

After breakfast the next morning, just as I was about to go downtown, I startled mother with this remark:

"Mother, dear, I believe that I shall have to go on to Washington alone. I shall not feel right, taking you away from home and all of our friends; and I don't want to take Jennie into a strange city and send her to school with strangers. You and I cannot afford to be selfish. We must not risk Jennie's future, carelessly. I think that she will be better off here with you in the old home, at least for several months, until I can get acquainted, and get my bearings."

"But Bessie, my child, you can't go alone away off there——"

"Well, mother mine, we must think over it all, from all of its bearings. You think it over today, from the standpoint of Jennie's welfare only. You see, I'm grown up, and she's at the danger point of life."

Mother kissed me never so fervently, and hugged me as though she feared that I was slipping away from her. There were tears coming in her eyes, and my throat was full of gulps; so I ran off laughing, and trying to say that all is for the best always.

During the day, my managing editor provided letters for me, introducing me to about a dozen of the veteran newspaper men and women in Washington. He cautioned me by repeating again and again: "Never use one of these letters of introduction until the very minute that you need a helpful friend." He was wise, as well as good. He gave me lots of advice, too, and I made copious notes of all that he said, so that I could explain it all to my mother during the coming evening.

When I came into the front door, mother was there to greet me very warmly and lovingly. Instantly I knew what she had been doing all day. She had been praying. Dear mother always told me that the only true way to gain wisdom is by secret prayer.

Well, after dinner I told her and Jennie all that I had learned during the day, what I was to do, where I was to go, with whom I was to board, my letters of introduction, and everything that I knew, except one thing. I did not repeat that the managing editor had said:

"The boarding-houses of Washington are seething hell holes of corruption and vice. The women in them are creatures who have no real object in life. They simply live from day to day, without employment and without responsibilities. Consequently, they are, as a rule, all bad women—women to whom the word 'virtue' is as incomprehensible as the word 'art' is incomprehensible to a Hottentot."

That I omitted, not because I ever feared to tell everything in my life to my mother, but I believed that it would destroy her peace of mind and make her very unhappy. I know that it made me miserable to keep it to myself; but I knew that I was doing right, for I was not keeping a secret for an unworthy purpose. Finally, just before bedtime, mother said to me:

"I am taking this matter very calmly, as you see, and am resigned to your going alone. I have learned today, as I never learned before, that He who cares for the sparrows will care for my child; and I am absolutely sure that you will be safe, successful, pure and happy. I have not one single doubt of it. I shall not allow myself to be lonely, for I shall have my hands full and my heart full, looking after your sister. I am sure that Jennie will have more of her mother to herself now, when she needs her mother most, than she could have had if you had remained at home, or if we should all go together into the strange, big city of political and social turmoil."

Instead of taking two or three days, I took more than a week getting ready. There were lots of little details to look after, and my mother would not let me go until she had made with her own skillful fingers lots of the little needfuls for my comfort and appearance. But when the day came for my departure, mother broke down and cried for an hour or more. I soothed her a bit, and then left her alone in her bedroom, while I took Jennie down into the dining-room and had a talk with her there. I fully impressed upon her that she must take my place, and look after mother all of the time. Bravely she rose to that viewpoint, and when mother came to us she had come from her knees, for she was beautifully calm. Thus I left mother and Jennie each impressed with the duty of looking after each other; and they did; God bless both of them.

The express train was swift, and I will pass over my journey as swiftly. When I arrived in Washington I took a cab and drove to the residence of Mrs. B—— on N street, near Twentieth, northwest, where a room had been provided for me. My managing editor said that if there was one boarding-house-keeper in Washington in whom he felt confidence, it was Mrs. B——; and yet, he said, she might not be any better than the majority of the others.

Before noon of the first day, I found that my managing editor was absolutely right. There were seven women in that house. Their husbands were all government clerks. They had nothing to do but plan and perpetrate unwifely deeds. They all played cards, and they all drank beer; some of them whisky. Two of them smoked cigarettes. They invited me to join them in a game of cards after supper, but I declined, saying that business called me downtown in the evenings. There were two unmarried men there, and one married man, who stared at me with meaning glares; and I never so much wished for my brother Johnnie since he was taken from us.

In the morning, I did not come down to breakfast until all of the men were gone. During the day I made arrangements with Mrs. B—— to excuse me from paying for my suppers, on the ground that I should want to take many of my suppers downtown. I was to pay her 35 cents for every supper that I took at her table. Mrs. B—— did not like the arrangement very well, but she consented to it. Consequently, I never was obliged to endure those insolent stares again. The young men tried to get acquainted, but they failed. Nevertheless, they annoyed me not a little.

Some other time I shall tell you all about boarding-house life in Washington; but for the present, I must go after my Genus Congressmanus. Nine days would elapse before the opening of the work of the Congress, and I must get posted concerning the Capitol. I took a letter of introduction to Howard Kennedy, the chief guide to the Capitol. He was a veteran then, and he is there yet. I found him then and always a courtly, polished, kindly, lovable and honorable gentleman. He called a handsome man with white hair and white mustache; told him that I had come to him with a letter of introduction from one of his personal friends, and directed that I be shown everything; he repeated that word again and again. I do not remember the name of that elderly guide, but he was certainly a Chesterfield and a Telemachus combined. He spent three hours with me, frequently asking me if I was tired; and, when I finally admitted that the unusual amount of walking on stone floors was tiring me, he took me back to Mr. Kennedy and reported. Mr. Kennedy then took my hand kindly, while he said:

"Usually, we take people through this building and show them the principal objects of interest in one hour. You have spent three hours, and you have only just begun seeing it, as a lady in your business must know it. Now please take my advice, and come here every morning at 9 o'clock for the remainder of this week. I want you to spend three hours a day, or four or five if you can. When Congress convenes, I want you to know every committee-room, and how to find your way without a guide, into and out of every nook and cranny of this great labyrinth.

When I ventured a protest against spending my time that way, he smiled with a sort of fatherly sternness, and said:

"If you do not learn from one who knows, how will you ever learn? You can write interesting stories every day about what you are seeing; and you may be sure that you are writing stories that no other lady has ever written, for you are seeing things that they have not seen, nor even imagined. Now, if you don't mind me, I shall scold."

I did not dare to disobey this good friend. I followed his advice, and when the Congress convened, I was thoroughly ready for the work before me. Mr. Kennedy had procured for me a copy of the Congressional Record, and in it I found the names of all of the chairmen of committees. Moreover, he told me lots about the best men for giving news and so forth.

Then I ran up against the Press Gallery and its rules. Oh dear! I could not be admitted. No, indeed. Neither women, nor dogs, nor insane people, nor any other kind of living thing, could enter that great Press Gallery; nothing but men could go into that holy of holies.

Well, here was a situation! I was to compete with men, and be denied their privileges.

I sent in a letter of introduction to Judge Noah, and he came out to see me. Judge Noah was a Jew. He was the son of Mordecai Noah, who had been proclaimed King of the Jews by the last Sanhedrim, in 1847 or thereabouts. Well, Judge Noah was a Prince, all right. He led me to a quiet corner of the Ladies' Gallery, and told me all of the history of the Press Gallery, and how useless it would be to fight its rules, for I should lose

White Slavery in London.

CRUSADE STARTED AGAINST EVILS OF "LIVING-IN" SYSTEM.

From a Staff Correspondent.

LONDON, April 29.—White slavery in some of its worst forms exists in England among the clerks of the great dry-goods establishments. Rev. R. J. Campbell—the Phillips Brooks of England—has denounced the "living-in" system to which these women are subjected as a species of moral leprosy; and the recent issue of a government report dealing with the subject has more than justified his scathing indictment.

Herded together in great barrack-rooms, and fed like prisoners in compounds, these shop assistants, as they are called, are not only deprived of almost every form of personal liberty, but their meager wages are further reduced by a system of fines and penalties which make existence almost intolerable and impossible. From the purely moral standpoint, the lives led by thousands of these young women is open to the greatest temptation. Those unwilling to avail themselves of the so-called advantages of their position are condemned to an existence of wretchedness almost inconceivable under modern civilization.

Shop assistants in England occupy entirely different positions from the corresponding class of dry-goods clerks in America. In the first place, 450,000 of the 750,000 shop assistants in England are subject to the living-in system, which means that the clerks, whether men or women, must literally belong to their respective shops in the fullest sense of the term. They must sleep in great dormitories, eat in refectories provided for them, and be charged board and lodging at rates which in America would not be tolerated for a moment.

Interior of a great dormitory.

The salaries paid to many of these clerks are below what the commonest day laborer would command in the United States. Some women clerks start in at $1.50 a week, which, including their board and lodging, is supposed to be equivalent to about $7. As a matter of fact, their food and housing are so wretched that they get nothing like value for their services. Out of the pittance which most of these young men and women receive, they are expected to dress well and keep up an appearance in accordance with the tone of the elite establishment to which they happen to belong.

In the making of this appearance is one of the crying shames of the system. Many women starting in life as shop assistants find it necessary to make sacrifices which include pretty nearly everything which a woman holds dear; that is, if they wish to rise to positions of importance with fair wages. It is owing to this last phase of the subject that various religious authorities have taken up the question, and have begun an active crusade against the immoralities and tyrannies of the entire living-in system.

That these abuses exist, there is no shadow of doubt, despite the sweeping denials made by many important shopkeepers who have felt it necessary to defend their reputations. The Drapers' Chamber of Trade recently started to institute legal proceedings against the Rev. R. J. Campbell and others who exposed some of the worst phases of the living-in system, but after going into the matter, they were advised by their legal counsels, Lloyd-George, Roberts & Co., that they had no case.

Finding that the Rev. R. J. Campbell stood his ground, the Drapers' Chamber of Trade adopted a novel course of procedure. They invited him to appear before their assembly and discuss the situation. Daniel did not walk into the lion's den with less fear than the Rev. Mr. Campbell. Like Daniel, he also came off victorious. In a bold and fearless indictment, he produced facts and figures which were uncontrovertible. Many managers who had refused to consider the question before had their eyes opened, and, at the end of the meeting, the Drapers not only concurred in his scathing censure, but even offered to coöperate with him in his campaign against the system. This was certainly a moral and intellectual victory on the minister's part, and has amounted to a complete reversal of opinion among the heads of firms, who, up to this time, have shut their eyes to the wrongs of their employés.

Living-in as carried out today in England is an outgrowth of the early apprentice system, when workers were bound over without pay for a term of years to certain firms. In those days, young girls and boys came up from the country to London and other large cities where they were to learn their trades; and the parents were pleased to think that their children would be, as it were, under one roof, and free from temptation. It is behind this paternal bulwark that shopkeepers today take refuge, maintaining that they are the guardians of those under their care; and making a plea on the ground of morality for the penning-up of their assistants in veritable prisons. But the living-in system today has lost all its early advantages. The alleged paternal care does not extend any further than barring the doors at a certain hour each night—in some places 10 o'clock, in others 11—and shutting out all who may be a moment late. Even sickness on the part of an employé has no influence; and girls frequently find themselves shut out, though only three minutes late. No member of the firm takes the trouble of ascertaining whether or not girls are in their dormitories; and it is a general practice for excluded assistants to remain out all night in case they should be late.

In some cases the locking out of these girls has led to serious consequences. For instance, not long ago a girl from the country who had been employed only a few weeks in a big drapery establishment found herself locked out in the streets of London. She had no money, and did not know where to go. She was compelled to walk the streets all night. In the morning she made a row, demanded her fare back to her native village and forced the firm into compensating her for the outrage.

In many cases, however, girls do not worry themselves greatly about being locked out; and the shutting-out rule thrusts upon them a compulsory freedom of which they often take advantage. To show how easily the system may be worked to the moral detriment of the victims, Miss Bondfield, an active member of the Shop Assistants' Union, gave, before the government commission evidence of her own experience.

"When I was a young apprentice myself" she said, "I was employed in a house in Brighton. For the purpose of sleeping their assistants, they took various houses in back streets. My sleeping-room was on the ground floor, with the window facing on to the street, so that one could step into the street from the window, and back into the room from the street, without going through the door at all. I was put into a room with a woman of mature age who led a life of a most undesirable kind. That was my first experience of a living-house. There was another girl in the same room who was suffering from consumption. I was in that house for three years, and I could have been out any night during those three years without the firm knowing anything about it."

Speaking of certain London dormitories, Miss Bondfield said:

"If the girls are not in, nobody knows, provided their room mates do not tell tales. For instance, if one says to the other: 'I want to go to the theater tonight, do not split on me, and strip my bed in the morning,' the other girls will say: 'All right.' There is no possibility of finding out that that girl has not been in for the night."

The accommodation provided for the women in these great barrack establishments is sometimes quite unfit for human beings. In the first place, a number of the so-called apartments of the girls are in the most disreputable streets; so placed more or less from convenience to the firms in order that their working prisoners may be near the treadmill. There is one young ladies' dormitory in Greek street, Soho, which, according to a Scotland Yard report, is one of the worst streets in the whole of London. Young girls necessarily have to pass back and forth through this street. They often followed, watched, and insulted by men wh vote their lives to the pursuit of this sort of Representations have been made to firms who have sleeping-rooms in such localities; but, so far, no tion has been paid to such "trivial" complaints.

As to the actual accommodation itself, much evi has been submitted proving that the housing of shop assistants receives little attention from keepers. The following letter written to Miss Bon by a shop girl throws a lurid light on this subject:

"The bedroom allocated to the young ladies was merly a factory with those beautiful iron windows a small opening. There are three beds in one room, one single and two double. The beds mus made before we go down in the morning, and the room door must be kept closed all day, so you ca agine what the atmosphere is like with five girls ing in the room. In the first week of August, clean sheet was put on each bed, the others which been in use six weeks at least, were not changed October, when Miss —— came as a new assistant. next change was in December, when another new arrived, and in January two sheets were changed one bed in honor of the arrival of Miss ——. S are in use without washing for three, four, and six months. After handling them, I generally my hands, as my fingers are what we call 'gritty.'"

Despite the sorry nature of the so-called accom dation, many of the shops charge excessively for ing. One firm has built an enormous sleeping-ment-house just, off Tottenham Court Road o profits saved from wages of their assistants. This

With men shop assistants, the same rule applies women. Their accommodation is poor, overcha and practically permits of no home life whatever. assistants in England are not permitted to marry out the consent of their firm, and those who marry frequently compelled to lead double lives. They pretend to be bachelors and live in; and it is not usual for men to be discharged immediately on the covery of their marriage. One instance is cited man who lived-in four years, only seeing his wife children on Sunday, and then clandestinely. He discharged when his firm learned of his conduct. men are herded in barracks, and not having any life, drift into all sorts of undesirable associations. addition to this unspeakable situation, they are dep of the rights of citizenship, as persons living in ing-houses under such circumstances are not entitled the franchise. They thus lose the opportunity of taining, through their votes, legislation which better their condition.

If the sleeping accommodation is bad, the board arrangements are even worse. Most of the big feed their own assistants—for a consideration. government report on this subject says: "In many the food supplied is scanty, ill-cooked, and lacking variety, and assistants often find it necessary to plement food given them by private purchase." In in many establishments this custom of purchasing tras is encouraged and a commission is paid to who succeed in selling foodstuffs outside the re meals provided by the house. There is not only on the meals themselves, but on the extras. The dence of a Mr. Hoffmann, one of the government nesses before the Truck Commission, deals with subject in convincing language. Speaking of his experience, he says:

"I remember well one Sunday at —— the pressed placed before us glittered with all the colors of rainbow, and smelt very offensively. Breakfast general rule everywhere consists of bread and or margarine, with tea or coffee, or chickory and drawn from huge urns. Though some firms do little extras, or, as they are sometimes called, 'luxuri

One always knows what there is for by the day of the week, or gets to know the day week by what there is for dinner. Jocose.

AN EXCITING ADVENTURE WITH A SAFE-BREAKER.

By a Special Contributor.

MALARIA had driven me to the desert. It gave me a final shake at Yuma; left me as emaciated as a crow, my total assets 50 cents. I had one friend. Jocose, a hulky, jolly young canine, a smooth-haired brindle of all known breeds, had attached himself to me on the night of my arrival. We were loitering on the big iron bridge across the Colorado when I was accosted by a friendly stranger.

"Do you wish employment?" said he.

"I surely do," I replied.

"Used to living alone?"

"I never am alone," with a jerk of my thumb toward the ponderous Jocose.

The pentrating blue eyes of my interrogator twinkled merrily.

"I'm looking for a man to herd a mine," said he. "You and that four-legged partner will do first rate."

The properties of the Signal Mining Company, a twenty-stamp mill, a commodious office, stables, sheds and bunk houses, were crowded into a gash in the side of a rugged, verdureless mountain that reared up out of the desert like an island in the sea. I was put in sole charge while the warring stockholders plunged into a season of litigation.

There was nothing for me to do, absolutely, but to recuperate from the malaria and train Jocose. Jocose was a trifle slow in the head, but he liked being trained. Before or since I have never seen such a tremendously willing fellow. His repertoire of standard dog tricks, spiced by the Jocose temperament, became feats remarkable. No other dog could shut a door or shake hands or "speak" like Jocose.

I admit he was not a watch dog. As a belligerent, his opening record was far worse than mine. But this is how it happened.

I was grinding coffee in my hand mill one morning before breakfast when a sharp voice from behind ordered "hands up." So authoritative were the words that my arms shot toward the ceiling as automatically as though I had been raised on early-morning hold-ups. Then a few low words and a cold circle against the back of my head encouraged me to be very quiet while a dexterous hand searched my clothes for weapons.

I was ordered to put my arms behind me; and the cold circle at the back of my head wobbled and shifted while the robber, working with one hand, twisted a piece of baling wire about my wrists. Then I was allowed to face my assailant's revolver.

He was an undersized individual; he had bony, bow legs. That was all the impression I could get of him, as his face was closely masked by a frayed piece of gunnysack gashed with holes for nose and eyes. Jocose was licking his hand.

I was ordered then to lead the way to the office, where he made me lie face downward with my head in a corner while he knotted a rope about my legs.

The sight of Jocose, one-third puzzled, two-thirds playful, nosing affectionately about my head, appealed to the robber's sense of humor.

"I'll see that you're a good safe witness before I go," said he, making an ugly motion with his revolver, "but I'll keep that pup of yours. He will make a thousand-dollar watch dog."

It has since been proven that the cracksman was the paid agent of an unscrupulous faction of the stockholders, sent out to destroy certain documents. I believe now that he had little or no intention of taking my life; but at the time I had every reason to think he would execute his threat. I fully expected to be shot as soon as he had finished his business.

Threatening me with instant death if I moved a muscle, the robber turned to inspect the vault. The office was built on a terrace blasted out of the side of the mountain; the vault had been made by quarrying a chamber from the solid rock and facing it with a door of steel.

I lay, as I said before, with my head in a corner, but managed, by terribly straining my eyes, to follow the safe breaker's movements. To me his coolness seemed the poise of the callous, and I watched him with something akin to fascination.

For a long time he worked at the combination lock, twirling the knob slowly back and forth—listening, watching. After what seemed an age, I ventured to interrupt, telling the busy cracksman that the wire on my wrists was cutting intolerably.

I was a good deal surprised when he dropped his work and, without a word, hurried out of the building. He returned shortly with a length of pliable, loose-fibered rope which I recognized as coming from the bales of hay in the loft of the horse barn. He fastened me securely with this, then removed the wire, with the emphatic remark:

"That will do for you, now! It isn't safe to stir me up when I am figuring a combination."

It seemed many hours to me that the safe cracker fussed with the lock. Tedium outwore the earlier fascination, and I was left to endure as best I could the torture of my cramped position. Jocose snapped at flies and searched for cooler, softer corners. Occasionally in passing he gave me a tremendous sensation by affectionately licking in my ear. Apparently he was convinced that the game was stupid and some time would end.

The knob-turning cycle did end, finally, in a profane explosion of wrath from the exasperated cracksman. The outburst brought Jocose from his latest choice of corners. He made a cautious half-circle of investigation; then, planting himself squarely between me and the door of the vault, cut off my view of the cracksman's operations. After a little the clicking of a ratchet and the low metallic rasp of steel told me that he was drilling.

Presently the robber's breathing became labored, and finally the sound of drilling ceased. My straining ears caught a low rustling which I took to be the crumpling of a paper wad. When this was followed by the scratching of a match, I braced myself for an explosion. At this point the ponderous Jocose gave my nerves a tremendous start by making a resounding snap at a fly. No other explosion came; but I soon caught a whiff of tobacco, and knew then what had happened.

As the robber smoked, he began to fool with the combination again. I wished he could get that combination. Anything for me but that clicking. At the very moment of my wish the cracksman gave an exclamation of surprise and satisfaction; there was a clicking of mechanism, a grating of bolts, and the massive doors swung silently ajar.

Jocose, apparently very hopeful over a development that was new, moved out of my range, and I got a glimpse of the robber as he stepped eagerly across the threshold of the stone chamber. Immediately after, I heard him slamming books and rattling papers in a farther corner.

Then a wild burst of hope thrilled through and through me. The coming of that blessed emotion was like a skyrocket flaring up from utter darkness.

Jocose, with a flourish and a caper, had started for the door of the vault. Another bound, another caper, and he was reared with his paws against the smooth steel surface. It was his task to keep all doors closed.

Could he move it? Would the cracksman hear? The questions fairly choked me.

Yes, it did move; slowly—imperceptibly, almost—it obtained momentum. Jocose, in the release of a forenoon's bottled exuberance, was doing some valiant pushing.

My ear on the floor exaggerated a thousandfold the whisper of the perfectly-adjusted hinges—every moment I looked for the rustling and clatter in the vault to discontinue. What if Jocose should bark! And his toe nails—what a screeching!

But the door responded—it gained in responsiveness. And Jocose, in anticipation of the culminating bang, was making heavy bounds against it.

From within came a cry of angry warning—a swift rush of feet. I heard the scratch of buttons against the steel door; heard another cry, a cry full of appeal and horror—cut in half by a sullen, jarring chug.

I forgot that I was tied—and fell back, dazed almost, by a swift sensing of the situation. My eyes fell on Jocose, squatted before the big black door, head tilted and ears askew—listening.

Again I started to the rescue, slowly and thoughtfully this time, testing by every sort of twist and strain the knots and fibers of the rope that bound me.

The buzzing and scratching in the safe ceased presently. Jocose shambled over to me, muzzled me affectionately, betook himself to his corner.

I had satisfied myself that no amount of wriggling and twisting would set me free, when the rustling at the big steel door again began. The sound steadied—a faint, rhythmic clicking told me that he was at work. I remembered from my glimpse into the vault that it was without the customary inner doors; and conjectured that a follower of the bank-breaking craft could get at the mechanism of the lock from within, possibly by unscrewing the steel lining.

For an instant I wished him luck; then self-interest set me wondering what to wish, left me grimly determined to be first put out of bondage.

Cli-i-ck, click-click! It was the familiar sound of revolving tumblers.

Twisting my body about to see if the knob was turning, my feet struck something that clinked—a bottle—glass. With one eager flop, I rolled to my back, swung my bound legs into the air, and with one drive of my heels reduced the bottle to glass with knife-like, saw-tooth edges. A couple of hurried wriggles brought me on top of the jagged pile, my wrists downward. A few seconds of reckless sawing severed the strands of the baling rope. Then, working against moments clicked off by shifting tumblers, I busied my numbed hands with the rope that bound my ankles.

Reeling unsteadily, sore in every limb, I was at last struggling to my feet, when the harsh grate of bolts suddenly effaced all sense of the physical—sent me forward leaping. I met the door; with the deliberation of doors of steel it was slowly swinging outward—my weight, my momentum conquered.

Just in time to prevent the door settling back into place, the cracksman thrust a knife handle into the closing aperture.

"Give me air and I'll be good," he bawled through the crack, continuing, however, to desperately struggle against me.

"Be good and I'll give you air," I retorted, wedging my shoe between the base of the door and a niche in the stone threshold.

It was a chastened and shaken breaker of banks who finally consented to retire to the rear of the vault while I wedged and barricaded the door in such a way as to admit of light and ventilation.

Later he passed out his weapons butt first, asked for a drink of water, and, with the same breath: "Who shut me in?"

He was a model prisoner after that. We became friends in the long ten days of waiting that finally brought my employer. It was largely on account of the friendship which then sprang up that he received a light sentence, was afterward released on parole, becoming, finally, a citizen of good standing.

OLD-TIME TRAMP OVER MOUNTAINS SOON TO BE ACCESSIBLE.

NEXT summer, when the railroad now building along the line of the aqueduct is completed to Lone Pine and Independence, the mountain lovers of Southern California will rejoice in the opening of a new playground. They will climb Mt. Whitney, the highest peak in the United States, Mts. Williamson, Brewer, Tyndall, all above or close to the 14-000-foot mark, cross the high passes like the Kearsarge, and explore the cañons of the western slope, in which are the head waters of the Kings River, the Kaweah and the Kern.

John Muir says that the Kearsarge is probably the highest traveled pass on the North American continent. Winding over it today is a good trail kept in repair by United States forest rangers; and even the inexperienced mountain traveler, if he have a reasonable conception of a "good" trail in the high Sierras, and do not harbor a lurking notion that it would compare favorably with a suburban sidewalk, can traverse the lofty divide without a sense of great danger or even of extreme difficulty.

Indeed, the difficulty is not worth mentioning when the pleasures of the trip are taken into account. To rightly-constituted people camping in God's out-of-doors is in itself a great enjoyment; and when to this is added the Sierra environment of stately pines; green and velvety meadows; limpid streams here foaming in torrents, there gathered in placid lakes; pure mountain air so clear that twenty miles are as one; dark forests and dazzling snow fields; deep and gloomy cañons and massive mountain piles of all colors, from white to black, from green to red, topped by tumbled crags and steepled pinnacles—when these are the adjuncts of camping, difficulties merely add a zest to each day's delights.

One of Twin Lakes.

Twin Lakes.

Twenty-one years ago, as a youthful "tenderfoot," I crossed the Kearsarge to spend some weeks on Kings River with a single companion, a young cattle man familiarly known as "Pete," who was almost as new to the mountains as I. With sturdy saddle horses, and a strong pack mule for our bacon and beans, pots and pans and blankets, we left Independence at the foot of the eastern slope of the Sierras late in the morning of a day in June.

On the eastern side the approach to these mountains forms a contrast to that of most mountain ranges. There is no gradual change from level land to rolling foothill insensibly roughening and becoming more abrupt until the main range is reached; but the flat, treeless valley land seems tilted up toward the mountains, forming a gentle acclivity, terminated by the granite cliffs of the Sierras. As a consequence, the range rises before you at the start, a gigantic and apparently unscalable wall, its gray precipices towering upward from the top of the slope; above the precipices a dark belt, which you are told are trees, and which in your heart you believe can be nothing but brush, and scrubby at that; and, still higher, bald granite again, sheering upward into broken and jagged peaks, or crowned by great curving masses of snow.

In a deep notch of the mountain toward the upper edge of the timber belt, we saw the place for our first night's camp. The distance appeared short; how to get there seemed the question, as it would be to reach a spot on the blank side of a tall house. As the day wore on, however, we found the distance considerable. The slope was very deceptive. Appearing from Independence to be a few hundred yards in length and uniformly smooth, it stretched into seven or eight miles before we reached the mouth of the Kearsarge gorge, and proved to be deeply carved with the winding beds of former creeks, and strewn with boulders many of which were as large as a good-sized house.

Once in the gorge the way became more interesting. Broken and rough, the gorge showed few signs that it was once the polished path of a glacier, although for miles down the slope extended the high ridge of the ancient moraine. Independence Creek at this point, having as yet lost little water either by evaporation or sinking into the ground, is a considerable mountain stream ;and its pools, its ripples and its music were peculiarly delightful to us, dwellers in an arid land. Piñon trees, scrubby and scraggly, the first and unprepossessing specimens of the Sierra's conifers, stood here and there at a little distance, as in timidity; but as we zigzagged up the steep cañon, they gathered closer, and accompanied by more sightly relatives, crowded in troops around the trail, until at last we found ourselves winding among majestic pines.

Toward evening we reached our camping-place, Onion Valley, a beautiful little meadow fringed with pines and divided by a mass of willows hiding the creek, which ran through the middle. Freeing our animals of their burdens, we hastily staked them out in the rich grass, and went to catch some fish for supper. There was no trouble about this, and in less than half an hour we had more of the delicious little brook trout than two hungry youths could eat.

We were camped at the upper side of the meadow under a magnificent pine on the right bank of the creek. On the other side and lower down, the Kearsarge Peak lifted its gray pinnacle thousands of feet above us, and close to its top we could see a tiny house. A mine was being worked at that dizzy height. Down the gorge the eye traveled out over the brown and desiccated Owens River Valley, with its oases of irrigated land, to the grim and barren Inyo Range beyond, now glorified by the rays of the setting sun. From the right side of the meadow towered a mighty eminence with a great bank of snow under the beetling cliff at its summit. It was good to lie back on the fragrant pine needles and watch the shadows creep up the range across the valley until the sunlight was gone, to watch the daylight fade out of the sky, and the stars peep out one by one above the solemn peaks as the swift darkness came on.

Next morning an hour or two of hard climbing brought us beyond the timber line into a wild and desolate region of extinct volcanoes. Leaving our animals in the trail, we climbed to the top of one of the craters. Its inside was very steep, and at its bottom lay a sullen pool of black, motionless water, a hundred feet in diameter. The inner slopes were covered with fine sand, making it unsafe to stand within the edge. Two or three dwarfed and crippled pines struggled to maintain themselves on the outer sides of the cone, and in all the region there was no other vegetation. No animal life was there, not even a bird. Cold granite cliffs and peaks with patches of icy snow swung back in a great amphitheater round the dead volcanoes. The air was still and all nature hushed as if awaiting some awful event. The sky in its intense blueness had an uncanny look, and even the bright sunshine appeared unnaturally yellow. In speaking, we involuntarily lowered our voices, for the stupendous scene filled us with awe, and with a sense that we were in a border land on the confines of eternity.

The pass itself, which is not far above the craters, was covered with the talus from a high peak on the north side. There was not a particle of soil for half a mile on each side of the summit, nothing but loose rocks, mostly oblong fragments from a foot to three feet long, among rough-surfaced boulders. No trail could we find; but here and there to show where last year's trail had been two or three rocks stood one above another on a boulder little monuments such as are to be found all through the mountains, wherever the path becomes indistinct. It was hard walking for the animals, stepping from one loose rock to another, and now and then getting a foot down in the holes between; and when we reached the beaten track again nearly every shin and fetlock was cruelly skinned and bleeding.

Passing through the upper belts of the timber was all very well; but when we got down to Bubb's Creek, which flows into Kings River, I was ready to proclaim my preference for the rocky heights. There, the absence of animal life had contributed to oppress the spirits; here, the too abundant presence of one animal made the descent as hard a piece of walking as I have ever done.

Since then I have been in a few places where snakes were thought to be thick, and have encountered rattlesnakes of all sizes, colors and kinds; but I have never seen snakes either so large or so numerous or so sleep was not yet to be ours. Huge mosquitoes by score attacked us; and although we covered our with our blankets, one would be sure to find a is, or else bore through blankets and all, in time to of sleep. After fighting for an hour, I began to but it was to dream of clinging to the face of a pice, or of being surrounded by a writhing mass hissing serpents. It was a relief, yet an incomplete to have the hissing resolve itself, as I awoke, into provoking chant of a full choir of mosquitoes.

Pete was sitting up. He said he couldn't sleep for ing of tarantulas and scorpions.

"These dry logs," he remarked, "are often full of pions, and if one should get into our blankets——"

I was wide awake in an instant. Close to my head alongside my bed was a large, dry log, perhaps the of a thousand crawly poisonous things. I lay still moments, trying to think coolly what were best do; and then started wildly as something touched my It was only the blanket. Panting and beginning feel very warm, I remained a few minutes longer I felt a sensation as of something crawling near foot. With a yell that brought Pete to the perpendicular in an instant, I jumped up, declaring I couldn't stay there another minute. He was not loath move, and said it would give him the "fan tods" to there all night. I didn't stop to inquire what the tods" might be, for I was satisfied that if they at all equal to their cause, they were bad enough. Fortunately, the moon had risen over the cañon wall this time, making the scene almost as bright as day. Gingerly we picked up our blankets, shook them carefully, and started down the trail. It was now toward night, cool and delightful, and the mosquitoes were to bed. About 200 yards down the cañon, we upon high ground clear of undergrowth and beneath great pines. It was an ideal spot for a camp, and were so delighted that, instead of going to bed at we made a roaring fire, and sat down to discuss day. Camping on Kings River had its pleasures all.

But our adventures were not yet at an end. In a lull the talk a splashing in the river drew our attention, the sounds showed that a large animal was fording. Very distinct in the still night was the rolling of boulders displaced by the animal's feet.

"There's your bear, Pete," said I.

"It's a bear all right," he replied. "But it don't belong to me, and as I guess it will keep away from this I'll not ask it for anything else."

We were making preparations to turn in, and I was ing off my shoes, when we heard a single "thump!" the brush toward the river.

"What's that?" I asked.

"Dunno; sounded like something heavy."

We kept still a few minutes, listening intently; and as we had given it up, "Thump!" it went again. time it appeared to come from a clump of brush fifty feet away.

Throwing some fuel on the fire, I looked anxiously at who was reaching for the rifle. He appeared a pale as he told me I had better get the revolver.

For what seemed a long time, but was probably only few seconds, we heard nothing. Then, "Thump!" that sound again with startling distinctness. Whatever it was, it was certainly very close, and must appear within the light of the fire.

Carefully I cocked the revolver, mentally noting as med a secret suspicion that I was a bit of a d.

"Thump!"

Without moving my eyes from the spot whence came sound, I saw Pete's rifle go up and the flame spurt the muzzle.

Amid the thundering echoes from the cañon walls, we distinguished a slight rustling in the brush.

When silence came, we waited a few minutes, and sallied warily toward the enemy, Pete guarding right flank with the rifle again ready for action; I the left, a huge brand from the fire in one hand, the revolver in the other. We could see nothing at but finally, in a depression filled with dead leaves, found, with a bullet hole right through it from breast back—an immense bullfrog!

I looked at Pete, and Pete looked at me. Probably he in my face the same irresistibly comic look that I in his, as the tense expression faded away, for we simultaneously into shrieks of laughter.

The poor bullfrog had evidently been attracted by the light, and was coming to investigate as fast as its bulk would permit. How Pete happened to hit, never could tell. He fired at the sound, seeing nothing but unable to restrain himself any longer.

The incident broke the chain of our discomforting experiences, gave us sound sleep for the rest of the night, and somehow seemed to help over every difficulty we afterward met with during the trip. At the of three weeks the clothes we wore were ragged generously decorated with the color of the frying but we were seasoned so that bear tracks had no terrors, and even the snakes appeared rather helpless vicious.

The Kearsarge Pass and Bubb's Creek are well known at present to the more adventurous pleasure seekers of Sierras; and the sublime cliffs that border Kings far higher than the more celebrated precipices the Yosemite, together with the Kings River grove Big Trees, containing the largest individuals known, become widely famed. And now, the tremendous scenery of the Kearsarge, among whose shattered and terrific gorges the spirit is subdued as if wandering amid primeval chaos, will soon be brought within day's journey of gay and thoughtless, or busy and grubbing, Spring street.

JAMES E. REYNOLDS.

The Problem of Mars.

ASTRONOMER TELLS HOW IT MAY BE SOLVED.

From London Graphic.

BERLIN, April 5.—"For £75,000," said the astronomer, patting the tube of the great telescope, "that is, with an instrument three times the size of this, the question could be practically settled."

"I am afraid I don't understand," I replied.

"Well," he said, "for £75,000 I could construct a telescope on this model which would distinguish objects in Mars about one kilometer apart. Then I could tell at once if there were settlements of living beings."

"Do you mean you could see the beings if they were there?"

"Oh, no! We haven't got so far yet. Perhaps—I don't know—perhaps we never shall. But we could tell if there were cities, villages, settlements. In fine, we could tell if Mars were inhabited for a sum of 1,500,000 marks—£75,000."

"Do you think, then, there are living, intelligent beings in Mars?" I inquired.

"Why, yes," replied the astronomer. "I think so. Almost I know it. You remember the canals on the enlarged photograph I showed you. Well, they are artificial. It is almost scientifically impossible that they should be natural. But I don't think it follows that they are the work of superhuman genii. In fact, I think the banks are piled up, not the canals dug out. Sometimes one can see that the banks, like great dams, have burst, and the water floods the space between one canal and the next. That seems to show that the canals are rather formed by dams than by excavation. Photographs taken even with this telescope show the melting of the snows quite plainly."

Perhaps I had better explain. The astronomer was Dr. Friedrich Archenhold, the director of the new Treptow Observatory (the Greenwich of Berlin) and the inventor of the telescope which henceforth will forever bear his name. And first of the telescope. It is 70 feet long, whereas the longest before it was that at the Yerkes Observatory (60 feet.) The lens measures in diameter 70 centimeters.) (Yerkes 104, the Lick Observatory 96 centimeters.) Thanks to the great concentration of light possible with the Archenhold telescope it is possible to magnify to 6000 diameters, whereas the Lick telescope gave only 4500. These are details which it is necessary to note, but they do not constitute the explanation of the amazing calculation regarding Mars which I have just quoted. Dr. Archenhold's great contribution to, or rather revolution of, giant telescope construction consists in the abolition of the expensive and clumsy revolving cupola or dome. Most people must at some time have seen and had explained the way in which the dome containing the eyepiece of a giant telescope is made to revolve so as more or less to follow the orbit of a star. The cupola is more expensive to construct than the telescope itself. Moreover, on the dome system the observer has to follow the eye piece round. As in the Archenhold system, there is no cupola, the observer remains stationary on a platform. The telescope is mounted on mechanism which enables it to take all the movements of a ball in a socket, so that it can exactly follow the orbit of any star. Double electric machinery within the base of the brick foundation enables the operator above to move the telescope in any direction by the simple touch of handles. In wet or windy or cold weather a movable screen running on sloped rails covers the eyepiece, and the electric attachments at the operator's hand. In one sentence the Archenhold telescope unites the point of observation with the axis of revolution, which in the cupola system was impossible.

The difference in price caused by the abolition of the cupola is as 1 to 16. The Treptow Observatory, with all its advantages, cost £12,500. On the cupola system it would have cost £200,000. A telescope large enough and powerful enough to settle the question of the habitation of Mars could be built by Dr. Archenhold, as he said, for £75,000. On the cupola system it would cost about a million and a quarter sterling.

From the achievement I turn to that which is, after all, the more wonderful, the Faith and the Man. Dr. Archenhold was born in the year of the great comet, 1861. Before his birth his mother watched that comet, and to this fact he attributes his unfailing attachment to his science. "If they took the stars from me," he said, simply, "I should die. I would rather die." Easily said, but if you look at the strong face and the eager eyes, you cannot doubt that it is true.

Again and again Dr. Archenhold has all but given his life for the faith that is in him. In the new observatory (opened last Sunday) there is, for the free use of students, the finest astronomical library in the world. It contains 10,000 volumes—the result of the hardest self-renunciation. For nine years he starved himself for his library, and those years of physical suffering have written their record on his face. For twelve years Dr. Archenhold has lived and worked at Treptow in a wooden shanty, a bit of which can be seen at the foot of his telescope. Now, of course, when all the scientific world knows what the man has achieved, the government would like a little credit from it, and offers him £2500 to help clear off the debt on his new buildings. "But times are bad," said the astronomer. "But times are bad," said the astronomer. "The telescope isn't a Dreadnought, and it isn't an airship. And I have not yet got the money." One knows what Zeppelin did and suffered before the government held out its hand. This man has done what no airship can ever do, and he has suffered more. The struggle is over, and the achievement is complete. The working people of Berlin, the "little folk" that Kipling talks about, knew and put their faith in Archenhold while governments doubted him. The trade unions of Berlin guaranteed 100,000 tickets at 6d. a head so that he might go on to build a worthy house round his telescope. The government will—some day—pay £2500.

And the problem of Mars can be solved, will be solved, some day soon, with an Archenhold telescope, and by the faith of an astronomer. For faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.

JAPAN'S DAY OF DOLLS.

WHEN THE HONORABLE LITTLE PEOPLE SIT IN STATE FOR ONE LONG DAY.

[New York Sun:] On just one day in all the year the little daughter of the Japanese house counts for more than the nursemaid for her younger brother, and that is the day of O Hina Sama, the Honorable Little People. It falls on the third day of the third month, and for all the full daylight hours of that day little Iamesan or Takenoko reigns queen over the household.

When the doll festival had its inception, not even the Japanese themselves know. Perhaps the kindly Buddhism of the elder day provided this holiday for the little girls as it established the boys' day, when every housetop flutters with wind-blown paper fish, one for each boy below the roof tree. Whatever may have been its first significance, the day of O Hina Sama is now a day when marvelous dolls are on parade.

About the middle of February the doll fair in anticipation of girls' day opens in every city and village throughout the island. The craft of dollmakers is of small numbers, for on March 3 only are their wares designed to please.

Because of the limited scope of their sales, the dollmakers turn to the most intensive exploitation of the necessities of O Hina Sama. In their stalls they exhibit dolls' furniture, complete wardrobes for the honorable little people, sets of china and lacquered dishes, even tiny tansu, or bridal chests, for the accommodation of the doll brides' trousseaus.

In the doll bazaar that flourishes for a brief two weeks there are prices for all classes. The Emperor and Empress in effigy may be had for the equivalent of $1.25 up to $5; a set of court maids of honor is valued at the same price, while a complete royal family with court attendants, palace and orange trees, will run as high as $200.

All of these beautiful toys come to the girls in white wood boxes, ready to be set in the high seat of honor that every house, even the humblest, provides in its living-room. Before the great day arrrives, little Miss Plumblossom prepares with her own hands, if she is able, a fitting feast for the honorable Hina Sama.

Of rice cakes, baked with bean meal, she makes a-plenty; mochi, a kind of sweetmeat in high favor with the little ones, is set in reserve, and a variety of thick syrupy wine only drunk by the little girls and their guests on this holiday is provided by indulgent fathers.

On the morning of the doll festival the little daughter of the house is up early to set out in due order of their rank the dolls, and to provide for their comfort so far as her father's purse has stood the strain of the last week's bazaar.

First, she sets high above the heads of the less exalted the imperial pair, arrayed in gorgeous brocades after the manner of the ancient Emperors and Empresses of the Shogunate. The Emperor carries his two swords and his imperial spouse, her eyebrows shaved off and replaced by inked lines, holds in her delicate fingers a fan.

Below these revered individuals are arranged three maids of honor, with vases of flowers and a miniature wine bottle between them. Their sole duty is to fill the cups of their Majesties with honorable sake as occasion demands.

Still below the maids of honor on the dais stand Sadaisin, the Minister of the Left, and Udaisin, the Minister of the Right, with bow and spear to defend the persons of the heaven-born. Whatever else may be the personnel of this court of honor depends upon whether Miss Plumblossom is the daughter of a banker or a wood chopper; but even the wood chopper's daughter must have at least the Emperor and Empress to hold court for the honorable little people.

By the side of the dais and convenient to the hands of the dolls are the dishes bearing the food specially prepared and all the furniture that fathers can afford to buy. On food trays are tiny soup and rice bowls of wood or lacquer, tea steepers and bowls and eating sticks.

Thus are the honorable little people brought back from the land of dreams for one long day, entertained and reverenced. Thus for one full day of ecstasy the little daughters of Japan forget that they bear on their backs for 364 other days the fighters of Japan's new generation.

The Social Register.

HOW MRS. AUGUSTUS BROWN BECAME ONE OF THE ELITE.

By a Special Contributor.

I.

IT was opening day at Fox & Briggan's jewelry store. Now, Mrs. Brown had never before had the courage to enter such a fine shop as Fox & Briggan's, because she had neither the clothes nor the pocket-book to warrant such presumption, and she was too proud to draw attention to herself, even from a clerk, when such attention must be the reverse of that which a handsomely-gowned and stately matron attracts.

But Mrs. Brown had ambitions. Her daughter was now at the period when hopes of mending the Brown fortunes might be placed on her really charming personality, could she but be successfully launched in society. All her married life Mrs. Brown had crimped and saved, so that now she was beginning to look about for ways and means of judicious investment of her small capital, in such adornments and other nothings as might be of assistance in furthering her plans. And so, on Fox & Briggan's great opening day, Mrs. Brown was among the visitors to the great display of diamonds. A diamond represented wealth, therefore a diamond her daughter must have, for appearance's sake. But funds were limited, and the cheapest diamond which Mrs. Brown could find was priced at $180.

Mrs. Brown was in despair. As she turned away, her eye glanced at a pile of circulars with beautiful old English lettering. Taking one, she quickly read the announcement of "The Social Register." By this means, those who were planning social functions could place their dates on record at the store, for the convenience of their much occupied friends in the social whirl.

Here was just the thing! Now Mrs. Brown and her daughter could have their names placed from time to time among the very élite of the town, simply for the asking. No sooner planned than done. But the function! That, too, must be named with the date, as well as the hostess' name and address! Well, an "at home" would sound well. So she gave the name—"Mrs. Augustus Brown, Farwell street." (The number were better omitted, as there were two ends to Farwell street.) "At Home, November 12."

This was sufficiently informal not to attract too much attention, while, at the same time, answering the purpose of placing her name before the social public.

Mrs. Augustus Brown had, however, no intention of entertaining on the date named, for even had her acacquaintance been sufficient, her means would scarcely have permitted her to do so; but in some vague way she hoped that this might prove an entering wedge by means of which, by dint of further scheming, there might take place some real development in the direction of her desires.

Mrs. Brown went home well satisfied with herself, but still perplexed as to the next move. Fortune, however, was with her. One night, about a week after this, the local postoffice in the Farwell-street district was burned down, and all the mail matter in the building destroyed.

II.

The three Miss Van Storms were very fashionable indeed. So popular were they that they had difficulty in keeping all their engagements straight, so it was a great relief to them to learn of the Social Register.

One morning they were downtown shopping, and while in Fox & Briggan's, took the opportunity of glancing over the Register to refresh their social memories. Suddenly Miss Myra Van Storm began to stare in astonishment, first at the page and then at her sisters.

"Mrs. Augustus Brown giving an 'At Home,' and WE not invited!" she cried.

"Impossible!" her sisters exclaimed, as they bent eagerly over the Register. But sure enough, there it was, "Mrs. Augustus Brown, Farewell street. At Home, November 12."

"Why, that's this afternoon," said Miss Van Storm. "We MUST have been invited—but I didn't know she was home yet from her trip."

"She is expected soon, I believe. But why—oh, I know," said Miss Bertha; "girls, you remember the fire in the postoffice? Her invitations must have been there."

"What shall we do?" returned her sister. "I KNOW we are expected, for this must be the affair she told me she was going to give on her return."

"Suppose we call Mrs. Fenton and see if she knows anything about it."

Accordingly they called Mrs. Fenton, and were assured by that lady that not only was their mutual friend of Farwell street expecting to entertain, but that this was the very date she had spoken of several weeks before, prior to her leaving home for a visit. Mrs. Fenton also thought the cards must have been lost in the fire, so they all agreed to go together to the reception that afternoon.

Now, Farwell street was a rather long thoroughfare, one end of which was ultra-fashionable; the other, though attractive in appearance, was much more modest. At the fashionable end, at No. 900, lived Augustus Brown, a wealthy banker. At the other end, at No. 153, Augustus Brown, a newcomer to town, had taken up his comfortable, though rather plain, residence.

When the three Miss Van Storms and their friend alighted from their beautiful touring car at the Brown mansion, they were surprised at learning from the footman that Mrs. Brown had not yet arrived home from her visit, but was expected that evening. This was more and more perplexing.

Meanwhile Mrs. Augustus Brown of No. 153 Farwell street sat ready for any chance callers among her neighbors who might drop in, quite forgetful, for the time, of the date she had placed at random on the Social Register; but absorbed, as usual, in planning ways and means of advancing her cause in society, and, perhaps, of advancing her residence somewhat toward the other end of the street.

Suddenly the doorbell rang, and a smartly-dressed woman appeared, asking for Mrs. Brown.

"I am Mrs. Brown," responded Mrs. Augustus the Less. The lady appeared somewhat surprised, and, glancing about, apologized for her, perhaps, untimely call.

"You see," she said, "I am the new society reporter for the Telegraph, and a stranger in the city; but I read your date in the Social Register at Fox & Briggan's, and have been sent up here for an item about your—well—your decorations," which, thought the reporter, were scarcely of an elaborate description, "or anything you might like to give me. But I see your hour must be later, I——"

"Oh, yes," quickly replied Mrs. Brown, taking the cue and seizing the opportunity at one fell swoop, "I always entertain late in the afternoon. People like it better, you know."

After chatting a few minutes with the pseudo-hostess, the society editress took her departure, promising to publish a small, EXCLUSIVE notice in the paper.

"I do not care for showy notices, you see," protested Mrs. Brown, though secretly gloating over getting her name in the society columns of the Telegraph.

III.

Next morning, what was the astonishment of the Misses Van Storm at reading in the Telegraph a notice of the delightful "At Home" given the previous afternoon by Mrs. Augustus Brown of Farwell street, "who entertained in her usual quiet and elegant manner."

"That is a joke on Mrs. Brown. What will she say when she reads it?"

But Mrs. Augustus Brown did not read the notice that morning, for Mrs. Augustus Brown of No. 900 Farwell was ill, tired out with the journey home. So much indisposed was she that Dr. Fenton was called early in the morning.

Scarcely had the doctor left his office, in response to the call, when a message came from "Mrs. Augustus Brown of Farwell street."

"Dr. Fenton has just gone there," the attendant replied.

"That is surprising; I did not call him before," Mrs. Brown said, but she had already been cut off.

In a short time there was another ring at Dr. Fenton's 'phone. "Mrs. Brown of 153 Farewell street has a daughter who is ill. Will the doctor come as soon as possible?"

"Is he not there yet?"

"Not yet."

"Well, he is on his way; he will be there very soon—good-by."

But the attendant was uneasy. Somewhere, something was wrong. Dr. Fenton had had ample time to reach Farwell street twice over. The attendant waited five minutes, then asked for the residence of Augustus Brown, Farwell street, and was relieved, at learning that Dr. Fenton had arrived.

Scarcely had the poor young man hung up his receiver when there came another call, and: "I should like to know where Dr. Fenton can be found."

"He is at the home of Mrs. Augustus Brown, in Farwell street."

"Oh, no, he isn't."

"Why, they told me a minute ago that he was there."

"Never in the world. I am Mrs. Augustus Brown, and my daughter is ill. There is some mistake. What——"

"Are you Mrs. Augustus Brown of Farwell street? And has Dr. Fenton——"

"That is my name—Mrs.—Augustus—Brown—one-fifty-three——"

At that moment came the words: "Time's up," and the connection was cut off.

Mrs. Brown, at one end of the line, and the attendant at the other, were wild. Again the latter called up Mrs. Brown and learned that the doctor had just left the house.

Mrs. Brown, on her side, was exasperated. She was just about to call Dr. Robertson, when the 'phone rang and a sharp voice said: "Is this the Brown residence?"

"Yes."

"May I speak with Mrs. Brown?"

"I am Mrs. Brown. Who is talking?"

"This is Mrs. Durham. I merely wish to say, Mrs. Brown, that you may consider yourself stricken from my calling list. You know I don't beat around the bush. To treat me as you have done, after all our years of friendship, is what I consider simply unpardonable."

"Why, what do you mean, madam? What have I done? I never met you, never saw you. I don't know who you are."

"What! Am I not talking with Mrs. Augustus Brown of Farwell street?"

"You certainly are; but I assure you, I never heard of you before."

"Never heard of me before? The idea! Don't I know your voice? This is simply scandalous. Of course we haven't been as intimate lately, because I moved to the other side of the city, but I know now, since yesterday, how much some people's friendship amounts to."

"But I protest I do not know who you are. What do you mean?"

"Tut, tut! What do I mean? Don't you suppose I read the papers? But this ends our friendship, so far as I am concerned."

"It certainly should, for I am sure it never began, so far as I am concerned," and Mrs. Brown hung up the receiver.

Notwithstanding her trouble and the perplexity of it all, Mrs. Brown perceived the humor of the situation. Evidently there was another Mrs. Brown, dently, there was some confusion about the As she knew, her number was not yet in the but also, as she did not know, there had been in the numbers all along the street, so it was cult for Central to make the slight mistake that to be setting everybody and everything agog ing.

"There it is again," exclaimed Dr. Fenton's dant, as he took down the receiver. Sure was Mrs. Augustus Brown of Farwell street, that she had been obliged to secure another as Dr. Fenton evidently could not come to Jimmy's Stepmother.

SHE STRIVES FOR LOVE, NOT KNOWING SHE ALREADY HAD IT.

By a Special Contributor.

ELLEN MAYFIELD sometimes wondered if it were not wicked for any one to be as happy as she. She had grown up with the half-formulated idea that strictly moral people were sober-minded, if not a trifle sad. It did not seem exactly Christian for a grown woman to awake each morning in a perfect tumult of joy over the mere fact of waking to another day.

At first glance there would seem to be no especial cause for rejoicing, in Mrs. Mayfield's lot. She was married to a very ordinary man who worked at a very ordinary occupation for a less than ordinary salary. Her home was small and unassuming, and she did her own work. But she was in love with her husband, and that was reason enough; for there is nothing else in life so infinitely interesting as being in love. To her happy eyes the good (but by no means remarkable) man she had married was a god-like being the possession of whom all women must necessarily envy her, however well they might dissemble the emotion. Across her sunny skies there floated but one small cloud, and that cloud was Jimmy.

Had it not been for Jimmy, she could almost have forgotten that there had ever been another Mrs. Mayfield. To do her justice, she was above petty jealousy, and although she did not know it, the blind adoration which she lavished upon James Mayfield was as new an experience to him as though he had never before called a woman his wife. He had been happy enough with the first Mrs. Mayfield, and had mourned her sincerely when she died; but he would have been more—or less—than human if his heart had not thrilled in answer to the warmth and exquisite flattery of Ellen's love. The memory of the good woman who was dead in no wise disturbed the peace of the little home; but there was Jimmy, and Jimmy was very much alive.

He lived with his grandmother. Ellen assured herself that, had not this been the case, she could never, no never, have married Jimmy's father. Better have lived a broken-hearted woman, separated from the only man she could ever love, than drag out a dreary existence in the same house with Jimmy.

By persistent and concentrated effort Jimmy had managed to acquire an amazing amount of badness for a little boy of 8; and, except to his grandmother, who loved him, there was little about him to commend him to the toleration of society in general. He knew the most astonishing number of swear words—until she made his acquaintance, Ellen had not realized that there were so many—and he soon learned, to a nicety, just how to modulate his voice so that the words might reach the ears of his horrified young stepmother and miss those of his deaf, doting old grandmother—for Jimmy's grandmother idolized him.

In strict justice to the old lady, be it said that she had had the care of him since he was a dimpled, year-old baby, with all a baby's irresistible charm; although, even as an infant, he had an abnormal capacity for getting into mischief. She taught the little feet to take their first uncertain steps and the lisping tongue to talk. Then, too, she knew a Jimmy whom his father's young wife had never seen; Jimmy who was sometimes seized with shamefaced spasms of effection and who had odd, Jimmyfied little ways of showing that he was sorry when he had been especially bad. He loved his grandmother, in his own fashion, and sometimes remembered to try not to give her pain. He would have been sorry, clear down to the bottom of his 8-year-old heart, if she had chanced to hear any of the wicked words which he murmured for Ellen's discomfiture.

Jimmy's grandmother was as far from wishing to part with him as Ellen was from desiring to acquire him. The situation, as it stood, was at least tolerable to all concerned, and Jimmy, although undeniably a cloud, was a small one upon the horizon. Then there happened a perfectly natural thing, the possibility of which had never occurred to any of them—Jimmy's grandmother died.

The news came by a messenger one morning as Mr. and Mrs. Mayfield sat at breakfast. These tete-a-tete meals were an unfailing source of enjoyment to Ellen, and she congratulated herself that they seldom had a guest to make a third at the little table. When the bell rang, she continued pouring her husband's coffee with no premonition of the storm about to break over her head. Mr. Mayfield returned from the door with a note crumpled in his hand.

"It is Stella's mother—Jimmy's grandmother, you know," he said unsteadily. "She died suddenly last night. Heart failure. Of course I must bring Jimmy home at once. I shall be gone about an hour, dear. Good-by."

Ellen had one hour, sixty minutes, in which to prepare herself for the advent of Jimmy. She buried her face in her hands and spent fifty-five minutes hating the boy, then she drew herself up with a start; she knew she must never do that again as long as she lived, come what might. The joy might be all gone from life, but her New England conscience remained. She must look at the matter from Jimmy's point of view; and she was fair enough to admit that Jimmy's point of view was not an especially alluring one, deprived as he was of the only person who really loved him, and suddenly foisted upon a father with whom he was not acquainted and a stepmother whom he heartily disliked.

She looked at the clock. There were five minutes of her hour left, and that five minutes she devoted to solemnly covenanting with herself, since she must be a stepmother, to be a good one.

From this time on Ellen Mayfield's conscience never troubled her over being too happy for strict morality.

It was worse, even, than she had anticipated. She might have fed and clothed the child, and for the rest left him to follow his own dictates, and thus have saved herself untold strain upon nerves, temper and patience; but Ellen was descended from a long line of ancestors who spelt duty with a capital D. Jimmy's questionable associates, and the more than questionable escapades in which he took part, of which the dim eyes and dull ears of the doting old grandmother had been happily unconscious, the young stepmother was very unhappily conscious of. By the time Jimmy had been an inmate of the little home a month, the cottage was no longer the miracle of order it had been; Ellen was worn and tired, and once or twice she had even forgotten to kiss her husband good-by; but for all that, she wore an air of subdued triumph. It had been a week now since she had been compelled to go and forcibly remove her little stepson from among a company of choice spirits. She felt that she was gaining ground—slowly, undeniably, but she hoped surely. "If I could only love him it would all be so easy." The thought was more than half a prayer.

If only she might love the boy, how simple it would all become! The thought was with her day and night, and she tried to force the love into her heart with all the intensity with which her Puritan ancestors subdued the sinful desires of that organ.

She took her mending one afternoon and sat by the window to enjoy the breeze which fluttered the leaves of the climbing rose. She was entirely hidden from view, and although the voices of two women gossiping in the next cottage came to her distinctly enough, her mind was too much occupied with the ever-present problem of Jimmy to notice what they were saying, until she caught the sound of her own name.

"It's a shame, poor little fellow, the way Mrs. Mayfield is so strict with him, and his own mother in the grave! Don't tell me she cares so much who he runs with—she just does it to give her an excuse to be mean!" There was a murmur of assent, and the first voice went on: "My Joe says Jimmy told him she made him sit in a chair for an hour just because he threw stones at an old hen. I say it is a shame!"

"That was my hen," was the unexpected and somewhat haughty reply. "There are some things about which Mrs. Mayfield is not strict enough with that boy. I went right over and complained to her. She said she was sorry, and called Jimmy and did make him sit in a chair for maybe it was an hour; but as I passed the window I saw her giving him a great piece of cake to eat, so I guess he didn't suffer much. If my boy had done such a thing, and one of the neighbors had complained to me, he would have got a licking, all right. If she don't come down a little harder on Jimmy he will land in jail one of these days—not that she'd care, of course; he is none of hers."

Ellen rose from her seat sick at heart. She had tried so hard, so hard! She had never dreamed that her every act was being watched with critical eyes. She threw herself upon her bed and wept the slow, bitter tears of discouragement.

It was here that her husband found her, and taking her in his arms, listened to the somewhat incoherent story. Although he never would have admitted it, deep down in James Mayfield's heart there lurked a sense of resentment against his small son. Life was not the same since the boy had come to be a member of the family. Ellen's attention was not only divided, but in his opinion very unevenly divided. While he still stood patiently upon his pedestal, she rarely, in these busy times, had the leisure to take up the attitude of worshiper. He had borne it silently, perforce, but at last he felt that he had a legitimate cause for indignation, and he gathered his wife in his arms.

"It is an outrage, and it is going to end right here and now! You are an angel of patience, and those wretched women haven't the soul to be able to appreciate you! As for that thankless little scamp of a boy, we will send him to a boarding-school, that is what we will do!"

To his consternation, a pair of flashing, tear-wet eyes were raised to his, and his erstwhile submissive young wife exclaimed: "Indeed, we will do nothing of the kind! He is not the sort of a boy to be raised by machinery. What Jimmy needs is love—lots of love—and he shall have it. It is all my fault for not loving him; if I could only love him when he acts so; but I shall never stop trying until I accomplish it some way."

Drying her tears, she told him all her plans for Jimmy's education, for his training and general well-being. Judging from her unselfish enthusiasm, one would have supposed it to be the welfare of a dearly-beloved child which was under discussion.

Ellen was desperately in earnest, but try as she would, she could not feel very hopeful. Her surprise, therefore, was as great as her joy and relief over the almost—for him—angelic behavior of Jimmy during the next few days. By the end of the week, to be sure, the strangely-subdued air had pretty well worn off and he was just plain Jimmy again; still, there was a marked and permanent improvement. It was years later that she learned how, poised perilously upon the window sill of his own room, a few treasured belongings in a small bundle as an adequate preparation for running away from home, the boy had overheard the entire conversation. He had listened shamelessly to all Ellen said to his father, and then, with an unaccountable lump in his throat, had dropped noiselessly back and, untying his bundle, had put the catcher's mitt, the rusty toy revolver and the green china frog with 8 cents and a pants button in its stomach, back in their places.

Ellen never faltered in the task she had set for herself, the task of learning to love Jimmy. She had kept at it doggedly, persistently. With firm mouth and a deepening line between her eyes, she put hours in mental effort to that end, each day—while Jimmy, even the strangely-improved Jimmy, seemed to have an impish perversity for making himself practically unlovable.

In the meantime he had the best of care. His thick slices of bread were well buttered and there were plenty of them. He always had a clean waist for school, although his stepmother often ironed it by gas light after Jimmy and his father had gone to bed. She patiently went over his lessons with him in the evening, and played games with him by the hour to keep him happy at home. She delighted in these sacrifices; they served, in a measure, to quiet her conscience which ever accused her of failing to give the child the love which was his by right. Her self-reproach was the more keen because Jimmy, gradually and without in the least meaning to, had come to adore her with all the strength of his boy's heart. He called her "mother" and came to her with his joys and his hurts, sure of that sweetest gift of all, sympathy.

And so his cry was: "Mother, oh, mother!" when they picked him up from under the horse's hoofs and he lay in the driver's arms, his own arm hanging limp and useless and his face covered with blood. He had fainted quite away by the time they reached the door, and Ellen thought him dead. She snatched him from the man with a fierce gentleness.

"Oh, Jimmy, Jimmy, mother's darling! I knew you'd do it some day; you were always so reckless! Oh, I can't bear it! I love you so—I love you so!"

The heavy lids slowly lifted, and the white lips formed a wan smile. "I know it. I've known that for years an' years—an' years—an'——" and he sank into unconsciousness again.

When Mr. Mayfield opened the door of his home that evening he was met by a young woman with a sort of subdued rapture shining in her eyes. "Jimmy is hurt," she announced joyously. "He was run over by a dray. The doctor is with him now. His left arm is broken, his right ankle sprained, and his face rather badly cut. Of course he will get along all right; he is such a strong little scamp," proudly, "he would get over anything—and, oh, James, I am so happy!"

"Happy!" echoed that bewildered gentleman, wondering if his wife had suddenly lost her mind.

"Yes, happy! Because now I know that I love him! And, oh, James, isn't it perfectly ridiculous? Here I have been loving him all the time, and I was working so hard trying, that I never stopped long enough to realize it."

The Deadly Pitch Lakes of Venezuela.

Our trips to the pitch lake on the early morning engine will never be forgotten. A warning toot from the diminutive whistle hurries us through our breakfast, and we hasten to the track and see our cameras and guns loaded on one of the little square wooden "empties." We mount the wood-filled tender of the engine, and with many complaining creaks and jolts get under way, backing slowly around the curve which hides the last sign of civilization and buries us in the jungle.

For nearly twenty years these little toy engines have bustled and elbowed their way over the snaky rails, until the jungle and its people have come to look upon this narrow winding steel path as part of the general order of things. The underbrush creeps close, and only the constant whipping of the engines and cars beats down the growth between the rails.

We reach the lake long before the dew is dried and before the freshness of the dawn is dissipated. It is surrounded by dense forests, the front ranks of which are made up of the marvellously tall and graceful moriche palms. There is one oasis in this pitchy expanse—Parrot Island it may be called. To this shelter, guarded on all sides by soft, quaking pitch, parrots come at dusk by hundreds, roosting there until the next morning.

Near the northern edge is the "mother of the lake," just above the deep-hidden source of supply, where the pitch is always soft, and where no vegetation grows. It is a veritable pool of death, and nothing can enter it and live. The lizards and heavy-bodied insects which scamper over the rim are often clogged and drawn down to death. A jaguar, leaping after a jacana, slipped in shortly before we came, and made a terrible fight for life. Half blinded, its struggles carried it only farther outward, and the end came mercifully soon.

All the rest of the lake is a varied expanse of black pitch bubbles, short grass, clumps of fern and sedge, with occasional isolated palms. Flowers of many kinds and colors spring from the heart of the raw pitch itself. Jacanas rise before us with loud cries and flashing wings of gold. One may walk over the lake at will, morning and evening, but in the heat of midday, in many places, one's shoes sink quickly unless one keeps constantly on the move.—[C. W. Beebe, in Harper's Magazine.

Luxury in Motor Vehicles.

"New to me," said a man who seldom sees Fifth avenue, "were the vases filled with flowers in automobiles.

"Of course I'd heard of automobile clocks, and of fitting up the auto with holders for comb and brush and mirror and card case and that sort of thing, but I had never even heard of flower vases in automobiles until yesterday, and then I saw several machines that were thus equipped.

"In each case, the vase was tall and slender, running to a point at the lower end and flaring at the top, in its shape reminding one of the familiar ancient torch; and this slender and graceful torchlike vase, something less than a foot in height, was supported in a holder attached to the inner side of the automobile, in front, to be thus placed and filled with flowers, like a vase of flowers in a room, a grateful object for the eyes of the auto's occupants to rest upon.

Another Day of Spirited Suit Selling

The Maoris.

AN INTIMATE VIEW OF THE PEOPLE AND THEIR MODE O FLIFE.

By a Special Contributor.

OF all the South Sea Islanders none are more interesting than the Maoris of New Zealand. A hundred years ago they were fierce cannibals, perpetually engaged in tribal warfare. Now they are peaceful, law-abiding, Christianized folk, land owners and farmers, employers even of white labor. They are the only subject colored people that return members of their own blood to a British colonial parliament. And with the advance of the Stars and Stripes to Pago-Pago they and their white fellow-citizens have become our nearest neighbors in the South Seas.

At the ports of entry, in the street crowds of Auckland or Wellington, the Maoris are not much in evidence. The sole alien feature in these typically British towns is the presence of our old acquaintance, John Chinaman, fruit dealer and laundryman. Yet it was in the busiest quarter of Auckland that the writer first witnessed an old-style Maori greeting. Two elderly men dressed in European costume, but with the wrinkles in their faces overlaid by tattoo stripes, met at a street corner, and instead of shaking hands, rubbed noses. It was a light sidewise touch, like the billing of birds.

Typical Maori belle.

Maori method of salutation.

But at the Rotorna Hot Springs, which is on every tourist's visiting list, the brown people preponderate. They are the guides and showmen of the thermal curiosities, the geysers and warm bubbling springs, and the Pah, or stockaded fort which illustrates the ancient Maori art of war. In color they match the native of Hawaii rather than the Samoan. The Maori skin is of a warm chestnut brown, and lacks the golden tint that brightens the Samoan complexion. Tradition indeed assigns the origin of the Maori to a distant island, called Hawaiki, and the language resembles the Hawaiian.

Maoris Athletic.

But the Maori is a taller and heavier man than his Polynesian relative. Dressed in the modern sack suit, the spread of his shoulders declares the strength of his frame. But to appreciate the athletic points of the race one should see a Maori eleven lining up on the football field. As a rule, the Maori women have regular features; their eyes are large and lustrous, the lips full. Among them are found some beauties in the brunette style, and all are fond of setting off their attractions by dresses of a magenta or other gaudy tint.

Even amid the insidious influences of a tourist resort like Rotorna, the Maoris have lost nothing of their frankly independent address. Their manner, their very gait, is that of the free man and equal of the white; and so they carry themselves wherever they are met. Behind this lies the consciousness of certain political facts.

The Maoris own about 5,000,000 acres out of a total of 66,000,000, or nearly one-twelfth of the land of New Zealand. Their holdings lie mostly in the North Island. Of the seventy-four members of the House of Representatives, four are Maoris ;and two Maori Honorables represent the race in the Upper House, or Legislative Council. The representation is small, but proportional, for the aborigines number only some 40,000 against the 800,000 or more white people. Like many tribes that have no written language, no literature, the Maoris are endowed with the "gift of the gab." They are fluent speakers, eloquent when their feelings are aroused, and quite equal to holding the floor at Wellington against their white competitors.

The younger Maoris all speak English, the victorious tongue that spreads and dominates wherever it takes root. Indeed, they resent being addressed in Maori by the white colonials, thinking it a slur on their education to be supposed ignorant of English. The wooden schoolhouse, with the old-country Tudor moldings over its square windows, stands in every township impartially open to children of either color. But the mother tongue is kept alive in the family circle and may survive for many ages in the same way as the Welsh has done.

It will be perpetuated at all events in the names of places and rivers. On the map of New Zealand the "villes" and "tons" of Anglo-Saxondom are outnumbered by indigenous names. Which is a fortunate thing, for the Maori is rich in musical syllables. It is a kind of bird language, full of twittering sounds and short, quick reduplications. Take, for example, Otahuhu, a name which seems to imitate the owl's hoot; Orako-keirako, which echoes the raven's' croak; and such chirping combinations as Papatoitoi and Kirikiriroa.

A Fading Art.

The art of carving is disappearing out of the land. There is no demand for war canoes now, except from world's fairs and Paris expositions. In the olden days, the chief's house, the storehouse, and the posts of the village stockade were ornamented with carved figures. But the rainy climate of the country and other causes have been fatal to these monuments. One must go to the museums to see specimens of this fading art. The Auckland institution contains a superb example of a war canoe, the intricate scroll work and patterns on which are admirable. But as a sculptor of the human form, the Maori is crude; he has not advanced beyond the class of the small boy with the jack knife. On the palings at Rotorna Pah stand wooden figures, squat and ill-proportioned, which affect the foreigner in the same way as Gothic grotesques. The sex is obtrusively emphasized; but a people who could walk naked and unshamed would never think of draping the nude. The eye is represented by an abalone shell; the hand, stiffly pressed on the belly, generally lacks the little finger; the tongue is horribly protruded.

Maori carving

A Maori girl.

The meaning of this last feature will not be comprehended till one has witnessed a performance of the "haka," the war dance or call to arms of old Maoriland. As acted before a row of tourists, seated on the benches of a public hall, the dramatic episode suffers from its staging. Out of doors or amid native surroundings the performers would be less self-conscious. Stripped to the waist, the men arrange themselves in two files and begin to chant in a low tone, a woman giving them the time. They turn right and left, stamping and waving their arms, till they work themselves up to a prodigious pitch of fury expressed by rolling eyeballs and deafening roars. Standing to one side, the woman "leader" urges them on to the climax. They shake the stage with one thundering stamp, and thrust out their tongues as far as they can. This was the supreme act of defiance to the foe.

The "Moko."

It makes an audience accustomed to see small boys defy policemen with the same gesture laugh outright. In the olden days, however, it was no light matter to attend a "haka." Then each warrior brandished a heavy greenstone club, and once heated to the point of battle frenzy, would hardly cool down, even at a "play haka," without clubbing somebody just to keep his hand in practice. And to the natural distortion of his features was added the artificial terror of the "moko."

This was the pattern tattooed in blue pigment on face of the Maori warrior to make him more form able in battle. Vertical lines accentuated his frown; coil of curves were drawn over the cheekbones; obli strokes ran outward from the mouth angles—that w the general pattern. To this the skillful artist ad finer strokes to make the "moko" distinctive of wearer. Reserved to the "rangatiras," or "heredit nobles," it had a like significance with the coat of ar of heraldry. Carved on a wooden block, the face p tern of a chief was held to represent his authori stamped at the foot of a document, it was, if not h sign manual, his sign facial.

Compared with the Maori operation, Japanese tatt ing is a mere pricking with pins. The New Zealand tist carved his chief's face with a sharp chisel m from bird bone and driven by a mallet. If he had n of a steady hand to trace flowing curves on such yiel ing canvas as human flesh, what must have been fortitude of the subject of his skill? As the absorpt of an excess of pigment at one time would cause bloo poisoning, the operation had to be frequently suspen To complete a "moko" worthy of a famous chief mig require many months of intermittent torture.

No wonder that the younger generation flinched, that tattooing is now a lost art. But the pattern scarred and stained into the skin is indelible. Now then one sees in New Zealand an old "rangati wearing his family badge on his face, the curious p tern framed perhaps in a straw hat and white s collar.

In the semi-civilized period of the colony it was d gerous for a gentleman to go too well adorned. Curio ity hunters bought from the chiefs the dried heads their slain enemies. The finer the tattooing, the high the price given. But when tribal warfare died out, go specimens became scarce and valuable. So the ch who had an order to fill looked his followers ove knocked the owner of a fine "moko" on the head, an pickled his face. The colonial government had to pr hibit the export of dried Maori heads.

The Peaceful Arts.

Passing to more peaceful arts, the women had dance of their own called the "poi," which is still ke up as a public exhibition. It is a mild measure, danc with "woven paces and with weaving hands" to pleasing melody. It is usually given at Rotorna an afterpiece to the furious "haka." As the gir move in the dance, they swing balls of colored fla The significance of the "poi" is agricultural; it is kind of harvest home or Pomona celebration.

Maori women used to be good weavers. They ma their own cloaks, or mats, out of the fiber of the nativ Phormium, the so-called New Zealand flax. The dresses are rarely seen now outside the showcases of museums. They are variously decorated with tags of feathers or quills so that the wearer, when she walke abroad, might raise an important clatter. But th Maori mat belongs to an early stage in the evolutio of costume. Its design is strictly utilitarian, to keep o the rain, not to accentuate the points of the figur This explains why the elder Maori women never carr themselves well in foreign dress. If the Maoris are losing their ancient arts, they have not quite forgotten their ancient hospitality. This virtue, common to most of the people of the Pacific, is not to be expected of the township Maoris, or at the tourist resorts, where the people lead a semi-parasitic life. But in the King country, where most of the Maori estates lie, or in the remote Uruwera, where the Maoris live by themselves, they are truly hospitable. They act the Good Samaritan toward men on the tramp, "out o' works" "humping their blankets," and invite them to dip their fingers in the family pot.

The Simple Life.

The native dish is a stew, cooked and kept warm by heated stones, a mess of corn, fish, vegetables, pork perhaps or a game bird, a kiwi or weka. It is filling, and not unsavory, provided that it contains none of the decaying maize which old-fashioned Maoris fancy. Then it is literally a "pot-pourri," offensive to white nostrils and palate. In spite of the beef, mutton, and other good things that the British have introduced, the Maoris are largely fish eaters and vegetarians.

This simple living was imposed upon them by natural conditions. For when they arrived the Maoris found the islands not merely untenanted by man, but almost devoid of animals. Fish there were in the sea, eels in the rivers, a few edible birds—and rats. That was all. The country lay far away from Nature's kindly centers of distribution. So the Maoris had to make the best of what they found, and were thankful for such small mercies as the gift of the sweet potato.

A pleasing legend tells how the wife of a chief from some distant Pacific island, having been well entertained by the Maoris, took pity on their destitution. Returning home, she made the long voyage over again in her canoe, in order to present her hosts with the new and valuable food which they learned to call "kumara."

Of pigs, they knew nothing till the white men came. Thereby hangs a ludicrous tale, which one hopes may be true. Three swine were sent from Norfolk Island by a sailor captain as presents to a New Zealand tribe. No directions for treatment accompanied the consignment. But the Maoris had been shown pictures of white men carried at ease, astride of animals with four legs. They took the pigs for gift horses, mounted them, enjoyed the fun, and soon rode them to death. Subsequently pigs became properly domesticated, and pork a favorite food.

Dearth of animal food may have had something to do with their notorious cannibalism. It is usually claimed that the warriors ate the bodies of the slain in order to acquire their martial virtues. True it is that in old Maoriland human flesh was not babe's meat; it was reserved for the fighting men. But among savages the fighters always get the best. The metaphysical explanation cannot exclude the more natural view that the army fed on what pleased their palates, and reduced the commissariat difficulty to zero. The Fijians, frankest of savages, never made any bones about the matter. They confessed that they ate "long pig," because it tasted good.

Good Done by Missionaries.

From cannibalism to Christianity, from wild "hakes" to Sunday-school, from fiber mats to broadcloth suits, from partial slavery to freedom for all; through these changes the Maoris have passed within the last century. The credit for the improvement is due to missionary enterprise. Whatever may be written of the futility of sending missions against the Confucian wall of China or the ingrained fatalism of India, none can deny their signal success in the South Seas.

Much of this was due to the fact that the early missionaries had the field to themselves. Their influence was not counteracted by the temptations of the trader or the activities of the land seeker. But it was a bold thing to risk their lives in a land of which nothing was known save that it was peopled by cannibal warriors. However, the missions prospered from the first. Cannibalism came to be abhorred by the Maoris as an evil action done, as they said, "when their hearts were dark."

The preachers, however, had hard work to restrain these fierce fighters from their tribal wars, of Ngapuhi against Waikato, of North against South. Christians they had become, but it was a militant church. They learned to respect the Sabbath, however, and the seventh day was a day of truce. Even now the spirit of clannish hostility sometimes breaks through the restraints of civilization. It is not easy for the excitable Maori to engage in a sporting contest with an hereditary rival in a spirit of good humor. Regatta committees are shy of accepting entries for canoe races which might involve a clash between hostile clans. For it is on the cards that the defeated crew might attack the victors with their paddles, and the police would have to be called in to quell a faction fight.

The relations that subsist between "pakeha" and Maori, between white man and brown, are unexampled in Australasia. The Maori, it was said, is a land owner and voter; he is also an equal sharer with the white man in the benefits of the Old-age Pension Act. Unlike the Australian native, he is not despised as a "nigger," though it would be too much to say he is in all respects on a footing of social equality with the white man. Intermarriage tests the existence of caste prejudice; and unions between Maoris and whites are not very common. Where they compete in the labor market, as sailors or shearers, the equality which they are so well able to assert is not challenged. One sees laborers of both colors sitting side by side to enjoy a Christmas festivity. But how is it the Maoris were not driven back into the bush, like the Australians, or exterminated, like the natives of Tasmania?

A "Missionary Reservation."

The martial spirit of the race was the prime factor in their salvation, aided by certain peculiar features in the history of the colony. For a long period after the arrival of the missionaries these remote islands received but few immigrants. Protected by Great Britain, Maoriland was a kind of missionary reservation, poached upon by casual sailors who married natives, and settled as "pakeha-Maoris"—squaw men, as we should say. When the colonists came out from England, they found a semi-civilized people with whom they had to deal peaceably for the purchase of land under Queen Victoria's treaty. If clan fights still went on, the settlers were not disturbed. There occurred no homestead burnings to excite bitter hatred between the races. The Maoris were not "bad Injuns."

But natives have never got a perfectly square deal from land-hungry immigrants of any white race. The treaty was tampered with, and speculators were permitted to acquire Maori property against the wishes of the owners and at unjust valuations. This occurred after a colonial government had been set up. But the Maoris had learned the use of firearms, and in open warfare protested against the wrongs they had suffered. The natives indeed were beaten in the war; but their stubborn resistance won for them and their rights the respect and consideration of the colonists. In London, the Maoris had the support of Exeter Hall, the mission center whose influence was in those days felt in Parliament. The government of the colony restored to the defeated tribes the major part of the disputed lands.

In spite of the advantages the modern Maoris enjoy, it is doubtful if their days will be long in the land. In point of numbers they are a mere remnant. Under changed conditions, hemmed in by the white man's civilization with all that it implies, the Polynesians tend to disappear. The brown island peoples lack the elasticity of adaptation, the insuppressible fertility of the African. Like wild animals under domestication, their unions become less fertile. The Maori population is stationary, or even retrograding.

It is a bad omen for their continuance that the Maoris themselves believe they are doomed to extinction. They point pathetically to the passing of the native birds, which disappear before the invasion of "pakeha" larks and sparrows. If Macaulay's prophecy is to be fulfilled, and a New Zealander sketch the ruins of Saint Paul's from a broken arch of London Bridge, it seems most probable that the New Zealander will be a descendant of the white invaders.

Manufacturing War Relics.

With the approach of the centenary celebrations of the famous Tyrolean fight for freedom, a new industry has been created in Tyrol. Every veterans' association and rifle club in the land is preparing some kind of festival at which historic guns and flags and other emblems will be displayed.

Unfortunately, these relics have become rather scarce in the hundred years which have elapsed since the war, but undaunted by this trifling circumstance the ingenious peasantry are setting to work to make their own relics.

In this enterprise they have developed remarkable ingenuity. A new flag is used for some time as a duster, and then after being carefully smeared over with grease on both sides is put up in the garret where the grain is stored. In a very few days the mice have made some artistic "bullet" holes in the flag, which is then hung out in the garden. The sun does the rest, and a faded and tattered flag of really venerable appearance is the result.

The village blacksmiths have shown no less cleverness in making historic cannon, and there is no reason to fear that the centenary operations will suffer from any lack of relics of the war.—[Innsbruck Correspondence Pall Mall Gazette.

An Old Violin—A Poem.

In far Cremona centuries ago
This little sighing, singing thing was wrought,
Of dreams 'tis fashioned and its tones are fraught
With sweetness only centuries bestow;
But give an artist hand the slender bow,
And hark the tumult of impassioned thought—
The heaven we missed, the earth we vainly sought
Within our shaken pulses ebb and flow.

Innumerable voices through it rain
The music of an unremembered past,
Dim echoes of illusive joy and pain,
In requiem sob or ringing trumpet blast,
Are merged to one incomparable strain
That holds the heart of every listener fast.

The Cause of War.

The fair young débutante was surrounded by an admiring crowd of officers at the colonel's ball. Mamma was standing near by, smiling complacently at her daughter's social success. The discussion was over the quarrel of the day before between two brother officers.

"What was the casus belli?" asked the fair débutante.

Toys on Trains.

One of the English railways has provided an alleviation of the discomforts of travel which does not seem to have occurred to the companies in this country. It provides a box of toys with which a child may amuse itself during the journey.

Australia's Novel Dishes.

ESOTERIC FOODS USED BY THE PEOPLE OF THE ANTIPODES.

From London Express.

IT is quite a mistake to imagine that Australians live entirely on damper, billy tea, and kangaroo-tail soup. They do nothing of the kind. They enjoy luxuries unknown to us, and, in their way, succulent and toothsome, albeit their mutton may be sometimes tough, their beef stringy, and their rabbits too prolific.

As to Antipodean cooking, an Australian cookery book (and there are several excellent ones) which used to belong to the late George Augustus Sala, and is now in my possession, bears the following note in his neat and clear handwriting: "Australian cookery is the worst in the world. Their only native dish is kangaroo-tail soup—and that is much overrated." Sala, however, was prejudiced.

Australian oysters, especially the little "rock" variety, are delicious. They grow, absolutely untended, on most of the reefs around the coast. There is also the "Stewart Island" oyster, a very large one, which is of moderate flavor. The mangrove oyster grows on the roots of the mangroves that are lapped by the tide. They are sweet, but some say that they can detect a slight muddy flavor; there is always mud where there are mangroves. The "pearl" oyster is as large as a man's hand, and the fish part weighs as much. It is a meal for one all by itself. The Japanese and Malays on the northwest coast and Thursday Island dry them in the boat's rigging, and eat them with relish. Of course, the shell and the pearl (if any) are saved first.

An even greater delicacy is the bêche de mer, or sea slug, which is found all round the Australian coast, from Brisbane to Perth. It is dried and tied into bundles, which look like brown glue. In the North Queensland coast hotels it is made into a brown, clear, jelly-like soup of peculiar but elusive flavor, and there is a continuous and growing demand for it from Chinese gourmets. It is exported to Europe, where it is looked upon as a luxury akin to bird's nest soup, with which, however, it has little, if any, affinity. At a very few London restaurants it is to be had by ordering it beforehand. It is well worth while.

The dugong is a sea mammal, known also as the manatee, and supposed to be the prototype, or traditional original, of the fabled mermaid. It is eaten a good deal in Queensland, and resembles veal, with a suggestion of pork; the flesh is firm and white, with a suspicion of oil. Salted exactly like bacon, and fried as a rasher, it is reminiscent of ham, but less pink in color. A small export trade in tinned dugong has been established, and only needs fostering to increase rapidly.

Grubs are very good, indeed, despite the first shudder of prejudice at the idea of eating insects. A big, white caterpillar, about the size of one's little finger and as thick, which lives on the soft sap wood of certain trees, is excellent when fried in its own fat, or grilled over a wood fire, but—inhumanly—it must be cooked alive. The flavor may be likened, roughly, to that of yolk of egg, plus filberts and bread and butter.

There is good precedent for the eating of porcupine, for European gipsies (as Borrow tells us) eat hedgehog, and like it. The porcupine is skinned and stewed with onions; it is distinctly rich and gamey, but by no means tough. The Australian porcupine feeds largely on ants, but the formic acid is not discernible. The "black fellows" eat ant's eggs, and aver that they are better than the white grubs. Both snakes and iguana are eaten, but they are oily, fishy, and by no means tempting; bush connoisseurs say, however, that both are very good—if one is hungry enough.

The land tortoise and the small fresh-water turtle are good when roasted while in the shell, the appearance and taste suggesting calf's head. The emu (immortalized by Bret Harte) is very stringy, and only good as a stew; it is a muscular beast, and runs to exaggerated sinew. Both cockatoo and parrot are excellent in a pie, with a little meat, on the principle of pigeon pie, and the flavor is very similar. The birds must be young. This is essential; and it is not always easy to get them juvenile enough. They live to great ages, and it is quite possible to shoot a veritable centenarian, which is absolutely uneatable.

The Murray River has great swamps full of fish, and the farmers in these districts run their pigs there. These porkers, fattened on fish and bush grass, make excellent eating, and the flesh is very delicate. The Murray perch, caught a couple of hours before dinner, are quite delicious; and the fresh-water cod, running to 80 and 100-pound fish, are not to be despised. The best weight for this cod for eating purposes, however, is about twelve pounds.

There are many varieties of Australian fish which are entirely unknown on this side of the world. Some of them are the snapper, the kingfish, the trumpeter, the blue cod, the giant skate, and the yellow bream. The Sydney prawns are the biggest, finest, and pinkest (when cooked) in the world; they run to a length of ten inches, and are proportionately fat.

The much-vaunted kangaroo-tail soup is, in its way, quite a good reputable soup, but only so much appreciated because the rest of the marsupial is excessively stringy and tough. It does not approach in delicacy of flavor the fat-tailed sheep soup of the Cape Colony, nor, of course, the world-renowned oxtail soup; but it is healthy, nourishing, and quite tasty, besides having other qualifications to recommend it.

Taken as a whole, therefore, Antipodean fare is by no means to be despised, and the often necessarily rough and ready methods of bush cooking have much to recommend them in the way of simple evocation of the real flavor of the viand.

Telepathy—or What?

A TRUE STORY OF SOME VERY STRANGE EXPERIENCES.

By a Special Contributor.

THAT the mental or spiritual influence of occupants of a house or other place may have pervaded its atmosphere so that even long after their departure it can be felt by others, is the belief of many people; I may almost say, of many peoples. Such is said to be the reason why the American Indians—so long as they can live free of dictation from the white man as to their family and tribal customs—burn the belongings of their dead and the house that had sheltered him. But the real reason for this practice among the Indians is one of sentiment alone. The friends of the dead wish to destroy all reminder of him, that their grief may not be kept poignant by sight of things which were associated with him. This, too, is the reason why the Indian objects to having his likeness taken, and not from superstitious fears as some people have imagined. But I am digressing from my stories, which I herewith give for what they are worth to the reader. The experience told in the first may, perhaps, be accounted for on the telepathy hypothesis, or Hudson's rule of three. Here it is:

While staying as guest at a hotel at a well-known health resort situated at the foot of mountains near Los Angeles, some years ago, I passed a night of such uncanny unrest that it still stands out distinctly as a black recollection, and especially so, perhaps, because my stay at the place was marked by pleasant days and restful nights aside from that one night.

Possibly because I was alone, my kind and tactful hostess showed a special interest in my welfare. She was a woman of striking appearance. A casual observer would have said she was "fat," but her extra flesh development was literally almost all muscle. She was below the medium in height, broad of shoulder and hip, and prominent of bust. Her eyes were remarkable; large, strongly marked by black lashes, the color and expression of quiet power in them were like those of a beautiful tiger. She gave much of her time to me, and I found her entertaining company. Possibly she was attracted to me by the law of opposites, my nature and physical make-up being feminine and weak, while she was strong in mind and body, a fact of which she candidly boasted.

One day shortly after my arrival, as she sat beside me where I was lazing in a hammock on the veranda, our conversation turned speculatively on the possibilities of will power, and she told me of a recent experience of her own. A young German nobleman, who was subject to spells of insanity, probably through dissipation, had come to the hotel accompanied by a male attendant who had been hired, as she said with humorous perspicacity, by the degenerate's family to keep him away from home. Not until he had been some time with them were she and her husband made aware of his tendency to mental and moral lapses, as his conduct previous to that time had been irreproachable. The first evidence of his weakness was shown in a way not uncommon to scions of wealth and "nobility." It began with his making violent love to a chambermaid, and indulging far too freely in the use of intoxicants; these he ordered at the bar of the hotel, and were of the best brand of champagne. He in fact ordered the wine generously and indiscriminately for every one in the house, including the Chinese cook. The proprietor, Mr. B., becoming apprehensive at his guest's recklessness, at length tried to reason with him, urging him to desist both from buying and drinking; but he replied with insolent coolness, that it was the hotel-keeper's business to supply what was called for by his guests without offering advice, and as he said this, there was such a threatening glare in his eyes that Mr. B. was disconcerted, and uncertain what to do. At this moment, the baron's attendant, who until that time had posed as merely a friend and fellow-traveler of the young man, came forward, and, taking Mr. B. aside, disclosed the true situation as regards the baron's mentality and history. He urged Mr. B. to carefully avoid exciting his charge by any refusal to meet his demands, assuring him that his accounts would be paid without question. He warned him that to agitate his "patient" was dangerous to the peace, if not to the safety, of every one at the hotel, but urged that if the baron were permitted to have his fling he would soon quiet down and behave like a gentleman again, perhaps during the remainder of their stay.

The B's held consultation, and as their business was not in a too flourishing condition, Mrs. B., being a practical helpmeet, advised that they permit their distinguished guest to remain a little while longer. This they could better afford to do, as at that season of the year there were but few patrons at the hotel. The noble guest did remain, and occasionally indulged his tendency to sprees, during such times doing many foolish and insane things. But Mrs. B., who had discovered that she had some influence over him at such times, managed to control him sufficiently to keep his escapades from becoming public. One peculiarity about the man was the fact that, though during his wild lapses from the ordinary behavior of a well-bred man he seemed to be both insane and drunk, he afterward promptly and in person settled his extravagant accounts for liquors, etc., which he had ordered and wasted, and he always knew to the least item what the sum of those accounts should be. At last he indulged in a rampage that was so serious that the B.'s decided that he must go. Mrs. B., being engaged in some occupation on the second floor one day, heard a great hubbub below stairs and a woman's scream; knowing the baron was on the "warpath" (her husband's definition of their guest's flights of reason,) she hastened downstairs, to find the baron pursuing the very frightened chambermaid of his affections, brandishing a huge knife which he had somehow obtained from the kitchen. With the exception of a few women and a consumptive man, the guests were out. Her husband was away. She saw that the fellow's attendant was apparently paralyzed with coward fear; to call on the Chinese cook for aid she felt would be useless. Mrs. B. quickly comprehended the situation, and, as she said in relating it, she saw that it was "up to her" to do something. Summoning her will power to her aid and concentrating her thought on the one purpose to subdue his will to hers, she sharply called the maniac's name, and having caught his eyes, she held them to her own by gazing intently at him while she slowly approached him, for he had paused when she called his name. Still fixing her gaze on him, she reached his side, and laying her two hands on the hand that grasped the weapon, said: "Give me the knife." He let her take it from his relaxed grasp. "Now," she said, in a commanding voice, "go to your room and do not leave it until I give you permission." Slowly he turned and passed up the stairway to his room. But Mrs. B. confessed that though naturally she was rather elated at the success of her experiment, she felt somewhat shaken over it in reflecting on the possibilities of harm that might have been done through the man's violence; and she and her husband that evening insisted upon his leaving the hotel. He went with open reluctance. He had evidently conceived a liking for the place and the people, and wished to stay. His attendant, too, begged that they might remain, promising to keep better guard over his charge, and offering strong monetary inducements to the proprietor. But the B.'s were determined, and the two men left a day or two later. So far as Mrs. B.'s story was then concerned, that was the last of them there.

That night I was troubled with insomnia. I retired early, in the hope of wooing a long and refreshing sleep, but sleep did not come. As I was beginning to regret that I had put out my light, wishing that I had arranged to indulge my erstwhile bad habit of reading in bed, my loneliness was accentuated and my nerves jarred by the sudden rattling of a window of my room. I am nervously averse to the sounds produced about a house by the wind, and I lay and listened in growing annoyance. I recalled that when I had retired the night was beautifully calm, with bright moonlight and no indication of a coming storm. The window continued to rattle at short intervals. I had become aware that there was but one window rattling, though there were three in the room and two of them were on the side of the room from whence the sound proceeded. Then a strange fancy came and enthralled me with fear: I pictured the insane man having instinctively come back to the place he had so reluctantly left, climbing up the vines beneath the window and shaking the sash in his attempts to get into the room, which I now felt convinced was the one he had occupied when at the hotel. I can scarcely make clear my state of mind at that time. While I did not really believe the man was at the window trying to get in, I went through all the mental process of picturing him in the act of doing so. I recalled the location of the climbing vines, and in imagination saw him clamber up them, hand over hand, till he reached the window; then, being mentally unbalanced and not overcautious, seize the sash and shake it, trying futilely and impatiently, like a child, to get in because he wanted to get in, without making careful and rational effort. So for what seemed a long time I lay and listened to the spasmodic rattling of the window. Then a sound in the room added to my terror. It was a flitting, batting noise, as of something striking the ceiling and walls about the room; and the sound persisted. The room was now quite dark. I lay and shivered in childish fright, nor was my terror lessened when it came to me suddenly that the object making the sound must be a bat. I am afraid of bats, and I began to imagine this one suddenly settling on my head and entangling itself in my hair; and all the time I was picturing the insane man trying to get in at the window. It may be asked why I did not make a light and call for help to at least expel the bat. I was afraid to stir to strike a light. I was paralyzed into inaction by childish fear. I actually lay the remainder of the night feeling the presence of the insane man about to come into the room, and hearing and dreading the unseen bat.

Whether I slept at all in the morning hours, I do not remember. At breakfast hour, the chambermaid, sent by the kindly hostess, brought me a light breakfast. To her I said: "Did you sleep soundly last night, Nellie?" She replied: "No, not very. My bronchial trouble disturbed me a great deal."

"Then the wind must have helped to keep you awake, too," I said, "as it did me?"

She looked at me in surprise. "If it was windy last night, I must have slept, for I didn't hear it." And she added: "I see no signs of a windstorm this morning."

Later in the day, on the pleasant porch, I said to my landlady: "Did you lie awake enough to hear the wind last night?"

"Wind?" she said. "There was no wind; the night was heavenly."

After a little, I said, with an equivocal laugh: "I had a spooky night, Mrs. B. Do you know, I got the conviction into my head that the room I occupy was the one used by the insane man you were telling me of yesterday, and I had a queer feeling of fear. I pictured him coming back and trying to get in at the north corner window of my room. That window certainly did rattle, though none of the others did, and I tried to think it was the wind, but I had a strange feeling all the time that I knew it was not the wind and that I felt the presence of the man at the window. I could see just how he clambered up the vines to get to it, and shook the window impatiently, as if he expected it to open and let him in. It was a strange feeling, and something prevented me from getting up to make a light. I just lay there, afraid from my own imaginings, all the latter part of the night."

She looked at me searchingly. "Has Nellie been talking to you?" she said, severely. I knew the severity was for Nellie, if she had been "talking."

"No," I answered, truthfully; "Nellie has talked nothing important."

"Then if no one had told you, it is a strange coincidence—your nightmare fancies—for though I purposely avoided telling you so, lest it should affect your nerves, it is true that the man did occupy that room and that he did come back after he had been gone some time, and that he did climb up that very trellis of vines in the night and try to get in at that very window."

Then after allowing time for the dramatic effect of her words to penetrate my perception, she added with a light laugh, "But your fancy did not carry the episode to its conclusion, for the man not only tried, but succeeded in getting into the room, and I found him hiding there the next day and held him captive by will power and good hard muscle until help came and took him in charge. You need have no fear of his returning again, for as he was later threatened with incarceration in an asylum if he remained in America, his friends recalled him to Germany, and there he is, I believe, at this time. And as for the bats, you poor child, I shall find some means to see that they are excluded from your room after this. They are numerous around the mountains at this time of the year."

Here is another story, given me by my friend Mrs. E. of Los Angeles:

As Mrs. E.'s husband—whom Mrs. E. called "Willie," when she did not address him by a more endearing epithet—expected to absent himself from his wife, in the interest of business, probably to be gone several months, it had been planned that to ameliorate her loneliness during his absence she was to make her abode with her sister's family, consisting, besides the sister, of said sister's husband, Mr. P. (a bank cashier who looked the part,) and of their son, a mischievous boy of 12, who promised to give his auntie little leisure for melancholy pining while he was in her near vicinity.

The P.'s had decided to rent a larger house and grounds than that they then occupied, and Mrs. P. had for some time been leisurely "looking about" for the desired place. Mrs. E. had also, without especial effort toward house hunting, been keeping her blue eyes open in interested observance of any vacant properties noticed by her in her occasional travels about the city, with a view to recommending them to her sister's inspection.

It was the custom of the E.'s, who were still lovers, to take a stroll together at the close of day, both being partial to the exercise of walking. During one of their evening strolls in the southwestern part of the city, not far from the residence of the P.'s, with whom they were already stopping, their attention was attracted to a handsome, rather large house with a "To Let" sign upon it. The house was not noticeably different from those surrounding it, excepting perhaps that it had a more substantial appearance and gave the impression somehow that it had not been recently occupied—though the house itself was fresh and clean and the grounds were green and well kept. They paused in front of the place and inspected it silently for a full minute. Suddenly Mrs. E. shivered, and her husband felt her arm against him tremble. "What is the matter, pet?" he said, turning to look at her in surprise. "Are you cold?"

"No, I am not cold, but there is something about that house that makes chills creep over me. I—I feel a horror of it, somehow; I couldn't live in that house! Come, let us get away from it;" and she started to walk away. Mr. E. looked again at the house. "By George! you have inoculated me with your creepy chill," he said, and he, too, shivered, as he turned away with her. "I don't see anything in the least bit spooky about the appearance of the place, but I don't feel attracted to it either. Which only shows the power of suggestion," he added, "for if you hadn't told me of its impression on you, I don't suppose I should have felt prejudiced against the place."

Mr. E. was a "non-sensitive" in matters pertaining to the supernatural, and usually ridiculed into silence any speculative tendencies in regard to occult mysteries indulged in his hearing by his friends, yet his wife had long observed that he usually avoided discussion of anything in the way of ghostly subjects, and he had once remarked to her with a laugh—yet with a semi-serious expression: "I don't believe there is any such thing as a ghost, but just the same, I don't want ever to see one."

Such was the impression of undefined horror that the house made upon the sensitive mind of Mrs. E. that she mentioned it that evening to her relatives, but neglected to state just where the house was situated. Her sister, who was not particularly imaginative, laughed at her recital and at the look of tragic gloom on her face as she said: "I could never live in that house, never!"

Strange to say, though the house affected her so unpleasantly, Mrs. E. made no effort to avoid it, and as it stood in the direction which she had found most attractive in her walks with her husband, they continued to stroll in its neighborhood. For Mrs. E., indeed, the house seemed to hold to some extent the attraction of repulsion. Yet she never passed by the house that she did not feel that strange sense of dread, that chill stealing over her head and spine, and she always in looking at it, felt impelled to say, with a shudder: "I never could live in it; there is something dreadful about it to me!"

Her husband laughed at her weird fancy, yet admitted that he himself still felt a strange aversion to the place, ascribing the feeling, however, to the influence she had over him; quoting, teasingly: "Two souls with but a single thought," etc.

The time arrived when the married lovers must part, and after speeding her husband with brave though fearful farewells and many a wifely injunction, Mrs. E. settled down with her sister and her family, philosophically resolved not to give way to melancholy longings for her chosen life companion.

One evening her sister announced that at last she had found what seemed to be just the place she wanted—a roomy house with plenty of sunshine and with a large poultry yard for her chickens. Mrs. E. divined that the large poultry yard was a strong factor in influencing her sister's choice, for Mrs. P. had an old-fashioned leaning toward keeping and caring for chickens, which were frequently served, deliciously prepared with all the old-time "fixin's," at her table.

The next morning Mrs. E. accompanied her sister betimes to inspect the prospective home. As Mrs. P. had said that the house was in walking distance, they proceeded on foot, and Mrs. E. was so absorbed in her sister's chatter, telling of her plans for arranging of such furniture as she possessed in her new home (should they rent the house) and for the necessity of buying new furniture for some parts of it, etc., that before she was aware of it, they were in front of the house that had so strangely impressed her. As she was about to call her sister's attention to it, Mrs. P. turned in at the walk leading to it. Mrs. E. followed with strange foreboding, verified when her sister mounted the stoop and placed a key in the lock of the door. She suddenly felt again the nettling chill as of the rising of the hair on her head with the awful sense of horror, and leaning against a pillar of the porch she exclaimed in a tragic voice: "Surely, this is not the house?"

"Yes," said her sister, as the broad door opened with a rusty creak; isn't it a grand place? and for such reasonable rent! Why, what is the matter?"—as she turned in the doorway and saw her sister's white face—"are you ill?"

"No; but—this is the terrible house I have been telling you about; the one that gives me the horrors. Oh! how did you happen to choose this house of all others for my home? I can never enter its door."

"Don't be foolish! It is strange I should have happened upon this house when you have conceived such an aversion for it, but there is not a thing wrong with the house, and you must just overcome that silly dislike for it and come in and look it over. Your prejudice will wear away as you familiarize yourself with the place. Come in."

Hoping her sister might be right, and that the dread that had almost overcome her would wear away with closer association with the house, Mrs. E. forced herself to enter, but as she crossed the threshold an undefined terror seized her, and closing her eyes she reached out to her sister, who seized her hand.

"Don't be a baby, now, and faint," said her sister impatiently. "Brace up. What in the world ails you, anyway?"

The unsympathetic tone had somewhat of the desired effect upon Mrs. E., who mustered her pride and closed her lips tightly, resolving to overcome her senseless dread, as she proceeded with her sister through the lonely rooms and then up the elegant stairway to the floor above.

"You see, the house is very convenient and finely appointed," said Mrs. P. "The rooms are well lighted and most of them sunny." All of which Mrs. E. was compelled to admit; but with each step she took through the rooms the dread oppression grew upon her, until at length when her sister started to ascend a small staircase leading to rooms at the top of the house, dragging her playfully with her, she felt as if she must shriek if forced to mount them.

"Oh, I don't want to go up there; I cannot! Let us go home! Oh, please don't ask me ever to live in this house!" she said tensely.

But her sister only laughed and pulled her along up the steps, saying: "Come on, now, silly; you must get over that feeling, for I have quite decided to have this place, especially since I see that this little stairway leads to a garret. You know I have never lived in a house with a garret, and I just know I shall dote on having one; it will be so handy for storing those innumerable old things one likes to keep and yet which are always in the way." They had reached the landing, and as she spoke she blithely stepped to a door confronting them and threw it open, at which Mrs. E. really screamed, drawing back to the opposite wall and staring at the door with an expression of dread and horror, as if she feared that something from within that room was about to confront her, perhaps to seize her.

But of her strange condition her sister knew nothing; she was investigating the garret, with exclamations of delight. "What a lovely, dusty old place! Just such a garret as you read about in stories! And here is a cubby hole by the chimney——" But her sister had fled down the stairway and out of the house as fast as her trembling limbs would carry her. When Mrs. P. overtook her, half-way home, however, she was somewhat repentant of what seemed to be her unreasonable folly, so, having meekly listened to her sister's impatient taunts and chidings, she determined that she would no longer oppose her taking the house, but would move into it with her and would do her best to overcome her unexplained repugnance to the place. And not many days later they were duly installed within its rather prepossessing walls.

True to her resolution, Mrs. E. tried to overcome her fear; but not all the bustle and busyness of moving and of buying and arranging furniture helped her to really overcome it. No matter what she was doing nor in what part of the house she was, she was conscious of that strange feeling of unknown fear, and she took to attaching the boy, Johnny, to her side whenever it was practicable to have him. Johnny, who was fond of his auntie, was not unwilling, and after the first miserable, shuddering night spent alone in her room on the second floor (the others slept down stairs) she persuaded him to sleep on a couch in her room, bribing him by reading stories to him each night until he fell asleep. But she could not always have companionship, for during week days Johnny attended school, and her sister, having been a resident of the city several years before her advent into it, had many acquaintances to visit, upon whom Mrs. E., being strange to them, did not care to call. She was therefore frequently alone, as her sister did not even keep a resident servant, but being an industrious and thrifty woman, managed her housework with the aid of visiting help whose part in the domestic menage of the P.'s ended at noon of each day.

On days when she was thus alone Mrs. E. flitted fearfully through the house (when it was necessary to go through it) with the feeling, despite her attempt at bravery, that there was another and a dread presence there. She even caught herself turning her head to look behind her, ready to scream should she see the unknown thing she felt was pursuing her. Then she would hastily gather her needlework and fly to the front porch, and if possible would spend the entire term of her solitude there, where the free air and the sight of other houses and gay lawns and of passing people relieved her of some of her ghostly fear. Or occasionally she would visit a neighbor, and though she shrank from greatly enlarging her circle of acquaintances, she cordially urged her neighbors to visit her on the occasions of her being alone, frankly admitting that in the great house she became lonely and "blue."

One afternoon, her sister having gone out to make a round of calls, she found that before settling herself to her needlework in her retreat on the porch she must go to her room for her forgotten thimble. As she mounted the stairs to her room, she looked with a growing feeling of dread toward the door of the little stairway leading to the attic, and it was only by strong effort of will that she could induce her feet to pass it, as they must do before turning back in the upper hallway to enter her room. She had never been induced to mount those garret stairs since the day she had first unwillingly climbed them when accompanying her sister to inspect the house, and a vivid memory of her nameless fear of the garret beyond them came to her and beset her with renewed apprehension, so that, quaking with terror, she turned and fled as if impelled to do so, without having gained her room and the object she sought. Nor did she stop at the porch nor moderate her gait until well out upon the sidewalk, when she resolved to visit a near neighbor and remain, during the afternoon, with her.

Fortunately, the neighbor, Mrs. T., was at home. As she cordially welcomed her visitor into the house, she looked intently at her face, for there was a strange, tense look upon it, and a shadow lay in her eyes.

"What is the matter, dearie?" she questioned, for she had become quite familiar with the trim little woman and was very fond of her.

"Oh, Mrs. T., I want you to let me stay with you all afternoon, till my sister comes home; I am so lonely," she said; and she could not control the trembling of her voice.

"Why, of course you shall. I shall be only too glad to have you, and we shall have some tea and a good gossipy, comfy visit. But now 'fess up. What has made you so especially lonely just now? You have been allowing yourself to think too much of absent hubby and have wrought yourself into a real spell of the blues, I will be bound."

"No, it is not that," said Mrs. E.; and then unexpectedly she found herself telling her kind hostess, over the teacups, of all her frightful experience in connection with the house her sister had chosen for their home.

As she proceeded, Mrs. T.'s kindly, half-skeptical, yet tolerant look, such as one bestows upon a child for childish fears, gradually vanished, and she watched her visitor with a look of curious wonder.

Mrs. E. had ended her recital almost in tears, but having ended it, she felt better. "Am I not the silliest goose you ever saw?" she queried, with a laugh that was not quite unhysterical.

"No, I don't think you are," said Mrs. T., quietly. "Finish your tea; then I will tell you a little story to cap your ghostly apprehensions."

The tea things removed, Mrs. T. seated herself on the sofa in the cosy nook beside her caller, and began: "Now, honey, I am going to tell you a real ugly story, and I want you to brace yourself for it, and don't get scared. I only tell you because I know that sooner or later you would hear it from some neighbor anyway, and would better hear it from me. But I want you to bear in mind, the dead harm no one; nor do the ghosts of the dead, save through the cowardly fears in the consciousness of the living. Such harm as might come to one through his own ghostly consciousness of a disembodied presence can always be thwarted by the will of the one who has become obsessed by that consciousness. Your own embodied will is more potent than any disembodied power. I don't know that the event of which I am about to tell you has anything to do with your strange fear and aversion for that house, but it is at least a peculiar coincidence with it, and spiritists would certainly say you are a 'sensitive' and had 'sensed' a certain influence which had been left in the house.

"As you were not here a year ago, you were probably not aware of a sensational happening that was chronicled in the papers here, and as usual, was soon forgotten. Your sister and her husband must have read of it, but likely took too little interest in the matter to note its details. I was living here at that time, and one day previous to the affair an old man came to inquire of me concerning the ownership of the house, which he seemed to have been inspecting with a view to renting it. For some reason the house didn't rent readily, and had been vacant some time. When I told him the name of the owner, Dr. B., it seemed to verify information he already had, for he repeated the name, 'Dr. B.,' and then mumbled something about it being a 'fitting' place for him to go to. I watched him, for though he was just a rather shabby, ordinary-looking old man, something about him interested me, and I saw him go back to the front door of the house, and then I forgot all about him. No one moved into the house, and my attention was not especially attracted to it again until three weeks later. Then, one day I saw the owner, Dr. B., and his agent entering the house together, and a short time after that the agent came to me looking very flurried; I should say, scared. Having first asked for a drink of water, which he gulped down hurriedly, he dropped on to a seat in the hallway and began asking me questions, continually mopping his face with his handkerchief as he did so. He asked whom I had seen entering the house within the past month, and when I had finally recalled the old man's visit and told him of it, he said:

"'I s'pose I may as well tell you, ma'am, for it will be in the papers tomorrow—and you can bet it's going to hurt that property, too. When Dr. B. and I went into that house today to inspect some plumbing I have been at him to have repaired this long time past, we went up them attic stairs, I not thinking of anything specially, but as we reached the little hallway at the top, Dr. B. says: "Great Scott! Fenders. What is that smell?" And as sure as you live, ma'am, right then and there, without my knowing any reason for it, the hair began to stand straight up on my head, and I never wanted anything so bad in my life as I wanted that minute to turn and run down them stairs and get out of that house. But I stuck to Dr. B., and was close behind him when he opened the attic door, and then—good Lord!—but I won't go into details of the sight, to make you sick; but I guess the thing we saw hanging there in that attic must be all that is left of your old gentleman visitor.'

"Sure enough, next day and several days after, the papers were full of the horror, and the house had never been rented since then until your sister took it.

"Now, look here, honey, I told you to brace up and not get scared. It won't do to let your imagination affect your nerves like that. Remember, no dead man can hurt a living one, except through his own imagination. You just throw this off your mind, but you stay here with me tonight. My lord and master is to be away for three days, and I shall be glad to have your company all the time he is gone, if you will stay. Come now, let us turn on the 'funnygraph' and have some music and forget doleful things. But, just the same, though I want you and your sister as neighbors, I shall tell her this story, and I shall not blame you and her a bit if you put your heads together and decide to vacate that house 'muy pronto.'

And that is what they did.

ADELIA BEE ADAMS.

The Most Picturesque City in Europe.

For a thousand years Rothenburg has been a city. For more than 500 years it was a Free City of the empire. It is not like those ancient towns which, through centuries of strife, preserved their entity through being huddled near the base of some great castle; it is not like those towns that were protected by powerful princes; for it has maintained itself by its own unaided sturdiness. If great barons came to Rothenburg, they came to receive protection, not to give it, or else they came to be entertained with the lavish open-handedness that made the city a place to which emperors themselves found pleasure in resorting.

By crusaders and pilgrims, Rothenburg was held in affectionate regard, not only for its generous hospitality, but because, seen from the river, it bore a striking resemblance to Jerusalem. But there was order in those times of turbulence; and in an old, old house used by Palestine's pilgrims, and still known as Pilgrims' House, there is an ancient stone, bearing upon it an ancient carving of a hand and a hatchet, with the ominous inscription: "He who quarrels in this house shall have his hand cut off."

Yet since those early days the town has been comparatively forgotten. Even yet it has not become a haunt of the tourist and the traveler, although each year a few Americans resort thitherward, bringing back tales of this city that out-Nurnbergs Nurnberg. It is easily reached, being on a little branch line from the railway between Frankfort and Munich.

It is a place where the sightseer cannot go wrong, for everywhere is fascination. There are both stateliness and beauty. There are towering houses with criss-crossed fronts.

There are deep dungeons under the Rathhaus, reached by stairways dripping with moisture, into which not a ray of light can enter; and in one of these dungeons, some five centuries ago, the men of Rothenburg placed the burgomaster who, more than any other in the long burgomasterial line, gave to the city power and wealth and prosperity. But they charged him with conspiring with the Emperor, and not only gave him no light, but edged their animosity by deliberately giving him no food. It is in all a fiercely dramatic story; for friends who were still faithful tunnelled to the cell, and madly cut through its prodigious wall, and reached the prisoner—but only to find him dead.

Nowadays they treat unpopular burgomasters with more consideration. Each burgomaster is chosen for three years, and at the end of that time he is either elected for life or gives place to a successor. But an election for life does not give unchecked power, for it is a simple matter with these townsfolk, if they tire of a life-chosen Mayor, to make him "so crazy with vexation," as it was expressed to me, that he is glad to resign and accept the pension that they palliatively offer. Only recently they thus got rid of one.—[Robert Shackleton, in Harper's Magazine for May.

Give and Take.

COUNCILMAN HENRY BOLTE of Atlantic City is pushing a bill to prohibit cameras on Atlantic City's incomparable white beaches.

"There are cameras and cameras," said Mr. Bolte the other day "and some of them do nothing but good. Yet I am convinced that all must go, though I can see the other side of the question, too. Every question has its two sides. It is like the dialogue of Diogenes and Aristippus.

"Aristippus one day passed by Diogenes the cynic, where he sat before his tub eating cabbage.

"Diogenes saluted with a sneer the splendidly-clad Aristippus at the head of his glittering retinue.

"'O Aristippus,' he said, sourly, 'if you knew how to live on cabbage, you would not have to flatter kings.'

"Aristippus waved his hand airily to the pessimistic philosopher.

"'O Diogenes,' he retorted, smiling, 'if you knew how to flatter kings, you would not have to live on cabbage.'"

"G.B.S.," Reporter.

CLYDE FITCH took down one of his famous scrapbooks.

"Before fame came to him," he said, "that great rival of mine, George Bernard Shaw, wrote theatrical criticisms for the 'London Saturday Review.'

"Now those were criticisms indeed. Nobody could praise a good play so beautifully as this critic. Nobody could roast a bad play so tellingly. Listen. Here is a sample.

And the playwright read:

"I am in a somewhat foolish position concerning a play at the Opera Comique, whither I was bidden this day week. For some reason I was not supplied with a programme; so that I never learned the name of the play. At the end of the second act, the play had advanced about as far as an ordinary dramatist would have brought it five minutes after the first rising of the curtain; or, say, as far as Ibsen would have brought it ten years before that event. Taking advantage of the second interval to stroll out into the Strand for a little exercise, I unfortunately forgot all about my business, and actually reached home before it occurred to me that I had not seen the end of the play. Under these circumstances it would ill become me to dogmatize on the merits of the work or its performance. I can only offer the management my apologies."

A Well-Known Type of Oratory.

LEONORE O'REILLY, who is perhaps the most powerful orator among the American suffragettes, was complimented at a luncheon in Boston on her eloquence.

"It is my splendid subject," said Miss O'Reilly, modestly, "that makes me seem to speak well. My subject affords me many telling things to say, and I say them simply. That is all."

She smiled.

"I try to avoid," she resumed, "the sort of oratory that marks the average political campaign. That is frightful.

"One night on the East Side, I saw a workingman I knew lounging at the doorway of a public hall, and from inside came a continuous and earnest bellowing.

"'Do you know who's speaking?' I asked my friend. 'Or haven't you been in?'

"'Oh, yes, I've been in,' said he. 'Assemblyman Blagg is speaking.'

"'What about?' I inquired.

"My friend sighed and shook his head.

"'He didn't say,' he answered."

A Saving.

"SIR THOMAS LIPTON told me he is going to take to flying instead of yachting," said a member of the Aëro Club in New York. "He says the air is cheaper than the water.

"He said in his jovial way that he liked to save, even in the matter of sports. He said he was rather like the old fellow in the smoking-car.

"Crossing the plains in a smoking-car, an old fellow and a young one sat side by side. After some hours of travel, they fell into friendly talk, and finally the old fellow filled his pipe from a big pouch and lit up.

"The young man took out his own pipe.

"'Would you kindly oblige me with a match?' he said.

"The old fellow gave him a match, and the young man began to search his pockets.

"'The deuce!' he said, with a sheepish smile, 'I haven't got my tobacco with me.'

"'Then you won't need that match,' said the old fellow, and reaching out his hand he took it and replaced it in his box."

Empty Smiles.

ANDREW CARNEGIE was condemning, at a dinner in New York, the hundreds of millions that England and Germany are so recklessly squandering on warships.

"We peace folk were smiling a little while ago," he said. "It really seemed as if we were accomplishing something in the way of universal disarmament. We are still smiling, still hopeful; but it's an empty smile now. It resembles the famous empty smile of the Highlands.

"There used to be, you know, a Highland laird who was notorious for his closeness. The man was rich, but he squeezed every copper. Once, in the shooting season, he spent a week deer stalking on the estate of a Sassenach neighbor.

"At the end of the week, when the house party took leave, all the servants stood in solemn line in the great stone hall. Each guest ran that gauntlet. Each deposited a gratuity in the expectant hands that darted out from that long, silent line.

"The host watched the close laird's departure curiously. Knowing the man's incredible avarice, he half-expected to hear muttered oaths follow his passage down the line.

"But no. Nothing of the kind. As the laird tripped swiftly through the hall, his hand advanced and met each servant's. And each of those unions caused the servant's face to light up with a smile. Smiles, like rays of sunshine, followed the laird's passage down the whole long line.

"'Jove!' said the host, 'you must have been mighty free with your money to please them all so well!'

"The laird frowned haughtily.

"'Hoot!' he said. 'Not I. I just tickled their loof.'

"With his forefinger he had tickled each hollowed palm, and so produced on their grave faces that still-remembered empty smile."

The Snobs Rebuked.

MRS. WILLIAM ELLIS COREY was describing, at a luncheon at the Plaza, the Paris school where, with the help of Isadora Duncan and Jean de Reszke, she trains little children for the stage.

"I think such work," said Mrs. Corey, "is better than a life of mere social frivolity. American society, you know, even the best of it, is so apt to be snobbish. So often, after listening to the twaddle at a tea or a reception, I feel like getting up to go with old Omar Fitzgerald's remark.

"Fitzgerald, the translator of the Rubaiyat, called one night at a house where a very snobbish conversation was going on. He sat an hour in an uncomfortable silence. He wanted to talk about poetry and music, plays and pictures, but instead he had to listen to snobbish boasting about what the duke had said, and the baron had answered, and how gracious the princess had been.

"Finally Fitzgerald rose to go. He shook hands with his hostess, and then he turned to the assembled guests and said sadly, shaking his head:

"'I once knew a lord, too; but he's dead.'"

A Worker.

MARY GARDEN, apropos of her reported betrothal to a prince, praised the plain, untitled American man.

"I remember an American at a ball in Monte Carlo," she said. "His sturdy, self-reliant Americanism stood out well amid the elegance of the counts and earls and grand dukes who were there.

"I overheard a Russian princess talking to him on the moonlit terrace.

"'Do you dance?' she said.

"No; he didn't dance.

"'Do you speak French?'

"No; he only spoke American.

"'Do you play bridge?'

"No.

"'Balloon?'

"No.

"The princess raised her aristocratic eyebrows.

"'May I ask,' she said, 'what you do do?'

"'I earn my own living,' said the American.

"The princess laughed gaily and approvingly. He was, and she knew it, the only man there who did."

Mean People.

HENRY RUSSELL, the head of the Boston Opera, was describing his foreign tour in search of talent.

"They were mean people," he said of the singers of a certain city. "I could do no business with them. They thought only of money."

Mr. Russell smiled.

"They were as bad as the man who discovered the Blank Theater fire.

"The first intimation the box office had of this fire came, at the end of the third act, from a fat man who bounded down the gallery stairs, stuck his face in at the ticket window, and shouted breathlessly:

"'Theater's afire! Gimme me money back!'"

No Place for Levity.

ARTHUR Q. LOBINGER of Indian Mills, N. J., is noted in Burlington county for his interesting collection of dental curios.

As Mr. Lobinger was showing a recent visitor his case of medieval dental instruments, the subject of pain in the dental chair naturally came up.

"It's a place of pain, that chair," said Mr. Lobinger. "Hence a successful dentist must have a soothing, rather mournful manner. In fact, a good dentist has very much the same manner as a good undertaker.

"Any levity——" He frowned and shook his head.

"My cousin, a famous dentist, once hired to assist him a youth who had worked in a photograph gallery. An aged millionaire patron of my cousin's—a chap, in fact, from whom he had expectations—came one day by appointment to have a half-dozen stumps extracted. He was going to order a full double set of teeth.

"When the old man, pale and scared, arrived, my cousin, for the sake of show, whispered to the young assistant to go and arrange him in the chair.

"The lad was absent-minded or something. He got the frightened old man in the big plush chair, placed a bright, large pair of forceps handy to him on a tray, and then backed off and said:

"'Now look pleasant, please.'

"My cousin tried to explain that the boy was an old photograph hand, but it was no use. The millionaire grabbed his hat and rushed out, and my cousin has never laid eyes on him from that day to this."

Putting It Gently.

THE sages of the general store were discussing the veracity of old Si Perkins when Uncle Bill Abbott ambled in.

"What do you think about it, Uncle Bill?" they asked him. "Would you call Si Perkins a liar?"

"Wall," answered Uncle Bill slowly, as he thoughtfully studied the ceiling, "I don't know as I'd go so far as to call him a liar exactly, but I do know this much: when feedin' time comes, in order to get any response from his hogs, he has to get somebody else to call 'em for him."—[Everybody's.

Nothing Unexpected.

A YOUNG New York broker of convivial habits fell in with an old school friend who had gone on the road.

"Whenever you're in town, come up and bunk with me," he urged his friend as they separated. "No matter what old time it is. If I'm not there, just go ahead and make yourself at home. I'll be sure to turn up before daybreak."

Soon after this, the salesman arrived in town about midnight, and, remembering his friend's invitation, sought out his boarding-house. There was only a dim light flickering in the hall, but he gave the bell a manful pull. Presently he found himself face to face with a landlady of grim and terrible aspect.

"Does Mr. Smith live here?" he faltered.

"He does," snapped the landlady. "You can bring him right in!"—[Everybody's.

A Different Boy This Time.

AN interesting event occurred in the household of a scientific gentleman who is a member of one of Uncle Sam's chemical bureaus in Washington.

The gentleman himself was hard at work in his home laboratory when the news was brought him.

"It's a boy," quietly announced the physician, as he stopped on the threshold.

"All right, all right," muttered the absent-minded chemist, as he bent over his work. "Er—oh—ask him what he wants, won't you?"—[Lippincott's.

"It's all right for you to be a member of the church," replied Richard, "but if I join, who's going to weigh the coal?"—[Lippincott's.

"Yassum," blithely responded the backslider. "I'se charged with stealin' a barrel o' sweet pertaters."

The visitor sighed. "You, Jim!" she repeated. "I am surprised!"

"Yassum," said Jim. "So was I, or I wouldn't be here!"—[Lippincott's.

An Obliging President.

DURING a short-lived revolution, there came to be the head of the government in a little Central American republic a man who was above all things courteous, and who was, moreover, very anxious to gain the good will of the foreign consuls. One of the latter, having heard that a certain countryman of his had died, addressed a note to the head of the new government, in which he stated that his own government would be grateful for a certificate of death of the individual in question. A few days later the consul received the following communication:

"Esteemed Señor, I blush to say that I cannot at present comply with Your Excellency's request for a death certificate of the man named. I sent my soldiers, but he got away, to my shame. I shall use every effort to catch him, however, and hope to send Your Excellency the desired certificate at an early date."

Needless to say, the consul lost no time in communicating to the obliging President the information that the certificate was undesired, in view of the fact that the individual was able to "get away."—[Harper's Weekly.

The House Beautiful—Its Flower Garden and Grounds.

PECULIAR PLANT HABITS.

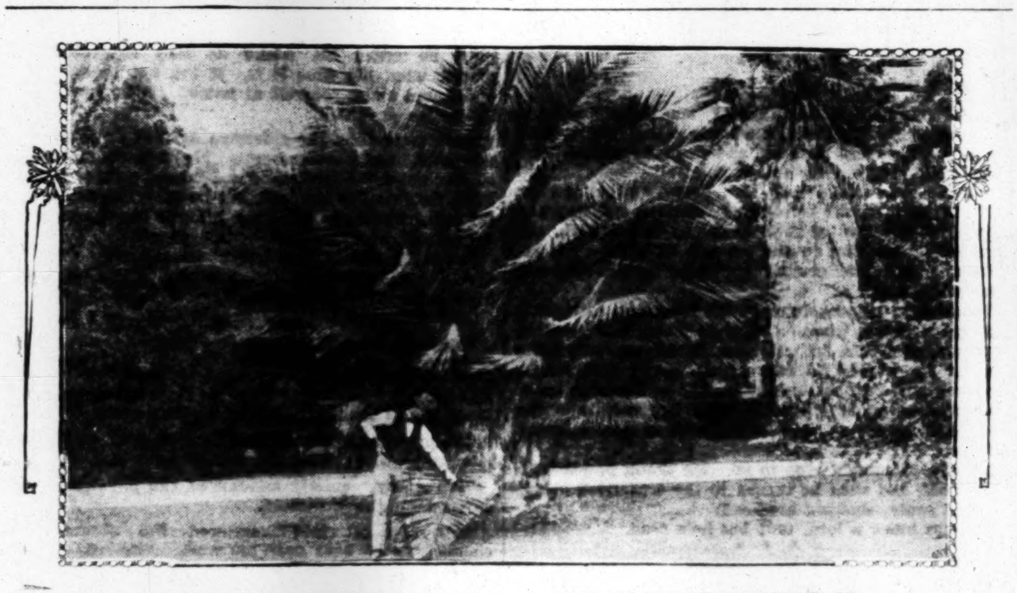
FLOWERS FROM WHICH THE TIME OF DAY MAY BE KNOWN.

By Ernest Braunton.

QUITE a number of plants close their flowers at night, during rain, windstorms and other atmospheric disturbances, but there are some that close or open during every hour of the day. So regular in their habits are some plants that the flowers open with a snap almost right on the hour, and a knowledge of this fact has enabled experienced gardeners to construct floral sun dials that are very accurate in normal weather. In many public gardens, both in this country and abroad, may be found these giant floral sun dials.

For example, the daisy blooms at sunrise—hence its name, "Day's Eye." The dandelion opens its yellow petals at 7 o'clock in the morning, and closes them at 5 in the afternoon; the Arenaria rubia is in bloom from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. The white water lily opens at 7 a.m.; the common mouse ear from 8 to 3; the scarlet pimpernel blooms from 7 until 2; tragopodon opens at 4 in the morning and closes just at noon, whence its common name, "John-go-to-bed-at-noon." Farmers' boys in England regulate their dinner hour by the movements of that queer little blossom. Shepherd's purse blooms at sunrise and closes at dark. The morning glory flings out her gay blossoms at dawn, but the evening primrose is in full glory when the sun goes down. The common water lily blooms at sunrise, the petunia revels in the moonlight, the sweet peas droop their heads at noon, the nasturtium delights in the fiercest glow of the mid-day sun.

Great numbers of flowers persist in blooming with their faces toward the sun, and will not open until the stem has turned in that direction. Some sweet-scented plants, like the heliotrope, smell sweetest during sunny hours, but the majority of fragrant blossoms yield the strongest odors during the night. As regards sleep, all nature seems to agree that night is the proper time, and the majority of plants, like nearly all animal life, take their repose after the close of garish day. In the plant kingdom, as in our own, there are a few night prowlers. The moonflower, night-blooming cacti and a large number of water lilies, including the giant Victoria, bloom only after sundown. Darwin says: "Why they are so unlike in their habits, no one can wholly explain, but their so-called sleep seems to be an effort of nature to bring the leaf surface into a vertical position, and thus put a check upon transpiration and insure its equal expansion. When the light strikes the plant, the leaves turn quickly toward it; when it is removed, or when night comes, the plant serenely goes to sleep."



WINE PALM AT HOMER LAUGHLIN'S, 666 WEST ADAMS ST., LOS ANGELES.

The Wine or Honey Palm.

Jubeae spectabilis is known in its native Chile by the name of "Coquito" (little cocoanut,) or as the wine or honey palm. A sweet sap is drawn from the trunk from which sugar or honey may be made or it is fermented and becomes a wine. Fine specimens of this palm are quite common about Santa Barbara, but in Los Angeles plants of large size are very rare. The finest one in the city is in the grounds of Homer Laughlin, 666 West Adams street, and may be easily seen from the sidewalk by looking in at the carriage entrance. It is not, as its gross appearance would indicate, a relative of the Phoenix or date palm, but is closely allied to the cocoanut of commerce. The channel of the leaflets is not on the top side as in the Phoenix, but on the lower side. It is one of our hardiest palms, and will no doubt grow in all parts of California.

Green Aphids on Roses.

Many letters like the following come to this department: "I am from the East, and am distressed at the insect pest I find on so many of the rose bushes here. They cover some of the roses and buds until at a short distance they look like moss roses, but closer they are disgusting little bugs which hatch out, leaving their eggs to mar the roses and entire bush as well. Is there no remedy for them? I have asked many of the old inhabitants and florists, and they say there is none, so I appeal to you."

Such inquiries have been answered many times, although answer is hardly needed, for the pest prevails only for a short season, and really does not greatly harm either plants or flowers. On light-colored roses they often disfigure the petals, but only with hot-house roses do they become serious pests. Plenty of remedies exist, but some of these are more troublesome and disfiguring than the aphids, and none of them improve the appearance of the bushes. Practical gardeners long ago dispensed with sprays, either wet or dry, except clear water. The insects do not have a very tenacious hold upon the bushes, and a fierce hosing with water will easily dislodge them and drive them some distance from the plant, and but few find their way back again. After spraying, a little tobacco dust sprinkled over the young growing tips will serve to stupefy any remaining, and these will fall to the ground and die.

Host Trees for Mistletoe.

A reader wishes to know what trees are best for the naturalization of the common mistletoe. Throughout our whole State the parasite grows on various species of oak, most of them the evergreen species. It is also found on sycamores and cottonwoods, and is found on all three within an area of 100 feet square in the Arroyo Seco, but a few miles north of Los Angeles. A member of the Royal Horticultural Society of England writes as follows regarding its growth in the Botanic Gardens at Kew:

"With reference to the mistletoe in the Botanic Gardens, I cannot find it recorded when it was first introduced. The following list contains all the trees upon which it grows here: Vigorous: Crataegus Oxyacantha, and var. rosea, Ostrya vulgaris, Aesculus flava, Cladrastis tinctoria, common lime (basswood,) and apple tree. Moderate: Crataegus odoratissima, Acer monspessulanum (maple,) and Juglans nitra (American black walnut.) Weakly: Aesculus Hippocastanum (horse chestnut,) Pyrus Aria, Salix alba (willow,) and Fraxinus Ornus (ash.) I have observed seeds germinate on the following trees, but have never got beyond that stage: Fraxinus pubescens, Diospyros virginiana, Pyrus intermedia, Cerascus scrotina, Gymnocladus canadensis, Ailantus glandulosa, and Corylus Colurna."

Government Seeds in Schools.

For the first time in its history, the government free-seed distribution has accomplished some good in Los Angeles. A score of mail sacks full of vegetable and flower seeds have been distributed to our city school gardens.

For some years a paternal government, anxious to please the farmer, and incidentally Congressmen whose districts might or might not contain an agricultural population, has been giving away seeds of vegetables, grass and flowers. When the seed distribution was inaugurated by Congress, it was ostensibly for the purpose of experiment with various seeds, to see how they would thrive in various parts of the country. That this high purpose, looking to the better development of the country, has never been realized is generally acknowledged.

For some years the free-seed department of the Department of Agriculture has been known as "the government seed shop." It has been laughed at in Washington and referred to as a little pork barrel for members. They have been the wampum of the Congressional mart for barter and exchange. If a Congressman living in a scholarly but gardenless city district wanted government documents to give his constituents, he made a trade with the rural member who wanted more seeds than the law allowed him, and a trade was made for the latter's allowance of books for the city member's allowance of seeds. Thus the seeds served a noble purpose, and became dear to the Congressman's heart, and it is pleasing to note that some of them are being diverted to a good use.

A FACE OF VELVET
How women covet a fresh, smooth, satiny complexion and what a satisfaction and peace of mind its possession brings. The lines of age, worry and overwork (deadly enemies of a woman's beauty), are rendered well-nigh powerless by Mrs. Nettie Harrison's Lola Montez Creme. Other Cremes fail to produce the delightful sensation of refreshing coolness and relaxation to a dry, drawn or chapped skin. Its remarkable healing and soothing effect immediately follows the first application, and most important it does not promote the growth of down upon the face. For wrinkles and massage it is simply ideal—one trial discloses its exclusive individuality. Would-be imitators have utterly failed in their efforts to learn its secret. TREE ORDINANCES.

How They Should Be Amended to Give Better Results.

At present the street tree ordinances of Los Angeles are far from satisfactory in that they are not sufficiently comprehensive. The last one enacted (March, 1907,) has the following provisions:

"Sec. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to plant, remove, destroy, cut, deface, or in any way injure, or cause or permit to be planted, removed, destroyed, cut, defaced, or in any way to be injured, any tree or shrub in any public street, avenue or other public place in the city of Los Angeles, without first applying for, and obtaining, a permit in writing therefor from the forester, which permit shall specifically describe the work to be done thereunder, and shall be void thirty (30) days after its date.

"Sec. 4. The forester is hereby authorized to determine the variety of trees or shrubs which may be planted along any public street, avenue or other public place or any portion thereof, and the distances apart at which said trees or shrubs shall be planted. The permit issued for the planting of any such trees or shrubs shall state the variety of trees or shrubs which shall be planted, and the distance apart at which the same shall be placed; provided, however, that upon the petition of the owners of the majority of the total frontage in any one block requesting the forester to require the variety of trees or shrubs named in such petition to be planted in the said block, and to require the same to be planted at a distance apart named in such petition, it shall be the duty of the forester to determine that the variety of trees or shrubs named in such petition, and none other, be planted in the said block, and that the same shall be planted at the distance apart named in the petition."

These two section are the most important in the ordinance, the one enumerating the penalties to be incurred being in the usual phraseology and sums. We need several amendments to this forestry ordinance, chief of which is one allowing the city forester to enforce immediate planting of the frontage on every lot in the city now remaining treeless. This would prove a long stride toward the attainment of a beautiful city. He should also have the power to remove dead or unsightly trees and replace same with the sort of tree designated for that block or street. Some provision must also be made for collecting the cost of such work where the property owner has refused payment. In other cities the charges constitute a lien on the property and are collectable in the same manner as city taxes. At present the forester has no funds with which to carry on any phase of his work. The Council appropriated the truly magnificent sum of $300 for the use of the officer during the present year. They must have intended this appropriation to be a standing joke, as that sum would be about as useful in the work as would 30 cents. The forester admits that because of its inadequacy for any part of the work none of it has been or will be used. The office should have at least two deputies, trained and experienced pruners and planters, who could take charge of or perform all the technical and practical field work necessary. A reasonable fund should also be set aside for use of the forester so that he could employ labor in emergency cases and secure necessary tools and equipment. At present the office is without so slight a necessity as a pair of pruning shears, a saw, or a shovel. It is earnestly hoped that all interested citizens and the various improvement societies will each and every one take some action in this matter and make it known to their respective Councilmen that such action as above outlined is necessary for the good name of the city and the pleasure and comfort of all its inhabitants. Public sentiment must back up all such progressive moves, and no one will know your wishes unless you make them known, and even then they will be of no value unless they reach the ears of the City Council.

General Improvement.

While out with the Southern Pacific demonstration train, the writer noticed that in all towns and sections public improvements in every class are progressing rapidly. During the past two years more good work has been accomplished than in three times that number of years previous to 1908. Having been a University Farmers' Institute lecturer for the past eight years, and in that capacity visited nearly every town and section in our end of the State, the writer is in a position to speak with certainty and authority. Although no exhibit, literature, or anything whatsoever pertaining to street or roadside trees was carried on the train, the inquiries along this line were many, and show the need and desire for more knowledge along this line. While on the subject, it is not out of place to compliment the Southern Pacific Company on running this college on wheels throughout our State.

The train of six cars was equipped with the best speakers and exhibits afforded by the University of California and the State Horticultural Commission. In many places fully three-fourths of the entire population passed through the train, and so interested were they that at each stopping point railroad officials had to pass through the train and warn the crowds that the time was up. These trips must cost the railroad company an enormous sum, for all expense is borne by it and everybody aboard is provided with the best the land affords. The writer asked one of the Southern Pacific officials what object the company had in touring this grand demonstration, and he replied: "Only the good of the country; we believe that by improved methods here demonstrated, the land owners will raise heavier crops, and that will in part return us some of the money expended. Thus we will all prosper together." With more and better crops we shall have a more beautiful country and cities and public improvements of all kinds will be correspondingly stimulated.

The Hollywood Flower Festival.

During the week of the flower show, tournaments, etc., the beautiful little city of Hollywood looked more than usually attractive. Although one of the neatest of our lesser cities, on this occasion every citizen seemed to have caught the spirit of the times and made his premises and street front as clean and orderly as possible. The flower show, too, was the best ever given in a town of like size in the West, and the only criticism due is the same one that was invited last year; notwithstanding the greatly-increased floor area over that of 1908 there were still too many flowers and plants for the space at command.

The Billboard Crusade.

One vital point established by Judge Welch of Santa Clara county regarding regulation of billboards is that police power alone may suppress the nuisance.

The general principle running through all the decisions is: That the question as to whether a given act is or is not a nuisance does not depend upon the existence of any actual damage from such act. In other words, an act can be justly determined a nuisance or the subject of regulation or prohibition under the police power, although it has never caused actual damage to a citizen or to the community. As was said in the Gunning case: "Nor is it necessary that all persons in the community or, in fact, any individual whatever, should be actually inconvenienced or injured, but it is sufficient if there is a tendency to the annoyance of the public by an infringement of its rights which all are entitled to exercise if they see fit."

PALM AVENUE, LOS ANGELES.

In Freund on Police Power, par. 182, it is said: "It is conceded that the police power is adequate to restrain offensive noises and odors. The same protection to the eye, it is conceived, would not establish a new principle, but carry a recognized principle to further application."

Pruning Deciduous Shrubs.

Deutzias, lilacs, philadelphus, weigelias and flowering shrubs of this class will now be out of bloom, and this is the proper time for pruning. If properly cut back now, a new growth of wood is made which will bear the blossoms of next year. If pruned after this summer growth is made, all the flowering wood of next year will be cut away and a year's crop of blossoms lost. Pruning should be confined to cutting away the dead flower spikes and keeping the bush in proper shape.

Great Civic Need.

What is needed along the line of improvement work, a phase too often overlooked, is to educate and develop taste in the child regarding civic beautifying. When the growing generation is interested in civic improvement the results need not be feared. The present weakness lies in the fact that but few are interested, and the vast majority are indifferent through ignorance. Could the first principles of this grand work be taught to school children as a body, the work of beautifying in the future would prove a simple and easy task. Had the children of the past generation been educated in improvement work, there would be no need now of maintaining a constant, never-ending fight for street trees and other features of the work without which beautiful cities cannot be had. In dealing with the subject at school it is not necessary to delve into detail, but the pupils should be instructed in the fundamentals.

This interest cannot be created by the stuffing process, which is the weakness of the present-day common schools, but should be developed in the child, so that he can perceive, appreciate and discover beauty and excellence and the best means to such ends. The curriculum of the common school has not been of late years sufficiently changed to meet the demands of the present-day development in regard to public improvement, and when reaching mature years or upon leaving school this phase of life is to him a closed book. School training should aim to impart somewhat of culture and taste, especially during the later years of attendance, and this in turn would be transferred to the home and public works, so that there would soon be an army of protestants against slovenly municipal housekeeping that would prove equally potent in public life with the improved methods and conditions brought about at home.

Rescue Work on the Great St. Bernard Pass.

In "The Rescue Dogs of St. Bernard," Father Darbellay, writing in the Wide World Magazine, says that the animals frequently remain out on the mountains searching for lost travelers for fifteen, eighteen and even twenty-four hours at a stretch.

"On one occasion," he writes, "we went down to the pass to seek some travelers who, we knew, could not possibly find their way, as it was snowing hard, bitterly cold and very dark. We had three dogs with us and sent them on ahead. Presently we heard one barking. I hastened in the direction of the sound, and there found the animal pawing in the snow. I knew some one was buried there, and, pushing away the snow with our hands, we soon came across the body of a man. We gave him some wine and biscuits. Hearing another dog barking, I was hastening away when the animal that had found the individual mentioned gripped me by the coat and pulled me over in the snow. I wondered what was the matter, and got up quickly, discovering, with the aid of a lantern, that I was on the brink of a precipice; the dog had saved me from stepping over to my death. On this particular hunt we found eight persons, including one woman and a little child. The latter was very weak and ill. One of the brethren removed his outer coat, wrapped the child in it, tied it to the back of one of the dogs, and sent it off to the hospice. We then wended our way in the same direction."

Practical Poultry Culture in the Southwest.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF STANDARD-BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO GROW IT.

By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

NOTE.—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experience with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions, fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited, to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

VERILY, "Self-preservation is nature's first law." In bird and animal life no characteristic is more pronounced than that of maternity reproduction. A striking illustration of this fact as applied to pigeons was recently called to the writer's attention by J. A. Cox, a noted breeder of thoroughbred hen pigeons, of this city. In a note to The Times, accompanying illustrations shown herewith, Mr. Cox briefly describes his experience as follows:

"Several days ago, having a laudable ambition to set one of my pet hens via the china-egg route, the preliminary arrangements being provided for, I took my feathered beauty to the secluded ground. Once the maternal instinct established, I withdrew the bogus eggs and substituted the real thing. In accomplishing this, I carelessly threw the china eggs out into the open runs. This was in the morning. That same afternoon, happening in the yard, I was curiously surprised to find one of my pet hen pigeons incubating this bogus hen fruit, she having, as shown in the illustrations, assembled them and then gone to business in the same old way at the same old stand. This was all the more remarkable from the fact that my pigeon lofts are situated fully thirty feet from the poultry pens. Efforts to remove her proved futile, so I concluded to let her incubate my doorknobs until darkness would prove effectual in showing her that nothing short of pigeon faith would bring results under these circumstances. At 9 o'clock the bogus eggs were removed and the bird placed in her proper sphere of action. I left the eggs lying on the ground. The following morning, however, my industrious feathered pet was at the doorknobs again, bunching them as shown in the picture. Having some doubts as to the merit of my negatives, I concluded to try again. To bring about satisfactory conditions, I again placed the china eggs in the yard, when presto, change! my little bird was playing the game much as before, with a faith bordering on the sublime."

Sir John Lubbock, in one of his books, lays down the proposition that the viewpoint of birds and animals must be radically different from anything the human mind may conceive. Be that as it may, the instinct of self-preservation and the perpetuation of the species is equally strong in all living matter. The bird with sufficient faith to "hatch out" china eggs is certainly one of loyal lineage which can be depended on when given the opportunity to sit on the real article.

A Six-ounce Egg.

Readers will remember that in a late issue of The Times, we cited an instance of a four-ounce egg, laid by a Colorado hen. That certainly was a hummer, but now comes R. T. of Pasadena with an egg that lays over the Colorado specimen several times, and then some. Our correspondent says:

"I notice in The Times Magazine that a Mr. Joe Harris of Bessemer, Colo., has a hen that laid an egg weighing four ounces. I had a mixed flock of hens last fall. As I gathered the eggs one day, there was an egg in one of the nests that was a sight. I brought it in and weighed it and it tipped the scales at six ounces (now, this is no California yarn.) The shell is very rough and measures over eight inches in length and seven inches around. After I kept it awhile, I made a hole at either end and blew the inside out. There was perfect yolk and white. Now there is still a common-sized egg with a shell on the inside yet."

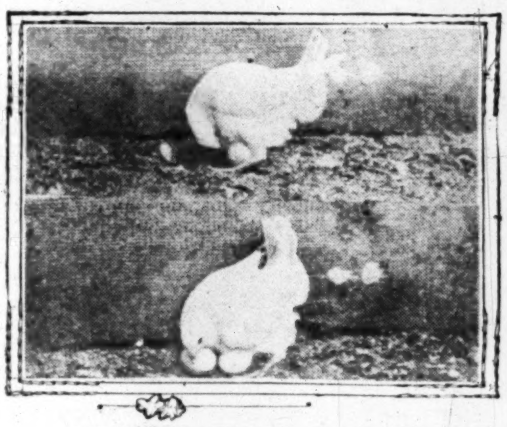
This is almost a duplicate experience of large double-shelled eggs—one within another—to which we alluded a few weeks ago. Can any of our readers suggest an explanation for these monstrosities in hen fruit?

About Breeding Eggs.

There is one thing to think seriously of in breeding chickens: They are not things to be manufactured out of raw material, but creatures to arrive from the unseen in proper environment. Only with environment can one influence the coming creatures. It is of first importance to consider what kind of chicks may be expected to arrive in the environment one is able to make. An egg for incubating is a long-drawn-out expression of a possibility. If it be the egg of a scrub hen one can expect only a scrub chick, and the finest environment possible cannot change its proclivities. If it be the egg of a refined hen, the chick will be refined, and grow to reproduce her like. A refined hen has accomplishments due to heredity. Her ancestors back many years have all been pure-breds, and she is born not only a creature of beauty, but of physique. She is a result of breeding the best of ancestors back many years, and with a sire her equal will prove able to place the unseen in the egg, which shall incubate and let a chick arrive with hereditary might, able to grow and produce like. The hereditary might we can only wait upon and further in each generation. With scrub hens that look well lies no certainty of reproduction of like. To incubate store eggs does not hold out even a good lottery, unless some good breeder chances to sell his poor eggs for groceries and the buyer knows it. There is a lottery in the poor eggs of a good breeder because one may get one elegant bird among the other good blooded ones.

Good eggs do not cost over $3 a setting, and fine eggs are often not more than $5. It is a paying investment to start with fine eggs, paying for what you cannot see, but for what you may expect; and as man is behind all expectations, fine eggs and a fine man have a distinctly social relation. Again an egg is only a right to an expectation; if one wants a guarantee of a fine bird, he must buy the arrived bird. Out of fifty fine eggs, not more than ten really fine or fancy chicks may arrive, while forty may do so. A fine man with a fine breeding pen of fine birds can sell promising eggs, and hope his buyer will get all fine chicks, which it is possible for him to do, but a long way from probable. The writer bought a sitting of eggs of Theodore Sternberg, a breeder of known reputation, some fourteen years ago. They were great, big, even, white eggs, of silver gray Dorkings. They were all fertile, but the mother hen crushed one egg before hatching time; eleven cockerels and one pullet hatched and grew up, and were all fancy specimens. In a sense it was unfortunate to get eleven cockerels, even though they did turn out fancy birds, but in another sense the blood in hereditary flow that could turn out such male specimens could be expected to throw male stamina at the head of a flock of chicks, and the expectations were met in after years. Our memory of those Sternberg sires will never pass. One of them, and the finest specimen, brought up a family of motherless chicks, hovering them at night in his little one-bird house in the orchard. We did not presume to ask as much of him, but the homesick chicks seemed to plead with him for hover at night, and he took the whole fourteen. By day he called them to grubs he dug, in true maternal way, when not in a breeding pen.

It is all a mistake to think one would like to breed barnyard fowls better than the pure breeds, for the variety of feathers. It is pitiable to see a mongrel hen, part Plymouth Rock and part Rhode Island Red, or a cock bird mostly White Minorca, with yellowish red feathers from a Rhode Island Red. It is a shame to mix breeds, and is the pastime of only very simple-minded people, wrapped up in themselves.



THE HEN PIGEON AND CHINA EGGS.

The Local Hen-Fruit Exchange.

As was foreshadowed in this department of The Times a few weeks ago, the commercial poultry breeders with Los Angeles as their principal market, have formed a coöperative body, known as the Egg Producers' Association of Southern California on much the same lines as the orange growers' exchanges, with a view to handling their own product direct, and at the same time securing their supplies in wholesale quantities. The headquarters for the present are in the Hewes market, on Sixth street, Los Angeles.

The following rules governing the handling of eggs and poultry have been adopted:

"1. All shipments of eggs must be fresh and clean, or same will be returned at shipper's expense.

"2. To protect the individual member, we will require that all eggs be stamped by the individual, preferably on the large end. Any member signing a written agreement to abide by the association's grading and candling, may be released at his or her request from stamping same.

"3. Members must furnish their own egg cases, and when empty will be promptly returned to them. The association will purchase cases in large lots and furnish them to members at wholesale prices, when desired.

"4. Shipping tags will be furnished by the association on application.

"5. Remittances for eggs sold will be made the week following a date of shipment. Each week's shipment will be deemed a pool. Each shipment of poultry will be sold separately, and on its merits as to condition, and will be remitted for promptly when sold.

"Do not ship any sick or diseased poultry, as the association will not handle them."

The State Fair Poultry Show.

The annual poultry exhibition held in conjunction with the State Fair at Sacramento has become a pronounced feature of the Capitol City, attracting quite as much attention as any other division. Of late the poultry industry has enjoyed the distinction of an individual building especially equipped for exhibiting the birds, while at the same time the late Legislature has made liberal provision for the paying of cash premiums which are worth the winning. At the fair to be held next September, an effort will be made to bring out a strong exhibit from all sections of the State, in which we hope to see Southern California well represented. It is about as good as settled that the veteran Judge S. Tyler of Pasadena will place the awards, with either W. W. Browning of Ogden, Utah, or Miller Purvis of Illinois as his associate. The State Fair always calls out a strong attendance of fruit growers, stockmen and general farmers, which makes of it a splendid mart for the disposition of breeding stock.

Out of the Unusual.

Mrs. H. A. W. of this city seeks information on the following rather anomalous habit experienced with her chicks:

"Last Sunday morning I had a hen come off with fifteen chicks, eight buff and seven black ones. Monday morning, they began picking each other's eyes. They particularly picked the eyes of the buff. I bought Hamburger steak and fed them all they would eat, but it made no difference, and they still keep up the picking. I have to keep them in the dark except while they are eating, and watch them all the time. The buffs all have their eyes closed. I keep them open with oil and have to keep them entirely away from the blacks, at the same time, they pick each other somewhat."

This is somewhat out of the ordinary of the inquiries sent in to The Times, and is one not often met with. Like feather eating, it may be produced by a single vicious member of the flock, which is followed by others, and unless checked, the whole hatch is affected. Its inception may be due to particles of food adhering to the head of certain ones, which attract attention, and induce the habit; or it may be some abnormal growth on a single bird. Once started, it is hard to control. To isolate the guilty ones, or even destroying them, may save the remainder. To feed raw meat, excepting in small quantities, is bad, as it superinduces diarrhoea.

Too Late?

No! it is not too late to breed chickens. Indeed, no! In Southern California we breed chickens every month in the year for profit, and the late hatched chick, cared for in reference to the summer heat, is just as much a success as the early hatched. The February hatched pullet will not generally lay before October, a period of eight months, because of the cool, rainy start in life. If she lays earlier, from having had exceptional care in the start, she may lay only a few eggs and begin moulting with the old hens. Precocious pullets often do this, being hatched in February. The March pullet often lays as soon and without the possibility of moulting. If March be cold and foggy, the April chick will often catch up with the March chick. The May chick, hatched from an egg of an old hen and a young cock, often challenges her older sisters of the season. Old hens lay their best eggs generally from the middle of April to the middle of May, and with a young cock may be expected to throw strong, beautiful male chicks; the pullet coming in a bunch of cockerels is always a strong, fine bird. Where there are seven cockerels and three pullets out of thirteen eggs, one may expect the pullets to make great showing as hens. Probably they will profit more than the bunch where there are seven pullets and three cockerels.

The writer last year had three June-hatched pullets, from a nest stolen in a rose bush over a shed, each of which laid a first egg on the same day in late December, just when eggs from the breeding pen were slow coming as they should be, and market eggs a luxury.

A Remarkable Record.

Once more, after an interval of eight years, the English railroads have achieved the remarkable record of carrying on their operations for a whole twelve-months without the loss of a single life. The last period in which this was achieved was the year 1901. In 1902 six lives were lost, in 1903 twenty-five, in 1904 six, in 1905 thirty-nine, in 1906 fifty-eight, and in 1907 eighteen. As a matter of fact, there has been no loss of life for fifteen months past. The relatively large number of fatalities in 1906 was mainly the result of three disasters, which were found, upon investigation, to be due entirely to the failure of the human element, all the mechanical arrangements on train and track being found perfect.—[Brownville Herald.

The Hawkins Chickens:

AN EXPERIMENT THAT CAME TO AN UNTIMELY END.

By a Special Contributor.

"I WONDER why it is," remarked the red-headed man in the corner, "that when the leaves begin to open out we all want to close up our desks and take to the brush."

"I know," said the passenger from Seattle; "it's the sap rising in us, just as it does in the trees. We can put on all the airs we please, strut around and blow about our civilization all we want to, but we can't get away from the fact that we're children of nature. When spring comes around, everything in nature takes a fresh start. We feel it in our bones or in our blood, and instinct tells us the best place to start from is the ground, the wild ground. That's exactly why we want to get out into the woods or on the prairies, and if it wasn't for the shoes we wear or the pavements on the streets that keep us from direct contact with the earth, nothing could keep us from throwing off our clothes and rushing pell-mell to the country."

"Well, if that's the case," said the fat drummer, "I'm mighty glad that I wear shoes. I don't like to imagine a man of my figure sprinting into the wilderness without a suit of striped pajamas. Nay, nay, Benjamin; not for mine. Nature is well enough in her way, but she can't beguile me into anything more foolish when spring comes than a home in the suburbs or a chicken farm in my back yard."

"Speakin' of chicken farms," remarked the passenger from Hannibal, "reminds me——"

"And what's more," continued the drummer, "I don't take any stock in all this twaddle——"

"Speakin' of chickens," repeated the Hannibal person, "makes me think——"

"—twaddle about getting back to nature," the drummer went on, without noticing the interruption. "Why should we get back to nature, I'd like to know? What's nature done for us, anyway——"

"Speakin' of chickens," broke in the Hannibal man once more, clearing his throat and raising his voice, "reminds me of the time Ben Hawkins came up from St. Louis and started a chicken ranch close to Hannibal, where I live."

The drummer glared and opened his mouth to speak, but the red-headed man put a fresh cigar into it, and the Hannibal person was allowed to go on his way.

"You see," he continued, "Ben was a printer, a compositor I believe he called it; worked on one o' them big papers down in the city, where they began to get busy about the time the chickens go to roost and don't go to bed until it's time to get up. He'd been workin' that way, he told me, for twenty-five years, when one day he took a notion in his head that he'd chuck it and get back to the land. How he came to get that notion was this way: For about twenty years he'd been thinkin' every spring how nice it would be to get out an' raise chickens for a spell. I reckon every city man gets that idea into him once in so often. But Ben never got any farther than just figgerin', until one night he was eatin' a chicken pie in a restaurant close by the printin' office. There wasn't anything in the pie except pieces o' wings an' backs an' necks, and Ben put up a holler. But the boss says he couldn't help it. So long as chickens had wings an' backs they had to use them or lose money. People seemed to think there wasn't anything to a chicken but legs an' breast. That's what set Ben to cogitatin'. Why, he asked himself, why can't a chicken be all legs an' breast? Why has there got to be so much waste stuff about a chicken? They do all kinds o' things by cross-breedin'. Look at Luther Burbank an' fellers like him, twistin' nature around anyways they please. Why can't they produce a chicken that's all good. There'd be millions in it for the man that did it.

"That's the way the bee got into Ben's bonnet. It got hold of him so he couldn't sleep nights for thinkin' of it. The upshot of it was that he made up his mind it could be done, an' he was the boy to do it. He'd get him a ranch, an' he'd make a brand-new breed o' chickens with nothin' to 'em much, but white meat an' legs, an' the name o' Hawkins would be writ high on the roll o' fame alongside o' Burbank's. So he throws up his job, buys him a little piece o' ground a few miles below Hannibal an' sails in.

"He figgered that takin' Shanghais for legs and a broad-breasted strain like Wyandottes for breast, he could make a starter, an' then by selection an' more cross-breedin' he could gradually work it out the way he wanted it to come. He told me—you see the place he bought was right next to mine, an' that's how I came to know so much about it—he told me he believed he could 'liminate everything except the feathers, and he could get rid of the feathers, too, but that would spoil their looks. Anyway, he certainly had the theory down to a fine point, an' he was just as sure that he was goin' to have chickens all breast an' legs as he was that he was goin' to make a million out of them. An' by Jacks! he did it, too—make the chickens, I mean. It took him a long time, but he was a patient man, an' he kept at it till he got 'em.

"An' they sure was the funniest-lookin' things that mortal ever set eyes on. Every time I come by Ben's place, I'd double up a-laughin' at them ridickylus chickens. They didn't look like chickens at all. They didn't look like anything I ever saw or anybody else ever saw. And about legs! Why, they run up about 18 inches before they got to the round ball o' white meat that answered for a body. They was so heavy in front they had to lean backward to keep from fallin' over, an' when they wanted to grub for worms or gravel, they had to squat. They didn't have any necks at all; just a head set on to the top side o' their chest; an' their wings wasn't much bigger than postage stamps, an' no use to 'em. They was so lop-sided an' lop-fronted with breast that they couldn't walk; had to hop along like a flock o' sparrows, an' it would 'a' just tickled you to death to see them crazy things hoppin' around on their long legs an' knockin' each other over nearly every jump.

"Ben named 'em the Hawkins chickens, after himself, an' he certainly was proud of 'em. He had a right to be, too, for he'd done what he set out to do, an' what no man had ever done before. There was enough breast in one o' them chickens to furnish white meat for a dozen people; an' as for legs! Well, they was sure whoppers; but that's where Ben made his mistake. If he'd 'a' breeded the legs down instead of up, he'd 'a' been all right, for it was them legs that beat him out of his million."

"How was that?" inquired the red-headed man as the passenger from Hannibal paused to fill his pipe.

"Well, you see," he went on, "it was this way: Ben had 'cumulated about a hundred o' these Hawkins chickens an' he decided it was time to begin to cash in. So he goes down to St. Louis an' gives the tip to some o' the big hotel people down there. Well, sir, they was so tickled they wanted to build a monument to Hawkins right there, an' he didn't have no trouble organizin' a company with $5,000,000 capital to put the new chickens on the market. While he was gone, though, one o' them fool birds made a discovery. He found that by squattin' down an' then jumpin' straight up, he could rise four or five feet. The trick tickled him mightily, an' he kept practicin' at it until he could jump ten feet high, them big legs o' his givin' him as much power as a kangaroo. Pretty soon the others caught on to what he was doin' an' it wasn't no time before the whole flock was bouncin' up an' down in a way that was most surprisin' an' entertainin' to the only one that saw 'em, an' that was Ben's brother, who was a cripple an' couldn't get out o' the house to see what had got into 'em.

"While they was jumpin' that way, one of 'em gets a glimpse of the country on the other side o' the high board fence. Of course it looked finer than the chicken pen, an' so what does he do but jump the fence, an' instead o' stoppin' right there to investigate, he kept right on jumpin'. One o' the other chickens saw him go over an' he follows suit to find out what his friend was after. That started 'em all to goin', an' in about ten minutes there wasn't a Hawkins chicken left on that ranch. The whole doggone flock was leapin' across the country twenty feet at a jump. They wasn't stoppin' for nothin' or nobody. They didn't know where they was goin', but they was sure on the way.

"They hadn't more'n got out o' sight o' the house when Ben got home from St. Louis, feelin' about as chesty as one of his freaks. He was tryin' to make up his mind whether he'd build a palace out o' green marble or pink, when he noticed that things was kind o' quiet in the chicken pen. So he looks over the fence an' don't see nothin' at all. It was two or three minutes, I reckon, before he could get into the house and get the facts from his brother. Then he tore off down the road like he was crazy. First man he came to was standin' in the road lookin' the other way with his mouth wide open.

"'See anything o' my chickens?' hollers Ben.

"'Chickens!' screams the man; 'was them chickens? Geminently gosh! Geminently gosh!'

"And that's all Ben could get out o' him. So he went on until he was tired out without gettin' in sight of a feather. Then he comes back an' rouses me out an' we get on our horses, stir up half a dozen neighbors an' takes the trail lickety-split. It wasn't much trouble to follow. There was runaway horses an' runaway cattle an' scared people all along the route. Nobody'd ever seen anything like them chickens bouncin' across the country. But every man we came to joined in the chase until there was about a hundred of us after 'em.

"Well, we got sight of 'em once, just once. They'd jumped across the country until they come to the top of a high bluff lookin' over the Mississippi River. Ben's chickens was all right on breast an' legs, but they was mighty short on brains. They was goin' fine, an' they didn't see any reason to stop for a measly river. Reckon they didn't even know it was wet. Anyway, we caught up with them just in time to see 'em jump over the edge o' that bluff, an' that was the end o' the Hawkins chickens. Ever' blamed one of 'em went to the bottom, and I reckon they're there yet. Ben was so discouraged that he give it up an' went back to the printin' business."

New England's Neglected Farms.

The farms of New England are only half cultivated. I have traveled in a motor over miles of country not crossed by railroads, and have found the shiftlessness of the farmer really appalling. Not only are his fences in bad repair, but his house and barns are in many instances tottering to their fall, and he does not even take the trouble to keep under cover such farming implements as he may own. The despised "city man" comes along and with his book farming makes glad the waste places. He builds anew, or rebuilds; he houses his tools, takes proper care of his live stock and cultivates the soil in a scientific manner. He may not make farming pay the first year that he tries it, but he will in time, if he sticks to it and gives it the attention he would give to any other business. The modern farmer, the man who makes farming pay, is a scientist. The old-fashioned farmer got a living, such as it was, out of the farm, but the new-fashioned one gets more than a living out of the soil, and finds time to cultivate his mind as well as his acres. I can imagine few more enjoyable combinations than that of farming and authorship. The farmer's busy season is in the spring and summer and the early fall. The long winter evenings he can devote to writing, and by an occasional run to town keep himself in touch with men and things.—[Miss Gilder in Putnam's.

Why an Old Maid.

eventually. He told me to make friends with the boys, and tacitly admit their great superiority. Moreover, he told me that the Press Gallery is merely a loafing-place, and not a working-place. I found out afterward that everything that he told me was absolutely true in every particular. He then took me downstairs and introduced me to the assistant doorkeepers, who guard the three doors of the House of Representatives. He told them that he was personally interested in me, and requested that they pay particular attention to me on all occasions. He was very kind, and what he did for me was of priceless value immediately. Then he explained to me that the way to get news is to avoid that Press Gallery; keep out of it and away from it, and go to the doors, call out Representatives, ask them questions, and make notes of their answers. He told me to go to the committee-rooms and find my Senators and Representatives there, and thus gather my news. Judge Noah spent more than two hours with me, and every minute of the time was as a precious jewel to me. Finally, he told me that he should expect me to call on him frequently for information and for "pointers." He was in earnest, and I knew it. I did call on him often, and he was always just as kind and helpful and gentlemanly as my father could have been.

Some day I have no doubt that you will be interested in the story of my experiences with individual Senators and Representatives, during the years that have elapsed since my initiation, but that will be another story. Those experiences furnished food for a great deal of reflection, and prayerful self-restraint, for the sturdy little girl-woman who was out in the wide, wide world fighting the battle of life all alone. No, not wholly alone for even then I had my mother. Somehow I constantly realized the truth and the benizon of the lines of the song evangelist:

> "Oh mother, when I think of thee,
> 'Tis but a step to Calvary."

I was never well dressed—that is, as in former days. I was always comfortably clad, and well groomed, of course. But, you must know, that more than half of my salary was sent each week to mother and Jennie; and so I could not let my mind run to dress. Oh, how glad I am of it now. So many good girls have gone dress crazy, and turned from good to bad, on that account. Fortunately for me, I was kept poor; too poor to be foolish. Therefore I never became silly.

Well, as the years went swiftly along, I managed to bring my mother and Jennie to Washington. We furnished a sweet little house, and Jennie has always had a home. But Jennie is going to leave us next month for a home of her own; I mean of their own. Then mother and I will be lonely enough, but Jennie will not be far away from us. She is to marry a sturdy young man who stands well in this community and who inherits a good business from his father. Moreover, he has been brought up to attend to business, and is a thorough business man.

Now, you see, although I am an old maid, as you girls declare, I am somebody in this world, because I am "the whole world" to my mother, as she proudly declares. I am happy as any woman on earth, and I hope that you will be satisfied with the reasons that I have given for being an old maid. It has been my fate; and surely I am old enough not to strive against fate when it is so plainly labeled.

Besides, my former pet playmate of the care-free days, John Howard, is now a Member of Congress. He is here in Washington and has a room at our house Only last night he said to me:

"It will be useless for you to strive against fate."

Now, what do you think of that?

Prison Life in Japan.

Most people imagine that a prison is a place where malefactors are punished for their crimes. It is not so in Japan, however. There a convict may earn enough money while in jail to maintain his family, has the best of food and lodging, is taught a trade, and, if he wishes, pursues the study of foreign languages. At Sugamo a qualified teacher instructs the younger prisoners in reading, writing, and arithmetic. Prisoners of twenty and upward who are in seclusion for the first time are taught geography and history.

If, on entering the prison, a man states that he has a knowledge of English, he is carefully examined by a linguist and the extent of his knowledge fathomed. He is then allowed to pursue his studies, the necessary books being supplied by the authorities. When there are several in together a teacher is obtained from outside and lessons are given regularly.

In the offices a record of each prisoner is kept during his stay. This serves to show whether the convict is prompt to obey the officials; whether he shows affection for his parents and relatives; whether he writes letters home; and whether he makes progress or not in his scholastic studies.

It was natural that, after parading this paradise, I should doubt if Japan's treatment of her criminals led to a decrease in crime. The officials confessed that, of robbers, burglars, thieves and swindlers, 60 per cent. came back to the prison. Of those who had been twice imprisoned, 60 per cent. returned; of the first offenders, 40 per cent. found their way back.—[Wide World Magazine.

Farming in California—The Land and Its Products.

CONDUCTED BY J. W. JEFFREY, STATE COMMISSIONER OF HORTICULTURE.

FIELD NOTES.

Of Promoters, Beware.

I HAVE received the following article from a reader of this department with a request that it be published. It is from the American Lumberman of March 30, 1909, and contains many valuable suggestions:

It is probably true that land can be devoted to no other use that will be so profitable as the growing of eucalyptus, if the climate and land are both suitable. Under proper conditions, a eucalyptus plantation should begin to pay after five or six years, and within ten or twelve years should be yielding enormous net profits, exceeding anything that can be secured from a citrus crop, and horticultural crop, or even truck gardening. The probabilities thus expressed seem like a dream, so tremendous are the figures of yield and almost certain profits.

But having given that general indorsement, the proviso named at the beginning of the preceding paragraph should be emphasized and enlarged upon. There are signs that eucalyptus schemes are going to be presented to the public without anything but wind back of them, which will yield phenomenal profits to their promoters, but heavy loss to those who invest their money.

First of all, in considering a eucalyptus proposition, is the application of common sense, knowledge and experience, either of the investor or of some one in whom he has confidence. We fear that many people, within the next few years, are going to invest their money in eucalyptus prospectuses and handsomely-prepared stock certificates, deeds and contracts, instead of real eucalyptus properties.

What the wise investor will do will be to inquire, first, as to the climate. Eucalyptus will not grow where the temperature ever goes ten degrees below the freezing point.

The second point to be considered is the soil. Once established, with its roots reaching down to perpetual moisture, the eucalyptus will thrive amazingly. It will grow on what at the surface appears to be a desert, but it must have water. In such localities it must be irrigated at the start, and unless it can reach sub-irrigation, it must be irrigated continuously.

The third point is the character or food contents of the soil. It must be at least fairly good soil. Alfalfa land is usually good eucalyptus land, if the water be not too far down.

Fourth, is the question of species and the certainty of securing the proper species when the land is planted.

Fifth is the assurance of proper care of a plantation during the first two years of its life.

Two chief species recommend themselves to the owner, eucalyptus globulus and eucalyptus rostrata. They are different in characteristics and utility, though both are strong, hard and heavy.

The globulus is perhaps the more rapid grower, and is adaptable for piling, but is not so good as the other in contact with the soil. Rostrata is a wood which in spite of its hardness will, before long, be in demand for furniture, cabinet-making, interior finish, as well as for railway ties, posts and the like. Both are magnificent timbers, and, furthermore, are valuable for fuel, which is an important item in California, Arizona, New Mexico and other sections, if any there be, where the climate will allow of their growth.

Other species of the eucalyptus are valuable, and as we become better acquainted with them, may be preferred for specific purposes to either of those particularly mentioned.

The broad advice to our readers who may be approached on eucalyptus proposition is, first, not to turn down any of them simply because the profits talked about seem impossible, but second, to examine not only the character of the promoters as to their integrity, but as to their knowledge of the business, then examine independently the climate, soil and particularly the water supply. Lastly, in connection with the deal provision must be made for proper care and oversight.

Restoring Orchard Soils.

THE following incident is related by Thomas C. Wallace in the Rural Press, and is of such common-sense quality that it will be useful to scores of The Times' readers:

While traveling recently with a grower of experience, who has spent the past thirty-odd years in Riverside and was among the pioneers in orange growing, I received my inspiration to write this article. Of my own knowledge I know that this grower produced very high-grade fruit nine years ago, and I observed the decline both in quantity and quality of his yield. Some three or four years since he awakened to the fact that the decline of his orchard was not simply due to "off seasons" and "unfavorable seasons." So, to use the vernacular of the busy world, he "got busy." Today his orchard soil is like a garden loam, his trees are pleasing to the eye, his navels hang plentifully and firmly on the trees, and the fruit is firm, smooth, and slated for the fancy bin.

A prominent officer in the Exchange told me only a few days since that it was undoubtedly true that the older groves do not produce as good quality of fruit as when they were in their prime. Grading becomes more and more severe at the packing-houses, and there are those among the heavier growers who view the going off in quality with alarm.

To get back to our question as to how our friend recovered his grove so that it is now again his pride, for he certainly is proud of his grove, and neglect is not his besetting sin. He had a heavy soil with considerable clay and a general condition of stiffness. Into this soil he worked over one ton per acre of gypsum and gave it a light dressing of manure. He was a little afraid of manure. He sowed vetches with steam bone meal in the late summer and plowed or disked them under in the winter, January or February, as occasion allowed. He formerly used the plow, but now uses the disk only for such work. He cut his irrigation furrows fully six inches deep, and ran three or four furrows between the tree rows, instead of five and six as he had been used to. He did this because he was shown that his soil was too dense to irrigate properly with furrows so near together as five and six brought them. He fed the soil with rich ammoniate animal fertilizer materials in the early spring as occasion allowed. He cleaned up the weed growth under his trees and loosened the soil about them with a grub hoe for about four inches deep right up to the tree trunks. He not only cleaned the dead wood from his trees, but he let light and air into them. These operations freed the bound-up condition of the soil and trees, soaked out the artificial hardpan, organized the loam, gave back life to the soil, renewed the lime, the humus, the steady moisture and the air circulation, while at the same time the trees were fed with the great essentials of nitrogen and phosphorus and the rich wealth of soil potash available.

A Woman's Way.

SHE came aboard the demonstration train at Santa Ana and asked me if I remembered her. I did not, but her visiting card recalled the fact that we had met before, say some forty-five years ago when we were small children. Half a continent had intervened for nearly three decades and now she is a prominent property owner in a thriving town in New Mexico with the means enabling her to spend her leisure time in California. Having to make her own way, a farm in Oklahoma offered the best way toward success. A filing on some good land, a quick sale at a profit, the purchase of another tract in New Mexico and its sale at a larger profit had placed her in good financial shape for the balance of her life. I do not hesitate to call this friend an old maid, for she is older than I. The incident shows what one of this much-maligned class of women can do if she is willing to go back to the land and rough it for a few years—that is, if she select the right places for investment and stay with it until she wins out. This lady told me she was getting $100 a month rental for a store put up in Clovis, N. M., with part of the money received for her second farm, and that she had other good property in the same town that is profitable now and constantly increasing in value. I shall not enlarge upon this happy incident—its admonition is too obvious to require elaboration.

English Sparrows.

THE government of the United States has recognized the gravity of the English-sparrow invasion of Southern California by making an appropriation for its suppression. Do not lie back on your oars and think the work's done. The appropriation is but $500, and I presume this will be used in locating the colonies of birds that may now be established. I suggest that whoever has charge of this work should coöperate with the horticultural commissioners of the southern counties, for it will require the united efforts of all forces to destroy the colonies of this pest and patrol the counties to keep them out. Fortunately the English sparrow is so domestic in its habits that the colonies can be easily located and quickly destroyed if taken in time. The suppression of this sparrow is one of the "burning questions" of Southern California.

Remedy for Intemperance.

ONE of the most absorbing subjects now agitating the viticultural districts of the State is that of the anti-saloon movement. Grape growers could speculate at long range and with little alarm over the "dryness" of a few counties in the East, but when Porterville, and then Fresno, went dry, it came home to them with increased force. Now the whole of the wine-making territory of California is alarmed over what is considered by them an attack upon the vested rights of the growers to produce wine and to find a market for it as a legitimate business. I was astonished at the frequency with which the anti-saloon question came to the front during the progress of the demonstration train. The farmers are discussing it. Andrea Sbarboro is filling the press with his "remedy" for intemperance, and the public are rapidly forming conclusions that will be of great force toward the final settlement of this great American question.

I am afraid the proponents of the California wine industry are both overalarmed over the effects of the anti-saloon movement, and overzealous in advocating the use of wine in every home. If Mr. Sbarboro is right in his contention that the use of wine should supersede that of stronger alcoholic beverages, his opposition to saloons should be more marked, for all agree that wine is not a great commodity in the American saloon, and that the consumption of wine is not fostered by the vending of beer and whisky. In his zeal for the advancement of the wine-grape industry, he should neither espouse the cause of the saloon nor advocate the use of wine in every family. If left to themselves the people of California will work out the cause of morality and at the same time protect the wine industry if it is possible to do both together. In fact, it is now apparent that the lessening of the use of ardent spirits is already promoting the use of wine, but the cause of the winemaker will not be further advanced by a propaganda whose slogan is "wine in every home," no matter how sincerely the propagandists may be working. Here are some of the sentiments advanced by the advocates of the general use of wine, and one can forecast easily the opposition they will engender, even among those who do not believe in prohibition:

A mild (alcoholic) stimulant is a human necessity; prohibition is frequently fomented by unscrupulous leaders who work under the cloak of Christian religion and prayer, and these merciless people would trample under foot the sacred rights of the free American people; wine drinking is in itself conducive to the cause of temperance; human nature is left entirely out of consideration by the people who teach abstinence; our country is at the present time afflicted with the prohibition evil; drunkenness should be punished by penal servitude, etc.

I am sure it would be safer for the wine industry to let the people work out its solution without having their sentiments antagonized by such creed as the above. Wine will be used for generations. Grape juices (unfermented) are coming into favor. Methods of keeping grapes fresh months after ripening are being perfected. Markets are opening for California fresh grapes all over the country, and with all these auxiliaries there is little to fear in the final adjustment of our viticultural interests to meet the demands of the public in both morals and commercial progress.

Bulletin No. 2.

THE Claremont Pomological Club has issued its second bulletin upon orchard pests. It is devoted to the purple and red scales, well illustrated and worthy a place in every farm library. Of especial importance is the article upon the purple scale. This pest has never been discovered east of Covina and Glendora except in one dooryard in the city of Pomona, which is now free of this insect, I have been informed. But the pest is surely spreading eastward throughout Los Angeles county, and can be checked only by the most heroic efforts upon the part of the orchardists and the horticultural officials of the counties. This bulletin is issued free and may be obtained from the secretary of the club, V. V. Le Roy, Claremont, Cal. I hope the future bulletins issued from Claremont may be made of length and width uniform now with all other bulletins.

Growth of Melon Shipments.

THE first shipments of any extent in car lots were made in 1896. Nearly all of them were marketed in the West and but very few cars were sent east of Kansas City and St. Louis, Mo. A St. Louis dealer secured a few that year and contracted to take thirty-five cars during the season of 1897. The acreage was considerably increased and that dealer handled 125 cars instead of thirty-five. That year they were placed in many of the large eastern cities. The industry has spread from this until shipments for 1907 amounted to nearly 1300 cars, or a total of 22,000,000 melons. Yield per acre, averaging 150 crates; some have marketed over 300 crates per acre. High-grade seed, good land and careful cultivation make the industry quite profitable.

The Rocky Ford country, without close investigation into its producing ability, would seem to have no advantage over any other irrigated section of the country, in the West. In fact, it has been a barren waste taken from its native cactus and sage-brush conditions and given the life-inspiring influence of water; this, with cultivation, is all that has been contributed by man. Of course, good farming counts here just as it does in any irrigated district or chance-crop country. The better the cultivation, the larger and better the yield. The farmer who practices Campbell's system of conserving moisture by frequent cultivations, gets ahead here just as good cultivation does anywhere.

Land at Rocky Ford is valued at $75 to $500 per acre, owing to improvements, location, etc. Prices of land are figured on nearness to market, a factor that in live-stock-raising sections does not seem to cut much figure with buyer or seller. Here it is estimated what the cost of marketing the crop will be. This is figured at a cost of 15 cents per ton per mile, if the hauling is hired.

It is estimated that one man and team can handle forty acres of melon crop in the cultivation up to harvesting. The average is about 150 crates per acre. This, at 70 cents per crate, would represent a value of $105 per acre, or $4200 for the forty acres. It may be readily understood from this why land values are seemingly high and the people of this locality happy, contented and well-to-do.—[The Earth.

Co-operation in Beans.

TALK of coöperation among farmers continues very active in this State, and if the enthusiasm with which "resolutions" are passed by local conventions of farmers were any indication of what those same farmers would sign their names to when the necessary papers of incorporation are made and they are asked to take stock, it could be safely assumed that the farmers of California are on a coöperative basis. Unfortunately a vote on a resolution is no evidence at all of what those who vote for it will really do. Ordinarily about a quarter of them will "sign up," and the rest will refuse. Perhaps this will not be the case this time. The producers of Lima beans are well situated to organize, for they are producers of a staple crop, whose profitable commercial production seems to be thus far confined to a very small district in this country. Unless some other similar district can be found, the growers of Santa Barbara and Ventura counties seem likely to keep a virtual monopoly of the Lima-bean trade, and, if they will organize properly, they should be able to do themselves great good. What there is reason to fear is that, when organized, they will not have the wisdom to refrain from setting their price higher than the market can bear and "holding" for it. That will ruin any coöperative enterprise. Outsiders will sell, new outside competition will be stimulated, and the association cannot hold its own members. That is the usual fault of farmers' coöperative societies, and the cause of their short life. The legitimate object of a farmers' marketing society is collective marketing at the highest possible price that will put the money in the farmers' pockets within a couple of months after harvest, and put the product into prompt consumption. It is not often that farmers can sell to middle men at prices at which the middle men cannot realize a profit. Occasionally they do, and when they do it is the very worst thing that can happen to the farmers. Their crop sticks in the hands of the trade, to compete with the next crop, and the next year there are no buyers. That is what is the matter with our raisin industry today.—[San Francisco Chronicle.

The Iris.

THIS flower was named from Iris, a radiant goddess arrayed in garments of surpassing splendor, a personification of the rainbow which is a concentration of all tints, rays and coloring of beauty. It is one of the four great perennials: peony, iris, phlox, and columbine. There is a large family of these exquisite flowers. They range in time of blooming from early spring until the middle of July.

Here at our experiment station in York we keep 125 kinds, and it is wonderful how a patch of somber earth, in a short time, can be glorified with such indescribable splendor. It is as if the rainbow were taken to pieces and remade into forms of loveliness the parent bow never saw before. Their hardiness, rapidity of increase, marvelous tracery and interweavings of harmonious tints and colorings should make them favorites in every home.

They are of three sorts: The bulbous; those with rhizomes or spreading tubers; and the tufted rooted ones. The English and Spanish sorts have bulbs like tulips. They are rather tender and for the most part insignificant, so we have discarded them. The German sorts are very numerous, hardy and beautiful; they are called the garden orchids. They increase by rhizomes, which spread out like potatoes. We sometimes get thirty from one in two years. The tufted ones are the Siberian and Japanese sorts.

Among the leading sorts, without going into the high-priced ones, the following are worthy of mention: Florentina Alba; they have large, white, early and fragrant flowers. They produce the oris root of commerce, so much prized in the manufacture of delicate toilet articles. Another is Sans Souci. The flowers of this variety are vivid yellow, with drooping petals delicately veined with chocolate. Queen of May has a soft, rosy, lilac color of delicate beauty.

Parensis is a robust plant with large deep velvety blue flowers. Innocenze is a fine tissue-paper white, with large, very early flowers. Madam Chereau is of the most exquisite loveliness. Its petals are nearly white, fringed with lavender, exceedingly delicate and almost ethereal in loveliness.

In the Siberian family the varieties are all very hardy and multiply rapidly. Siberian Blue has one of the most intense, clear, and vivid blue flowers in existence; it is much prized by florists, easy to ship, and its color blends harmoniously with those of other flowers. White Siberian is a lovely flower; it is much prized for cut flowers. Snow Queen, while still rare, is a flower that is in great demand, there not being enough to go around.

The Japanese irises are very large, often eight to ten inches across, with almost every conceivable blending and interweaving of color. In the West they must have wet feet at blooming time, and also shelter from the hot south wind.

All these flowers are cheap. Most dealers can send you an assortment by mail, prepaid, for $2 per dozen, and from these, in five years, you will have hundreds of charming flowers in great masses of loveliness. After getting acquainted with them, you will want some of the higher-priced ones. Plant German and Siberian on good, rich, well-drained ground. Put the bud about two inches below the surface. The Japanese variety will do best on moister ground, but must not stand in water in winter.—[Farmer's Tribune.

Ditch-Weed Nuisance.

EGAL advice coming from an able and reputable attorney is nearly always better than advice from a horticultural editor on the same points. Yet I have a case in mind where a good lawyer advises a client to begin action against a water company to compel the directors to remove the noxious weeds from the banks of their ditches. This would be good advice had not the Legislature provided a direct and adequate law for the abatement of such as weed nuisances. As it is, the attorney's plan is unnecessary, expensive and cumbersome, and should be invoked only in counties that do not have horticultural commissions.

Through the aid of the county horticultural commission law the directors of a water company may be compelled to remove the noxious weeds along the ditches without appealing to a court. About forty counties of the State have horticultural commissions, and perhaps every reader of The Times in California has the opportunity of appealing to one of these commissions without having to employ an attorney, file an action, summon witnesses and go to trial to abate a weed nuisance upon any right of way or public highway. I will give a brief outline of the procedure open to any complainant in a county having a horticultural commission.

Suppose a water company's ditch running through a community becomes lined with Johnson's grass or any noxious weed. Any one whose lands might be infected with weeds from this source should appeal to his horticultural commissioners. These officials are bound to investigate, and if in their opinion the ditch is a nuisance they pass a resolution declaring it to be such and notify the directors to abate the nuisance within a period of time to be stated in the notice, and in case the water company does not abate the weed pest by the expiration of the time specified, the commissioners shall proceed to destroy the weeds, or have it done, and the Supervisors of the county are obliged to audit the bill. Within thirty days after the County Treasurer paid the bill the commission must file a lien with the Recorder, upon the water company's property—ditches, pipe lines, rights of way or any property directly connected with the lines responsible for the nuisance. Then the directors have ninety days from the filing of the lien in which to pay back to the county treasury the sum paid for the abatement of the nuisance. If they fail to do this, the District Attorney must proceed to collect the claim as in the case of any other lien. One may see from this statement that it is not necessary to appeal to the courts for the abatement of a nuisance of this kind.

Sterilizing the Seed Bed for Tomatoes.

LAST fall in the neighborhood of the Colorado Agricultural College, writes Prof. Leslie F. Paull, there was a considerable scarcity of tomatoes. Growers complained that there was something the matter with their seed, or with their plants which failed to bear. Generally they attributed it to the season. However, while this complaint was being made, one grower was picking from one to two bushels daily from a small garden patch. This man knew the secret.

This is the time of year to provide for a crop of tomatoes. Upon heavy soils, and sometimes upon light ones, the Fusarium blight prevents the development of the fruit, or the fruit is of small size, poor in quality, and sometimes even shrivelled.

What is the Fusarium blight? It is caused by a fungus, a mold something like that which comes upon bread, old cheese, etc. It is found in the soil and apparently acts a little like the smut fungus of onions. It is known that if onions be planted in soil known to be free from this fungus, and are then transplanted to a soil where the disease has previously ravaged the crop, the young plants do not take it; whereas seed planted there results in smutty onions. Investigation has shown that the fungus enters the tip of the seedling, as it emerges from the seed; so, if the seed bed has no smut in it, the onion escapes. How the Fusarium blight enters the tomato plant is not known. But it is known that it enters it during its early stages. Then the fungus lives on for a long time, showing no evidences of its existence in the tomato plant. However, during this time it is sending a web of threads through the tissues of the plant, and by the time the fruit begins to form, there is such a mass of fungus threads in the vessels that the fruit can only form with difficulty, if at all.

No amount of treatment at that time can do any good The fungus is established within the plant. However if the soil in which the seeds are planted is sterilized the disease does not get a footing, and the plants will develop their fruit naturally and freely. The best method of sterilizing the soil for the seed bed is to fill a barrel with the prepared soil and take it to the exhaust pipe of some steam boiler. The pipe, or an attachment from it, should be passed to the very bottom of the barrel, and the steam allowed to penetrate for two or more hours, gunnysacks being packed about the top to hold in the steam.

While it is believed that the disease is contracted at germination, it is desirable to take certain other precautions. No other soil should be allowed to get into the sterilized bed or boxes. If the seedlings are pricked off young, they should be placed again in sterilized soil. Water that has been boiled and cooled should be used for watering during these early stages. No further precautions are necessary when it comes time to set these in the field.

For the home garden the soil may be sterilized by being spread out in shallow pans and baked in the oven. This is not so desirable as steam, since it does not leave the soil in such good condition.

Egg plants are also subject to Fusarium blight, and possibly also peppers. Cabbage, cauliflowers, broccoli, Brussels sprouts, etc., which so easily "damp off" in the seedling stage, succeed better by being planted in sterile soil.—[California Cultivator.

THE WANDERER.

Upon a mountain height far from the sea
  I found a shell,
And to my listening ear this lonely thing
Ever a song of ocean seemed to sing,
  Ever a tale of ocean seemed to tell.

How came this shell upon the mountain height?
  Ah, who can say
Whether there dropped by some too careless hand—
Whether there cast when oceans swept the land,
  Ere the Eternal had ordained the day?

Strange, was it not? Far from its native deep
  One song it sang:
Sang of the awful mysteries of the tide—
Sang of the misty sea, profound and wide—
  Ever with echoes of the ocean rang.

And, as the shell from the mountain height
  Sang of the sea,
So do I ever—leagues and leagues away—
So do I ever—wandering where I may—
  Sing, O my home! sing, O my home! of thee.

Crime, Punishment and Diet.

IN consequence of a wave of crime that has been sweeping over Chicago, a judge of that city recently imposed upon a man a sentence of life imprisonment, with an additional five years, the latter because the culprit was a habitual criminal. The amount involved in the robbery was only 46 cents.

This is not punishment. It is vengeance. Such unreasonably severe punishment is sure to result in a reaction of public opinion, and to defeat its purpose. Experience shows that severe or cruel punishments do not diminish crime. What is needed is an absolute certainty in the administration of justice.

The great importance of this question of crime and punishment may to some extent be gathered from a recent statement published in the Literary Digest, that the cost of crime in the United States exceeds the total value of wheat, corn, and cotton. This is spent in prison maintenance, cost of apprehension and convictions, and California leads with 523 to 100,000 population, as compared with 55 to the 100,000 in Alabama. Yet, it is claimed that with modern laws and methods, and the right men in charge, from 70 to 90 per cent. of our criminals can be changed into law-abiding citizens.

The good news was recently received from Sacramento that Gov. Gillett has signed Senate Bill No. 773, which authorizes the State Board of Prison Directors to assist discharged prisoners in procuring employment. The bill carries an appropriation of $8000—little enough, but better than nothing. In view of the millions upon millions of dollars that criminals cost this State every year, an appropriation of $8000 for the purpose of reforming conditions looks almost humorous. Yet, as stated, much may be accomplished even with this modest amount, with integrity, intelligence and humanity.

Prisoners who have served a previous term may now, by good conduct, earn parole, so that they are not entirely cut off from hope. Most important of all, means will be taken to secure employment for discharged prisoners.

As recently mentioned in The Times, a movement for the betterment of social conditions and intended to become national in its scope, has been started here. As a result of a series of meetings between Eugene W. Chafin, recently Prohibition candidate for President; Col. John Sobieski, Col. Griffith J. Griffith and others interested in securing more humane treatment of prisoners, a "prison reform league" is planned.

The league's main object is the abolition of capital punishment, but it will endeavor incidentally to educate public opinion to the conception that not revenge, but the reformation of offenders, should be the law's guiding principle.

The objects of the Prison Reform League are stated to be as follows:

"1. The abolition of capital punishment, that the State may no longer swell the list of murders by becoming itself a murderer.

"2. Reform of the administration of criminal law, a task that the United States has not undertaken since it became a nation.

"3. Restraint to be for the sole purpose of protecting society and reforming the offender."

For the present, Col. Griffith is acting as secretary of the league.

In regard to the entire abolition of capital punishment, there is room for some difference of opinion. After a fair trial of the other plan, capital punishment was recently reëstablished in France. On the other hand, it is a fact that extreme forms of punishment have not been shown to be deterrant of crime. A century ago the death penalty was inflicted in England for several score of different crimes. Among other things, capital punishment was inflicted for the stealing of anything worth more than five shillings. There is a story about a young man who was brought up for stealing a pair of braces—or suspenders as we call them. The evidence was plain, but the jury hesitated about hanging the man, who was a decent-looking sort of a fellow, for such a comparatively small offense. Finally it was concluded to bring in a verdict of manslaughter, the punishment for which was only twenty years in Australia, or something of that kind.

The main thing to insist on in punishment is that it shall be absolutely sure. Our clever lawyers, who know how to manipulate legal red tape, do much to encourage crime, by making escape from punishment easy to those who have the means to buy it.

Also, above all, let it be remembered that our aim should be not only to punish a man, but to endeavor to reform him. This not only for his own sake, but for the sake of the community.

Our method of handling those who break the law is a crying disgrace to a country that calls itself highly civilized. Not only from the viewpoint of humanity, but also from the lower ground of mercenary interest are our existing methods deplorably wrong. Instead of being reformatories, as well as places of punishment, as they should be, our prisons are factories for the development of confirmed criminals, while the man who comes out of jail with good intentions has hitherto been practically driven back to crime and imprisonment.

One of the grossest evils of our present system of mismanagement is the herding together with confirmed criminals young men who have made a misstep. At present the 2782 prisoners in the two State penitentiaries have only 900 cells. Comment upon such a disgraceful condition should be unnecessary.

Col. Griffith, to whose indefatigable efforts are mainly due the introduction of the reform above referred to, writes to the editor of the Care of the Body that he has word from Mr. Porter, of the prison board, that just as soon as the cells are finished, segregation and grading of the prisoners will begin.

The sooner we recognize the fact that crime is a disease, and treat it as such, the better will it be, not only for the prisoners, but for the public. In this connection, the question of diet is of the highest importance. You cannot expect men to be sound mentally, physically, or morally when they feed in a manner that keeps the coating of their stomachs in a constant state of inflammation. It would be interesting, and most undoubtedly would be astonishingly successful, to introduce in penitentiaries a thorough system of rational non-stimulating diet with hydropathic system and exercises. It would be a fine chance to thoroughly test the efficacy of the "nature cure," because the patients would not be able to shirk the treatment. They would have to take their "medicine."

William S. Van Voris is a man who is doing good, in a quiet way, in the State of Washington. Mr. Van Voris is special agent of the Tacoma Humane Society. Here is a recent dispatch from Tacoma:

"A diet of fruit, nuts and cold water as a substitute for reformatories and jails for criminally-inclined youth is a new departure advocated by Humane Officer William Van Voris of this city, who, encouraged by the results he has obtained in treating boys turned over to him, has begun a movement to secure a permanent home for waifs and unfortunates placed in his charge.

"Van Vooris not only preaches, but practices his doctrine. For three years he has confined himself strictly to a diet of fruit and nuts. He declares that the people of this country, after ridding themselves of the evils of liquor, have a bigger contract in getting rid of gluttony.

"'We are the best-fed and the poorest-nourished nation on earth,' he says. In order that he may demonstrate the value of his ideas concerning the connection between crime and diet, a tract of ten acres will be secured on Vashon Island, in the sound, where a home will be erected and the boys and men of criminal tendencies will be given a chance to get close to nature, and in the proper environment have the benefits of a strictly fruitarian diet."

Mr. Van Voris is wise in recognizing the fact that no radical betterment can be expected to take place in human beings so long as they eat wrong. To see fond mothers inculcating ideas of purity in their children while they continue to overfeed them meat, eggs, and other stimulating food is enough to make the devil laugh.

In a letter to Otto Carqué, Mr. Van Voris writes:

"What little I know of these things comes from my experiments on my own body and with criminals with whom I am in contact daily. I have been paralyzed since 12 years of age. I am now 43, and when the doctors had all my and my father's money, they gave me up as incurable. I said then I would cure myself, believing that if I could so diet myself as to flush the system and work out all the poison in my system I would get well. After three years' work on that theory, I am just now able to move my left arm quite a little, and expect fully to recover its use in another year.

"In seeing our jails, penitentiaries and insane asylums full I have studied the cause. I mail you a marked copy of 'Good Will, a children's home paper, assigning some of the causes. I take all released prisoners to my own cell at the hotel and keep them there until I find them work. They all use cigarettes, and sometimes one will say: "Now if you object to smoking and want me to give it up, I will throw them away." I always say: "No, boys, smoke just as long as you feel like using it," and before the second week is over, they tell me they don't feel as much like smoking as they did, and quit of their own accord.

My explanation is that meats overstimulate the heart and cause a fullness in the head. Tobacco slows down the heart action and makes them feel more comfortable, which is like putting more fuel under the boiler and hanging a weight on the safety valve. How much easier it would be to pull part of the fire out from under the boiler, or better yet, not put so much fuel on the grate."

Here is a part of the article referred to by Mr. Van Voris in the above letter:

"We are all astonished at the amazing increase of crime in the last ten years; also the disregard of man for man and of children for their parents. These are all the natural outgrowth of our present education, or rather our educational system, e. g., the public school educates the head, the church educates the faith, while not one thing is definitely done to cultivate the heart or affections, and without the regulating influence of the affections the educated person is like a ship at sea without a rudder, or like an engine without a balance wheel to equalize the motion.

"Realizing that the heart must be cultivated to balance the increasing powers of intellect, the Humane Society was organized for the express purpose of educating the affections. Heart culture is the foundation stone of

TESTIMONIALS

December 14, 1908.

Mr. H. H. Gustin, Manager THE STOLZ ELECTROPHONE CO., Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Sir—I bought one of your Electrophones after 30 days' trial and I believe it to be the only instrument of its kind constructed upon scientific principles.

Gives me much pleasure in recommending it to those whose hearing is defective and would advise them to give the Electrophone a trial.

It adds new hopes and pleasures to one's life, and I will gladly answer anyone who may wish my opinion on the usefulness of the instrument.

Mr. H. H. Gustin, Manager THE STOLZ ELECTROPHONE CO., Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Sir—I have been using the Stolz Electrophone for two months, and am glad to say it has been a great benefit to me. I can hear and enjoy music as well as I ever could, and can hear a sermon when delivered in an ordinary tone of voice, and can also converse with my family.

The terrible head noises which I have suffered with for the past five years are entirely absent when I am using the Electrophone. I could not do without it.

Yours very truly, the humane work, and wherever it has been regularly taught it has demonstrated its efficiency.

"In the Jefferson School District of San Francisco, where eight years ago it was about unsafe to go, a Chinaman was pelted with stones and cans were tied to cats' tails, and where a girl was almost sure to be insulted, the principal of the school now has 650 members of the Mercy Band and there is not a more orderly section of the city, and the boys are proud of the part they have taken in its reformation.

Care of the Body at Bargain Sales.

THEY had a bully bargain sale rush at Williamsburgh, N. Y., recently. Two rival 5 and 10-cent stores, within a few doors of each other, were offering special inducements. The game was called for 8:30 a.m., but long before 7 o'clock a big crowd swarmed in front of the stores, until, when the doors opened, 3000 women were tightly packed together. Scores fainted and were trampled upon. Finally the police reserves were called out to quell the riot. Mounted men rode through the crowds and by using clubs were finally able to force the women back.

The bargain-hunting woman is a favorite topic with humorous writers. There is certainly much to be said on that subject. Perhaps, however, if men would not be quite so stingy with their wives, forcing them to squeeze every nickel, there would not be so much ground for criticism along this line. And then, the men are not altogether guiltless, when it comes to stampeding after a "good thing." As, for instance, when on Thanksgiving Day, and some other festal occasions, turkey replaces "dog sausage" on the free-lunch counters of drink dispensaries.

After all, this is only a phase of the universal craving to get something for nothing, a desire that is by no means confined to one sex.

The Nipponese Way.

SEVEN HUNDRED Japanese sailors, from the two visiting warships, had shore leave at San Pedro. What places do you suppose they first made for:

Guess again.

Many of them bought post cards of local views. Some inspected a public school. Most of them roamed over the city, gathering flowers, where they were permitted to do so. None were seen to enter a saloon.

Yet these boys are not sissies. Their kind amply proved this at Port Arthur and at Mukden.

Partly the explanation may be found in their temperate non-stimulating diet.

Can you imagine Jack Tars from the warships of the United States, or England, or France, or any other country big enough to have warships, inspecting schools, or gathering flowers, when on shore leave in a foreign port?

Certainly a remarkable people, these Japs. We may say we cannot compete with them—mainly because we eat too much and of too expensive foods, and buy too many expensive drinks—but we have no right to treat them with contempt

This is not an argument for indiscriminate immigration of Japanese. We are less than 2,000,000 in California, and they could easily swamp us. Self-preservation is the first law of nature.

Vegetables for Veterans.

FOLLOWING is an extract from a Soldiers' Home letter in a local contemporary:

"Vegetarian diet is gaining ground rapidly at the ten national homes, and recommendations of government inspectors are urging a greater variety of cereals and garden produce for the present and ensuing year.

"'We find that meat is an aid to rheumatic troubles, diseases of the stomach and other maladies in men of advanced years,' says one official. 'Cereals, fresh and dried fruits and vegetables will be used in greater variety and quantity as home officials coincide with the opinion of inspectors on this question of diet.'

"Col. T. J. Cochrane, governor, is an enthusiast for a vegetable diet. He says that for years he has eaten little meat, and attributes his perfect health and great endurance to that fact.

"The new diet programme will not, however, retire the delectable bird that abounds on home tables Thanksgiving and Christmas, nor chicken by way of pleasing the taste once in a while, but simply means that fruit and vegetables will gradually replace much of the regular meat dishes, while still leaving enough for those who feel they must have it.

"At present, the annual cost of feeding one veteran at this home is $171, as against $184, the average in other homes."

Possibly the recent criticism in the Care of the Body of a Soldiers' Home menu, with its woeful lack of "green stuff," may have contributed in some degree to this improvement.

A Mexican Patriarch.

CENTENARIANS are not so uncommon as some people suppose. The general public does not hear much about them, except when one of them happens to get a mention in the papers, because they are not likely to be found in the ranks of those who lead the strenuous life in the limelight, but rather among the simple and lowly, who live near to nature. Nor are they likely to be found among those who eat flesh food twice a day, but rather among such as live on black bread and sour milk, or potatoes and buttermilk, or bananas and dates, or some simple diet of that kind, that is conducive to length of life. There are probably more centenarians in the little country of Bulgaria than in all the rest of Europe.

A newspaper item recently told of a Mexican who had attained the great age of 139 years. The editor of the Care of the Body wrote to E. C. Butler, the correspondent of The Times in the City of Mexico, asking him if the statement was true to send a few more details. Here is his reply:

"José Guadalupe Alcala, supposedly the oldest man on the planet, lives an uneventful life in a little village several miles south of the beautiful city of Guadalajara. This quiet little Indian, who is said to be 139 years of age, according to the records in the parish church, was thus born forty years before Mexico became a republic, and has lived, therefore, in three centuries. His father and grandfather and necessarily the rest of his parental tree were of Indian stock, of the Otomi family. The Otomis are very clannish. One lot, numbering probably 800, live about twenty miles west of the City of Mexico, among the foothills of the dead volcano of Ajusco. They never mingle with the whites nor with the other Indians, eschew the Spanish and while professedly Catholics, have an idol of Huitzilopochtli, the titular god of war of the Mexicans, alongside the Catholic chapel. Alcala, in common with other Otomis, dreams still of the triumphant return of Moctezuma Xocoyotzin, who will liberate Mexico from white control. Yet the Alcala family are supposed to be devout Catholics. They live on a small ranch, which raises sufficient corn and other home stuff.

"As far as can be learned, this old man lives the 'simple life' of the Mexican Indian. In the morning he has his coffee and atole or corn gruel; in the midday tortillas and frijoles, and at night milk or coffee and more tortillas and frijoles. Tortillas are the unleavened flat cakes called chapatees in India, and identical with the flat 'bread' eaten in Palestine. The frijoles are the Mexican bean, brown or black in color and rather larger than the white American bean for which Boston is famous. The Mexican bean is really more appetizing than the Boston article.

"Don Pepe, as this veteran is called, smokes constantly, using on the average two packages of cigarettes a day. On feast days, he indulges in the drink of tequila, a sort of cane brandy for which Jalisco and Guadalajara are famous. But he is really quite temperate. He does not profess to take any particular care of his body. There is at least one day in the year that Don Pepe bathes, and that is on San Juan Day, the Day of St. John the Baptist, the 25th of June. He wears a suit of unbleached manta or native cotton and a wide straw sombrero turned up at the edges. Thus attired, he sits the livelong day on a low bench at his door, dreaming away the time while the centuries pass in procession before his unseeing eyes. He is seldom if ever sick, but verging as he does on a century and a half, his eyes are dim and his hearing heavy. But nothing is required of this silent sentinel except to eat and sleep until such day arrives when he can answer the roll call of the recording angel."

This man, therefore, was already six years of age when the Declaration of Independence was signed. He was already a grown lad when El Pueblo Nuestra Señora de Los Angeles was founded by his countrymen on the banks of the River Porciuncula.

It will be noted that this old Mexican smokes constantly, and even smokes cigarettes, using two packages a day.' It is a notable fact in the history of many centenarians, both men and women, they have smoked all their lives. This shows that our good friends of the anti-tobacco league are inclined to exaggerate, as do the prohibitionists. Mexican cigarettes made with yellow paper are, however, less harmful than the white "coffin nails."

Otherwise, it will be noted that this man, like all who have attained a very great age, is temperate in his mode of life. A person who is a great drinker may attain great age. A person who is a great smoker may attain a great age, but a person who habitually overeats will never attain a great age—nor will one who habitually worries. Again, equability of climate undoubtedly has much influence in favoring long life.

This old man can scarcely be said to live, to judge from the above account. He is vegetating. Of course, if a person simply vegetates, there is more chance to live long than if one wears oneself out with mental and physical activity. The question then arises, however, is it worth while? Is it not better to live a little less long and to accomplish more?

"It is not all of life to live
"Nor all of death to die."

"GIVE THE CHINAMAN A CHANCE"

"It was recently mentioned in The Times that Dr. Tom She Bin, one of the best known Chinese physicians in the United States, had been charged with practicing without a license. The doctor is a graduate of one of the leading colleges of medicine in China. He came to this country many years ago. En route plague broke out on the ship. The vessel's physician was unable to cope with it, but it is said that Dr. Tom saved every case. He was retained by the steamship company and served on Oriental lines for several years. He then began to practice among his countrymen in San Francisco, but after the earthquake came to Los Angeles. In view of the fact that a majority of plague cases in San Francisco have proved fatal under the care of white physicians, it might not be a bad idea to get Dr. Bin to go up there and see what he can do."

Dr. Tom She Bin can be seen at the Chinese Tea and Herb Sanitarium, 711 S. Main St. Established 1870.

Oranges for Rheumatism.

FOLLOWING is from a Soldiers' Home correspondent:

"Having been a sufferer from muscular rheumatism for a long time I was much interested in your article on the subject in the Care of the Body of April 18 and would like to know what fruits are best under the head of "sub-acid," and how about milk and cocoa as a drink, and such vegetables as potatoes, beets, turnips, and carrots as foods?"

No fruit is better for rheumatism than ripe California oranges. They are just now so sweet that even those who usually say they "cannot eat oranges" may enjoy them. Try an "orange fast" for a month, eating from six to ten fair-sized oranges daily, and nothing else. When you are dieting in this way, you must be particularly careful to avoid all narcotics, or stimulants, such as tobacco, drugs, or alcohol, as under such a diet the body is unusually sensitive to poisons.

Milk is not a drink, but a food—food for the young of the animal that gives it. Cocoa should be avoided by those subject to rheumatism as it contains some xanthin, the equivalent of uric acid. This is also true of tea and coffee. Fresh, clean buttermilk, sipped slowly, is wholesome. Remember, however, that also is a food.

All the vegetables named, and others, are good, but in cooking they lose most of their value, even when the water is not thrown away. They may be grated and eaten raw.

Such dietetic arrangements cannot easily be made in an institution or boarding-house. Under such circumstances a person must do the best he can. For those who wish to diet it is always better to live where they can control the preparation of their food.

Pianofifty.

TWENTY-FOUR young women of Los Angeles, playing twelve pianos, recently rendered a number of compositions at a concert. Miraculously escaping punishment for their crime, they are said to be contemplating a still more harrowing assault upon the nervous system. We are told it is proposed soon to give a concert in which fifty professional piano players will take part. That is to say, 500 human or rather inhuman—fingers simultaneously pounding upon 2200 protesting keys.

Surely, this is about the limit of pianofortitude on part of a long-suffering public. Police!

Come to California!

ELIZABETH TOWNE writes as follows in the April Nautilus:

"Three times a day our windows are thrown open for a good airing. Each time the thermostat must be turned back so the heater drafts will not open unnecessarily. After the windows are all closed, the thermostat is turned on again to the 70-degree notch.

"The housemaids do the airing in the morning, one of the girls in the office does it at noon, and our boy Sir Percival does it at closing time.

"At first, somebody was always forgetting the thermostat, or some window.

"Then I systematized it! The thermostat, which is in my office, is turned back first; then the windows are opened in exact order beginning in William's office, next to mine. Afterward they are closed in exactly the same order, beginning in William's office following around to the right through every room on this floor; which course lands at the last window in my office, right close to the thermostat. Since we installed this system we have no more forgetting. Instead of 'remembering' every one of eleven windows, a door and two movings of the thermostat, the attendant remembers one thing—to start right. The rest follows in logical order that leaves the mind free."

Why don't you come to God's Country—to California—where "thermostats" are unknown—what is a thermostat, anyhow?—and few of the old-timers have ever seen a furnace. Here you may leave all the windows and doors open every day in the year, may sleep out on a porch at Christmas, and find a pair of blankets comfortable, at night, on the Fourth of July.

Come to California, before the sign "Standing Room Only" is hung up. It will not take so very long for that to be necessary—not so long as perhaps you think. Population of Los Angeles 1880, 11,000; 1890, 50,000; 1900, 100,000; 1909, 320,000; 1920—what? Certainly not less than a million. And most of Southern California is growing at an equal rate.

Come to California, and get a couple of acres of land with water—don't forget the water. Leave behind your "thermostats," and your furnaces, and your fur overcoats, and your woolen underclothes, and your ear muffs, and your cyclone cellars, and your lightning conductors, and your remedies for sunstroke, hay fever and malaria.

Come to California, and be healthy and happy.

P. S.—Since then, Elizabeth has come—on a lecture trip.

A Muscular Christian.

A METHODIST minister of Germantown, Pa., by the name of Munhall, 64 years of age, has issued a sweeping challenge to any drinking man between 21 and 64 years of age to meet him in ten athletic contests. The dispatch says:

"The evangelist made this defi to prove his contention that a man who indulges in stimulants is not the physical equal of one who abstains from them.

"He was inspired to issue the challenge by a postal card he received which he thinks was sent to him by the State Liquor Dealers' Association. On the reverse side of the card is a muscular arm gripping a sledge hammer, below which is the inscription:

" 'We stand for strength and vigor against prohibition. We stand for drinking in moderation.'

"Dr. Munhall enumerates as follows the contests in which he will meet all comers:

"Standing broad jump, running broad jump, running hop, skip and jump, putting ten-pound shot, throwing sixteen-pound hammer, fifty-yard dash, five-mile walk, heel and toe; five-mile swim, to take place in July or August; handling fifty-pound dumbbell in various exercises, bicycle ride, a distance of eighty-four miles."

Since then, the manager of a liquor store in Philadelphia, who is 65 years of age, and who takes a few drinks daily, has offered to meet the parson in the ten contests, but proposes that they should all be pulled off in one day.

The result of such a contest would not by any means be decisive, in regard to the ill-effects of alcohol. If this man should meet a much younger and stronger man, skilled in his particular line of exercise, the parson would probably go down in defeat, even if the former was a regular "soak."

One thing is, however, certain, namely, that alcohol, even in small doses, while temporarily stimulating, in its reaction inevitably decreases the mental and physical powers.

Spineless Cactus.

A MINING man who recently returned to Los Angeles from a trip through Northern Mexico stated in the press that he had there seen thousands of acres of spineless cactus growing wild, and in some places fenced in to keep it from being devoured too quickly by the cattle. The editor of the Care of the Body sent a clipping of this article to Luther Burbank, who writes as follows:

"Thank you heartily for the clipping you sent me. I have several hundred varieties of the so-called thornless varieties of cacti from Mexico which have been growing on my place for several years. Some bear good fodder and some bear good fruit, but some of my new ones are as much superior to them as they are to the wild thorny ones."

A pamphlet descriptive of "The New Agricultural and Horticultural Opuntias" has been received from Luther Burbank. In regard to the fruit of these plants, he writes:

"These fruits, which are borne on the different species and varieties, vary in size from that of a small peanut to the size of a large banana and in colors of crimson, scarlet, yellow and white, and have more various attractive flavors than are usually found in most other fruits, except perhaps the apple and the pear, the product of a single plant being often from 50 to 200 pounds per annum, some bearing one crop, others two or more each season like the figs, the first or main crop ripening as the second comes into bloom on the same plants."

The pamphlet contains a cut of a wonderful bunch of the "One-leaf Improved Spineless Opuntia." One cactus leaf is loaded with thirty-two ripe fruits which, without the leaf, weigh seven pounds.

Making allowance for all exaggerations by over-enthusiastic people—some of whom are financially interested in this plant—it certainly looks as if the spineless cactus was destined to prove of much value in the arid Southwest, not only to animals, but also to man.

The Influence of the Stars.

THE following letter has been received from Mrs. Susanna D. Bishop, of La Habra, Cal.:

"In your remarks on the 'Ides of March' I notice that you bring forward as a death warrant for astrology the fact that it takes light several years to travel from star to earth. Light really has nothing to do with stellar influence. Magnetism is not such a slow coach. It gets there and back before light is fairly started.

"You are inclined to scoff at aries, but maybe aries helps you help the world along and makes you want to tell people what you think they ought to know. Distance cuts no figure at all where magnetism is concerned. A magnetic person or star can go calmly around in his orbit and send his influence to the end of the earth or the universe. For my part I thank my lucky stars that I was born in the same sign with Thomas Jefferson, Mohammed, Prince Bismarck, and the King of Hygienists. March 21 was my forty-sixth birthday."

Here is a woman who is sensible enough to be willing to tell her age, but is not sensible enough to understand that everything—even thought—takes an appreciable time to travel from one place to another.

If your arm was long enough to reach the sun, it would be a considerable time—probably several hours—before you would feel pain.

In the March Naturopath, Dr. George W. Carey of Pomona, Cal., author of "The Biochemic System of Medicine," writes:

"Planetary influences are purely chemical. Jacob's Ladder, upon which angels were seen ascending and de-

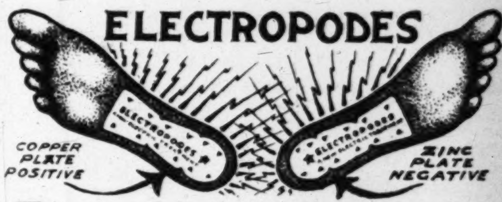
ELECTROPODES



Electropodes are positively guaranteed to cure Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Weak Back, Headache, Backache, Insomnia, Indigestion and all forms of Nervous Ailments.
The Electric current, supplied by Electropodes, absorbs the uric acid in the system—removing the cause of Rheumatism, and strengthening all the inside nerves and tissues of the body.
Electropodes
Electropodes are metal insoles, worn in the heels of the shoes—one is of copper, the other of zinc, forming the two poles of a galvanic battery; the nerves of the body become the connecting wires, over which a gentle flow of electricity courses throughout the entire day.
The Contract
The price of Electropodes is $1.00 a pair, and your druggist signs a contract to refund the purchase price, if they fail to effect a cure in every instance. A less meritorious article could not possibly be sold on this basis. If drugs fail to cure you, try Electropodes.
Buy Electropodes of your druggist, and if he cannot supply you, have him order a pair from

The Question Is Often Asked

What Is Astigmatism?

Roughly speaking, it is a flattening of the correa or "watch crystal of the eye." If the cornea is equally curved like half of a ball, the focus is perfect. But if the cornea is flattened or made oblong like half of an egg cut lengthwise, the focus is disturbed. A flattening of one-twenty-fifth of an inch causes six units of astigmatism and one-fourth or even one-eighth of a unit of astigmatism is often the cause of much trouble.

Accurate correction of astigmatism is our specialty.

scending, expresses in symbol the chemical action and reaction of aërial and etheric substance in its crossification (or crucifixion) in the process of manifestation, materialization and transmutation. Each planet radiates energy based upon the chemical constituents of its composition; this is scientifically proven by the spectroscope."

Well, if "planetary influences are purely chemical," then they must be subject to the laws of chemistry, mustn't they?

Light travels at the rate of 186,000 miles a second. The velocity of electricity is a little slower. Magnetic waves cannot be separated from electric waves. Consequently they travel at the same speed.

One of the nearest stars, or suns, is Sirius, visible on the southern horizon. It takes nearly nine years for electro-magnetic waves to travel from that star to the earth. Any disturbances occurring on Sirius today could only be perceived on the earth nearly nine years after they had happened.

If magnetic waves should leave some of the stars that constitute the signs of the zodiac, starting when a man is born, he would be long dead and buried before they could reach him.

Some of the "fixed" stars are so immensely distant that light, traveling at the inconceivable speed of 186,000 miles a second, takes several thousand years to traverse the distance. These stars are, of course, invisible to the naked eye.

Astrology is a foolish middle-age superstition unworthy of the serious attention of intelligent people. You would much better devote your time to more important and more practical questions, such, for instance, as the influence of the earth upon terrestrial atmospheric conditions—upon weather, climate, epidemics, etc. The new solar telescope on Mount Wilson promises to throw much new light on this important subject.

Desire Force.

IN a recent number of the Agnostic Index (Los Angeles) Channing Severance had a communication on "The Foolishness of Prayer."

Not so fast, brother. The man who prays is not always a fool. On the contrary, he is likely to be a wise man—a man of experience.

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire." It is "desire force," which is one of the forms of suggestion. Like all forms of suggestion, it has its value, although it may not be taken out of its proper place and made a cure-all.

All intelligent people instinctively pray, whether to Jove, or Jah'veh, or Jesus, or Buddah—whether to a hideous wooden idol, or to beautiful and bounteous Mother Nature. The first wail of the infant is a prayer, as is the last groan of the centenarian.

As one writer has said: "To pray aright is to will, and we in a large measure answer our own prayers." Or as a woman has written, "To pray is to will, more or less determinedly. To will is often to accomplish on the spot."

Don't discourage people from prayer. Pray without ceasing, but let your prayer be accompanied by earnest work, or it will avail little.

The man who endeavors to eliminate from life all that is ideal is not doing the best that might possibly be done for poor humanity. This, however, is the weak point of our agnostic friends. They take away all our beliefs and offer us nothing in place of them.

Felt for Cold Feet.

COLD feet are caused by poor circulation. Go barefoot as much as possible. Wash the feet every night in cold water, briskly rubbing them dry.

Leather is the worst kind of material for foot covering, being cold in winter and hot in summer. For wear in and around the house—when you don't go barefoot—try felt slippers with felt soles. These and other felt goods, of first-class quality, are now made in Southern California.

"Too Physical."

A DISPATCH from Paris, describing the opening of the salon, says: "A portrait of President Taft, hung in the salon of honor, is regarded as too physical."

What do these finicky Frenchmen expect? Would they, perhaps, have our portly President depicted as Ariel?

NatureAID LESSON NO. 8

NatureAID is Dr. Adolph Petter's highly improved Naturopathic (Nature Cure) system of drugless and surgical-less RIGHT LIVING HEALTH CULTURE AND HEALING. Each and every male and female weakness, pain, ill-feeling dis-ease and malformation to which human flesh is heir, including all fallen organs or parts such as rupture, deformities, spinal curvature, fallen womb, floating kidney, fallen stomach, enlarged abdomen, stooped shoulders, etc., etc., and there is none better because the NatureAID system simply exemplifies the CHRIST TAUGHT PRINCIPLES of harmonizing all our living methods, thoughts, words and acts of life with God-Nature's all-creating, all-governing-invariable-invulnerable and infinitely wiser than man-made, natural laws of compensation, the principles of which are harmoniously constructive healthy life when conditions are right and inharmoniously destructive, sickness and final death when conditions are wrong.

And these are the natural laws that CREATED HENCE MUST GOVERN US ENTIRELY, else first weaken, pain, ill-feeling dis-ease us, as a most merciful safety valve indicating to our instinctive conscience sense that we must get busy quick and harmonize our living methods, thoughts, words and acts of life with the constructive healthy life principle of these natural laws again before our still remaining Vital Nature fires of life burn too low to be again rekindled, else we become subservient to the destructive unnatural sickening death principles of these same laws, which kill us much too early in life.

Hence there is no reasoning human thought, word or act that can get above, below or around the just common sense principles of the NatureAID Right Living Health Culture and Healing System.

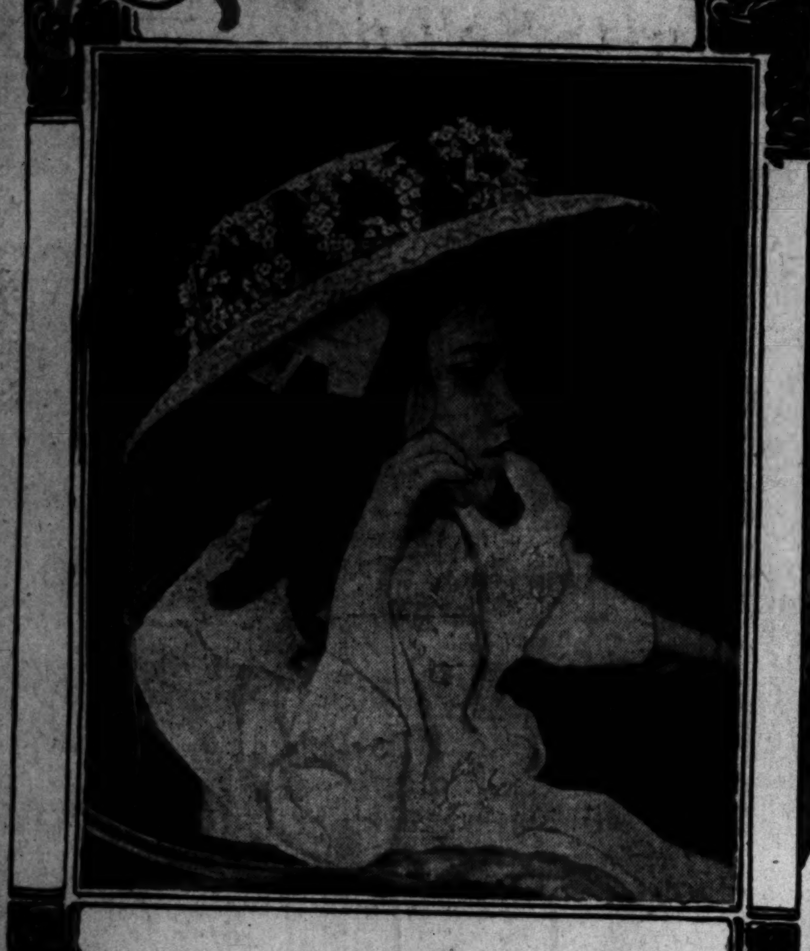
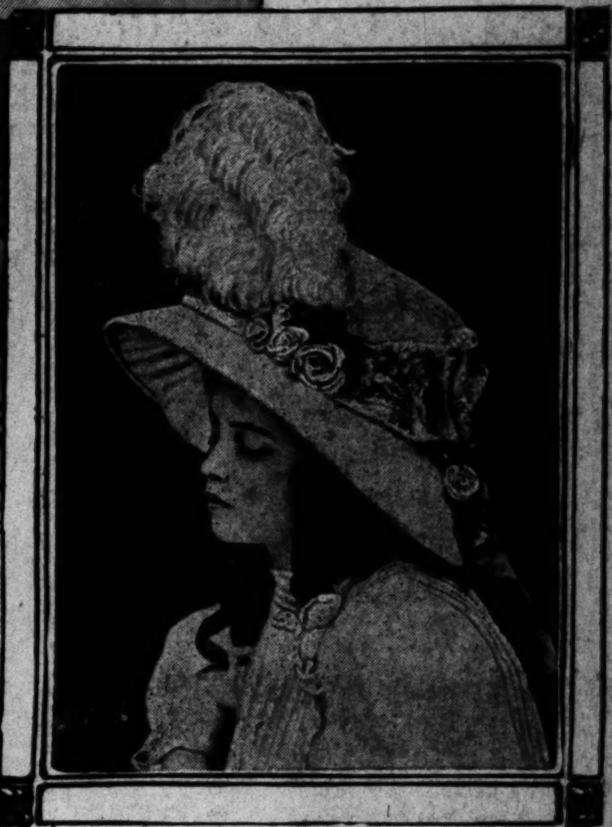
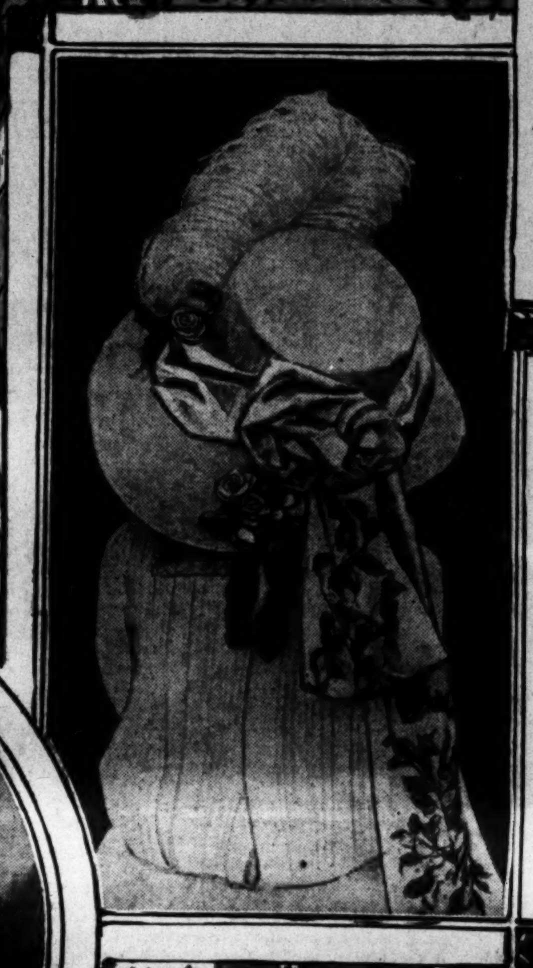
SUMMER HATS for LITTLE GIRLS



Simple Straw Hat with Sage Green Velvet and Forget-Me-Nots.





Back and Front of White Straw Hat Trimmed with Pompadour Ribbon, Dainty Pink Roses and a White Ostrich Plume.

SPRING bonnets are no more important in the eyes of older women than in the eyes of little girls. In most cases it is easier to select a woman's hat than a hat for the child, for the latter must not only be becoming, but in the best of taste, and must possess the stamp of simple loveliness. From year to year the shapes of these hats do not show any very distinct change, for the wide sundown or the becoming bonnet are the two favorites, and on these foundations the rest of the designs are made.

One of the most attractive hats for a little girl to wear is of natural-colored straw, stiffened by a wire under the edge of the rim covered with sage-green velvet, and with a band of the velvet around the crown, caught at intervals with dainty wreaths of forget-me-nots. The green of the velvet, the stems of the forget-me-nots, the clear blue of the petals, all combine to make a pretty combination, and one which is at the same time artistic and childish.

One of the novelties of the season, and a practical one, is a hat of Scotch gingham with a brim lined with straw. The hat in the picture is of violet and white plaid, the squares very small and very dainty. The brim is lined with a natural-colored straw braid, pliable and soft, and the trimming is merely a bit of black velvet loosely arranged around the crown and tied in a big bow on the left side.

A hat of fine straw in the natural color is trimmed in a very conventional way with white lilies, which extend over the brim, and gaily colored cherries, which encircle the crown. Flowers and fruit belong to summer months and are not overdressy for children's wear.

A white linen hat, always so youthful, is trimmed with motifs of Irish lace. This relieves the extreme plainness of the white linen brim and extends upward over part of the black velvet, which is tied round the crown into a bow on the left side. The under part of this hat is of plain white linen, and wherever the linen is joined there is a piping.

A hat for Sunday-go-to-meeting occasions, and which would not do for playtime hours, is of fancy white straw, lined with shirred radium and trimmed artistically with pompadour ribbon tied in a bow, and with a loop and an end hanging down the back. Here and there on the brim is a little bunch of tiny pink rosebuds, and one of these holds in place a large and graceful plume, which extends from the left side across the front of the hat. The shape of the brim is on the mushroom order, and, indeed, it is not unlike the empire bonnet which is foretold by many for the coming season.

When the little girl wears her dainty white dress she must also wear a hat which harmonizes with the fluffiness of the lace trimming, so the hat of Tuscan straw is shown. This is lined with many ruffles of valenciennes lace, edged with a touch of pink and trimmed with a soft pink ribbon and a little group of daisies on the right side.

Just such a bonnet would be worn when the little maiden trips forth for an afternoon stroll with mother and father, or when she sets out to grace a party given by a summer friend.

Spring Vegetables

Fresh Vegetables that Purify the Blood.

"Spinach to Improve the Complexion."

Paring the Raw Tomato.

Young Onions Are Boiled in Two Waters.

Scrape the Stalks of Pie Plant.

T IS a strong argument in favor of the theory of the "survival of the fittest" in each generation that such a respectable percentage of our an- tors lived to a reasonably old age, en one reflects upon what they ate. ue, recent publications embodying the ults of the latest reports of scientific n convey the gratifying fact that we ve, as a race, gained nearly ten years on what was the average of human seventy-five years ago. The gain, are told, is largely due to improved dical and surgical methods, but yet re to sanitary conditions unknown to grandsires and to intelligent observ- ce of dietetic laws.

he fact remains that those hale old rbears lived, labored and died in a od old age (some of them) in circum- nces we now consider as well-nigh al to mortal creatures. They slept feather beds in chambers the win- ws of which were sealed up early in winter by tacking list or pasting pa- along the edges of the sashes and reopened until the first of May. ey ate salt pork and buckwheat cakes six months of the year; and from vember 1 to the middle of May sub- ted upon what we now term "coarse getables," to wit: Potatoes, cabbages, ions, turnips and, when they could get em, beets. Even these gave out for e most part before the winter was er, and what remained was rank, hy and stale generally.

LONGEVITY

With all these odds against them, one anddame of my own is set down in e family genealogy as having died at years of age, and for ten succeeding nerations her descendants had an erage age of 75 years. In each gener- ion one-fourth of them lived to be er 80.

Early hours, quiet lives and an undance of fresh air they could not wholly exclude from their sleeping and living rooms had much to do with the longevity of the sturdy pioneers. Still, we marvel how they did it!

What has all this to do with "spring vegetables"? Much, every way. Chiefly because it is undoubtedly true that we owe the increased length of days and our better preservation into the prolonged period to the conditions I enumerated in the earlier sentences of our "talk." Cereals and fruits as breakfast foods were unknown in those olden days, and the green vegetables that never leave our markets and tables from year's end to year's end were eaten by our forefathers in the short season that allowed them to grow in badly tended country gardens. With the first frost they vanished and were no more until the next summer.

GREEN THINGS

I recollect well when celery was a rare delicacy even on the tables of well-to-do people. Now it is a daily visitor to the dinner tables of all who wish to have it. It should have a prominent place in our springtime menu. As a nervine it is of high value upon the dietary of those who have made nature's "simples" a study. Women—also children—who have grown "unaccountably" (?) cross and sleepless after the winter's double term of schooling should be encouraged to eat freely of celery. A tea made of the roots and outer leaves, and sweetened to taste, will act gratefully upon those troubled with insomnia. Celery is likewise beneficial to sufferers from nervous dyspepsia, gout and rheumatism.

Every bit of the bunch for which you pay 25 cents may be utilised. The heart-stalks are laid in ice water until served as an accompaniment—which is also a corrective—of meat. The outer and coarser parts are stewed or fried. They are good in either way. The tea I spoke of may be brewed from the roots and leaves.

Lettuce has cooling and soporific virtues. Seasoned as a salad and eaten with brown bread and butter, it acts directly upon the blood heated by "spring fever," and when dipped into mayonnaise and laid between thin slices of buttered brown or white bread forms a delicious and wholesome sandwich.

The coarser outer leaves may go into the composition of the delicate and toothsome cream of lettuce soup that should be better known to our average housemother. "We" utilise the inferior qualities of lettuce by cooking them as we would spinach. This makes a popular and seasonable variety in spring dinners.

Spinach takes rank with dietitians among the most valuable of our esculents. It is a gentle purgative to the blood, clearing out the febrile deposits of the winter's sluggishness and introducing new and vital elements. It improves the complexion, I remark incidentally, and containing, as it does, iron and salts of potassium, stimulates the jaded appetite. It is prepared for the table by boiling in a double kettle, adding no water except that which clings to the leaves after washing. When tender it is drained of the juices that would make it too watery, chopped fine and seasoned with butter, pepper and salt, a good teaspoonful of sugar, a dash of nutmeg, and at the last with a few spoonfuls of cream beaten well into the mass.

A MEDICINE

Rhubarb, alias pie plant, is a good second to spinach in the work of making over the system for the coming season by ridding it of the accretions and secretions of the winter that clog blood and brain like the stagnant residuum of a freshet that has converted the banks and meadows of the stream into breeding places of miasma. Scrape the stalks of the plant; cut into short lengths and put over the fire in a double boiler, with no water in the inner vessel. As with spinach, the generous juices of the stalks will supply all the needed moisture. Do not sweeten until it has boiled tender. Take, then, from the fire, add plenty of sugar while the rhubarb is hot, and set aside to cool. To cook the sugar in the vegetable is to convert it into a preserve, injuring the flavor and lessening the beneficial effect of the fresh esculent. The specific action of rhubarb is upon the blood and kidneys. It is highly recommended to persons suffering from an excess of uric acid in the system.

"A NEW BROOM"

Young onions are many degrees higher in the social scale of the vegetable tribe than the full-grown, highly flavored elder of the same name. We have them gathered from our country cold frames as soon as they are as large as the end of a man's thumb. As dear Charles Lamb says of his suckling pig on the spit: "He is a weakling; he is a flower." The baby onion should be handled as tenderly. Boil it in two waters, drain, butter and smother affectionately with a cream sauce. Elsewhere I have written: "For bilious complexions, influenza, insomnia and muddy complexions the value of the onion as a steady diet can hardly be overrated."

Asparagus is another fine standby these early spring days, being a gentle sudorific; hence an accessory in the business of improving the skin and inciting the escape of bilious and feverish humors.

Tomatoes, cooked and raw, should, in the advance of dietetic knowledge, have driven the old-fashioned and always dangerous mineral drug out of the field of domestic practice. The fruit-vegetable contains a vegetable calomel that does the work of the drug, with none of the risks attendant upon the use of the older blood and stomach purifier which practitioners of the ancient school of healing leaned upon with all the weight gathered from tradition and faith. My memory runs back to the time when "a course of calomel" was part of the spring cleansing. Sometimes it was regarded as especially beneficial if succeeded by "salivation." That diabolical result is, happily, unknown to this age. It involved a sore mouth, excess of saliva and, oftener than not, loosening of sound teeth. And this was healing!

Let us reckon among our causes for thanksgiving in the blessed, budding, bountiful springtime that we take our course of calomel in the guise of luscious red tomatoes, spicy pie plant, young onions that melt in the mouth, juicy asparagus and spinach—"the broom" that maketh clean the human system and without friction.

A Kitchen Help

PANHOLDERS can be made of two or even three thicknesses of blue and white ticking cut ten inches square and sewed together on the sewing machine. The woman who cares for her hands—their appearance and their comfort—can make no kitchen help that will be a greater convenience. As lifters they prove the greatest saving to the tea towels. They should not be made singly, but in pairs or sixes, and should be regularly tossed into the weekly wash.

THE HOUSEMOTHERS' EXCHANGE

KEEPING—as it is my duty and privilege to do—my finger upon the pulse of the body constituential, cannot ignore the fact that nothing irs it to more feverish flurry than the rvant question, lately agitated in the xchange. I have put aside a dozen or ore communications on the topic as ing too sweeping in denunciation of e side or the other, hence uncharitable spirit. These selected as representa- ve articles for the symposium of to- ay are comparatively free from this ult. If they express the sentiments a respectable minority of readers in- rested in this subject, I have no right withhold them.

No. 1.

At 19 I had to earn my own living. I ecured a position in a German-American amily. The mistress could not speak a ord of English when she came to America, nd had been a house servant in Germany. eing fortunate enough to marry an am- itious and clever man, they succeeded, fter years of poverty and labor, in estab- ishing themselves well in the community n which they lived, furnishing a hand- ome house and having every comfort and uxury they desired.

The wife had aristocratic (!) aspirations. he was unable, physically, to perform any art of the housework, yet was very par- ticular as to the manner in which it was one. I worked for the magnificent sum of $2 per week, and felt like an outcast, having no home to which I could go when I chanced to have an afternoon out, and unwelcome in the family where I lived, especially when they had company. It is the terrible loneliness and the social stigma which every girl "in service" is made to feel that make them shrink from housework. I am sure that many young women, [illegible], as I was, alone in the world, would greatly prefer to work in a nice family to a [illegible] of office, if she were treated as a flesh-and-blood creature instead of an automatic machine. Wages are higher now than then, but they are still smaller than one could earn in another position.

My youngest sister has had eight years' experience in sanitarium work, and is considered a first-class attendant. Yet she is

Before I went into service I was very popular among the young people in the little town in which I lived. It was impossible not to see the change in their attitude after it was known that I "worked out."

M. A. C. (Illinois).

For reasons that will be apparent to every reader, I withhold the names of the various towns in which our correspondents have their present residences, giving merely those of the states from which they write.

One comment upon the letter we have just read may not be amiss here: The most arrant of snobs is the woman who, as Byron satirizes a pretender to fashion of his time, is promoted "to eat from the dish she late has washed." Such parvenus have no appreciation of the dignity of labor, and when they have, as they think, climbed the social ladder, are the first to kick away the steps by which another might mount. The underbred vulgarian, who was her housemaid's inferior in all except wealth, belonged to what must always be a large class in a country where fortunes are made (and lost) in a day. They are beneath the contempt of really sensible and refined thinkers and doers.

No. 2.

I had to laugh in reading the letters anent "The Vexed Question." I should wonder where you live had I not seen a picture of your home in the paper some time ago.

Yes! We are overrun with snobs and would-be despots. It amused me to read that a servant, if defrauded, "would take the law of her employers." The law is only for the rich. Influence, money—everything—protect the rich thief.

One man I know says it cost him $60 to get $20 that a man owed him, adding: "He was so insolent that if it had cost me $90 I would have had it!"

You can see, now, why Bridget and Thekla do not get the wages due them from their mistresses. You cite the cases of your own and your daughters' dealings with employes. I may add that of my mother and myself. These are only a drop in the bucket—four sensible, just women among millions of silly, unjust housekeepers.

spectable girls work for them. It is not safe for girls to have to live with those who eat—and drink—too much. You know a woman recently visited our country who told how surprised she was to see so many so-called "ladies" leave their tables intoxicated. For such creatures to order a decent girl about and call her "a servant" is a shame, and we mothers ought not to submit to it.

N. McC. H. (Pennsylvania).

Our respected correspondent, without doubt, tells what she has seen and heard for herself. If one-tenth of what she says be true, her indignation is righteous and her warmth of speech justifiable. I do not dispute her contention that there are women in a certain stratum of so-called "society" who drink and who defraud their domestics. I could append to her story tales of women gamblers in "high life," who lose and win hundreds of dollars per week at the "bridge" they adore above any other earthly occupation or delight.

I submit, on the other hand, that these no more represent the mighty body of American housemothers than the stock gambler and embezzler represent the typical American working man who earns an honest living by the labor of head and hands.

For forty years the best interests of the housemothers of our country have been more to me than any other mortal concerns outside of the claims of my own immediate family. I speak with gratitude and without vanity when I say that I believe I know them better than any other living woman. Hundreds of thousands of letters and thousands of personal interviews have put me into intimate communion with them, and I put here upon record my firm and devoutly honest conviction that they are more than worthy of the love I bear them—my sisters—and the work I am doing for them.

Knowing this—and feeling it with an intensity I cannot put into words—I guard my constituents from the sweeping censure of one whose experience has made her acquainted with the darker side of the picture.

The members of our Exchange are not snobs, nor yet thieves and drunkards. And I am writing for them! The tippling, gaming, heartless votary of wealth and fashion never reads this Corner.

What our correspondent asserts of the expense of going to law is entirely true. I have had sufficient experience along those lines to qualify me to indorse every word of it. For instance, once upon a time I allowed myself to be swindled out of $12,000 rather than go to law with a man, who coolly informed me that he had $1,000,000 to spend upon the suit should I open proceedings, reminding me that the case would be carried before the most corrupt judge then on the bench.

Against this enormity I set the fact that there is in New York city, and I doubt not in every large city, what is known in New York as "The Legal Aid Society," that will get Bridget-Thekla-Dinah's wages for her free of cost. It is done many times each year, and maids and men whose hire is held back from them by fraud and spite have no doubt where to apply for redress.

No. 3.

Nothing makes me so furious as to hear that domestic service is unpopular with working girls because they lack comfort.

Let "A. J." come to western New York, and she will find light, warm bedrooms provided for maids; wages double those of factory hands, estimating her board only at the cost of the raw materials; afternoons out when factory girls are at work; food more appetizing than she would have elsewhere, and every consideration shown for her pleasure in churchgoing and evening entertainments. Even a telephone and a reception room for her use are frequently provided. Moreover, a family numbering more than five (or as many) is extremely rare, and she will have but one day in a week when there is work to be done between the hours of 3 and 5 P. M., unless the doorbell should ring.

As to the garb of the housemaid being unbecoming, any girl who has noticed a magnificent policeman or a soldier, or a dainty nurse—both in and out of uniform—should realize that her uniform also enhances her personal charms to a high degree. Even the doorbell will trouble her little if her mistress has a day "at home."

Her wages are not "cut" when the work is lighter for a day or a week at a time. She should take this into consideration when she has an hour or two of extra work to do.

According to my observation, servants are so petted and deferred to that there will be but little freedom for the mistresses until our family needs are satisfied in a way that will reduce to honest terms the personal relations. Some factory methods of housework will have to be devised to free us from exacting maids.

M. P. H. (New York.)

A northern, a middle western and a middle eastern state having been heard from, I cannot close this symposium without letting into the arena a combatant from the far West. Our California contingent is never "backward in coming forward."

No. 4.

I have had four years of experience as a housemaid—to my sorrow—and finally had to "give it up."

In all that time I knew but three women who treated their servants as Christians should. "A day off" usually meant three or four hours in the afternoon, just long enough to do a little shopping or to call on a friend. Their pay is withheld—whole or in part—just as the mistress sees fit. And what can a friendless girl do? She knows it would not be worth while going to law for a small amount. Besides, they are too busy looking for another place to work in before the last dollar is gone.

There are hundreds of women in this city who are not able to keep servants—but they will have "girls," whether they pay them or not. This is especially true among the "middle class." That is what drives girls into shops and factories, and even laundries. It stands to reason that a respectable and homeless girl would prefer to work in a nice Christian family to entering the lonesome life, full of temptations, that one finds in other lines of life. Most girls take to the latter as a last resort.

MARY ANNE (California).

A well-written letter from Ohio, still lies on my desk, marked "SYMPOSIUM." It is withheld by want of space. I shall hope for opportunity to slip it in at some future day. It is good reading, and the writer—"C. R."—has a hold already upon our regard and confidence.

For the reason given above—lack of space—I reserve the summing-up of what has been aptly called "The Vexed Question," for another time. It is big with interest for us all. I might say "with portent," as well, since upon it depends so much of domestic peace that it is a family affair more than a social.

Making "Kratzeda"

I should have written sooner about that "Kratzeda," but my husband could not give me explicit directions.

It is a dish made in southern Germany, and as my parents came from northern Germany, I have never seen it. Southern Germany is the land of the "Knoedel." My husband and another man tell me it is the leavings, or the scrapings, of the kettle left behind after they make "Gries Knoedel." "Griesmehl" is farina. "Kratzen" means to scrape or to scratch. The south Germans are great on abbreviations.

We have some south German friends in Kenosha, Wis. I have written to one of them, and if she sends me any recipes or directions that may help you, I will write again.

Now as to those dumplings!

Boil farina in milk or in water so stiff that when one takes up a spoonful, it will keep its shape. Lay the dumplings on a hot platter; brown some onions in butter; pour these over the dumplings and over all hot milk.

What is left in the kettle is scraped out, mixed with eggs in some way, and fried. That is "Kratzeda."

AUGUSTA S. (Waukesha, Wis.)

You have favored us with a lively and interesting letter. We await with impatient curiosity the reports from the south German friend. For, despite the assistance of your John and "other men," we are still in the fog as regards "Kratzeda." Let us near from you again.

Br'er Possum a Captive

THE roadway employes of the Philadelphia Subway and Elevated Railroad have a unique pet that came into their possession recently—a fat opossum, an animal sufficiently rare in that part of the country. He was captured in the subway, and is on exhibition at the roadway office at the eastern end of the Market street bridge.

A trackwalker, patrolling his section in the early morning, saw it first, scuttling along the track beneath the deadly third rail. He rubbed his eyes and looked again, for there was something familiar about the little gray animal that paused, blinking in the glare of his reflector lamp; something that conjured up memories of nocturnal rambles through southern woods and swamps, with an accompaniment of baying "houn' dawgs," shouting hunters and the smell of the smoking, flaring pitch-pine torches, revealing the possum high up in the gum tree.

BR'ER POSSUM

A sudden grab settled the question of "Br'er Possum's" reality, and with visions of a savory roast, with sweet 'taters and plenty of gravy in the pan, his captor bore him off to imprisonment in an empty nail keg. But fate had a kindlier destiny in store for the possum. The news of the find reached headquarters, and there came a demand to "bring that possum in mighty quick."

So, in his nail-keg prison the little animal was conveyed to the division office. A cage was hastily constructed, and "Ole Br'er Possum" was placed therein until more commodious quarters could be arranged. At first he showed a nasty desire to bite any one who ventured near, curling back his lips and revealing a very capable set of teeth. But daily association with human beings and kind treatment seemingly have tamed his wild spirit, and all day long he sleeps in his big, new cage under the "L." Trains rattle and roar above him, but he gives them no attention whatever. His sleeping quarters are a section of hollow log filled with straw. So tame, in fact, has he grown that he makes no objection to being picked up and handled.

Sometimes he is brought into the office, and, perched up on a desk, he pokes his sharp, inquisitive nose about to discover what is going on, for his eyes, keen enough at night, are of little use in the daylight.

Tiring of exploring the desks, he climbs down, using his long, flexible tail like a drag anchor, and crawling into a waste basket he will curl up and contentedly go to sleep.

Captured at the time that President (then President-elect) Taft had immortalised the possum tribe, it was deemed quite apropos to name him Billy. Tame though he is, Billy has not altogether conquered his timorous instinct. He is, when awake, easily startled by any sudden movement, and the tearing of a piece of paper seems particularly to irritate him.

Unlike the traditional possum, however, he does not lie down when frightened, and feign death. On the contrary, he shows a disposition to fight that is sufficient to keep strangers at a distance.

Billy is, apparently, full-grown, weighs about ten pounds, and is of the black-leg species—that is, while his coat is grayish black, with a sulphur-colored spot on the breast, his stumpy legs are covered with short, coal-black hair. His feet, particularly the hind ones, resemble a human hand. The toes are extremely flexible, devoid of hairy covering, and, excepting the fifth toe, which seems to answer the purpose of a thumb, are tipped with short, strong nails.

How he ever got into the subway, or where he came from, will probably always remain as great a mystery as will the problem of how he escaped death from the third rail or under the wheels of a train. For Billy cannot tell and no one else knows.

Cruise of the "Mousetrap"

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS.

THREE boys and a dog start upon their travels in a spring wagon over the top of which hoops covered with canvas have been fastened. This "prairie schooner" is named the "Mousetrap," and its "cruise" is described by the boy who keeps the "log."

All goes well until a creek is reached, and Pete undertakes to go boating in an old scow. The craft founders, so that Pete and Pretty, the dog, have to swim for land. While Pete is endeavoring to revenge himself upon his comrades for their laughter at his expense, the owner of the scow appears. He is somewhat mollified, but orders the adventurers off the premises.

Further on, they endeavor to steal apples, and are treed by a savage bulldog. Billy manages to slip away to the wagon. He comes back with a rope and lassoes the bulldog, permitting his comrades to escape. They drive away, at last coming to a steam thresher.

"THAT thresher looks lonely," says Billy, when he notices that the men who run it and the farmers weren't near.

Knowin' that Billy is, 'mong other things, of meddlesome disposition, I puts in, properly sharp:

"You'd better be a-mindin' of your own business an' not to go foolin' with that there thing."

"Oh, shucks an' tiny tadpoles!" growls Billy. "Ain't I seen Uncle Jim run a engine enough to know all 'bout it myself? Look here, ol' fraidy-cat; I kin run this engine an' I'm a-goin' to do it." Sayin' which, he climbs up in the cab, after tying Pretty on behind for company.

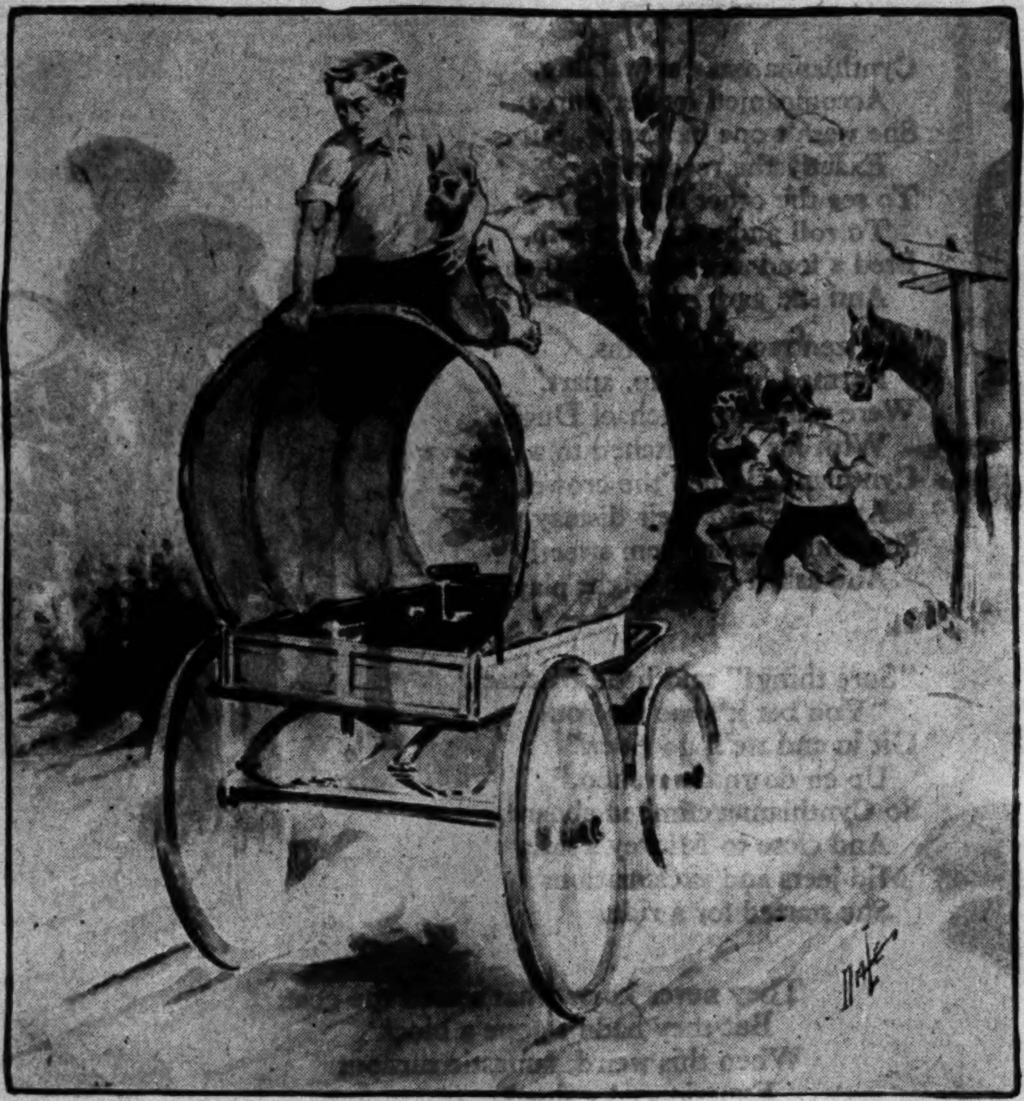
"Go ahead and get yourself into trouble, but don't come to us for to get you out," I 'sponds, pretendin' to fergit about Billy an' to be int'rested in the road beyond. Then I cracked Zeke with the whip right smart, so's the Mousetrap with me 'n' Pete inside was soon out o' Billy's sight.

But we hadn't passed very many fence posts 'fore we hears an orful snortin' and toot-toot-tootin' back where Billy was.

"I'll bet he's monkeyin' with the whistle an'll soon be gettin' the dickens," says Pete confidential-like to me.

Sure enough, after a while there comes a patterin' of feet behind and 'round a bend o' the road hikes Billy, lookin' desp'rate.

"Hide me, fellers! Hide me!" yells he, between a grunt an' a wheeze, what with the dust in 'is throat and not wantin' to make too much noise. We'd no sooner plunked Billy in the Mousetrap and piled on 'im some canned peas and some jars o' peach marmalade that leaked into 'is hair than a crowd o' farmers, madder'n wetted hens, flocked up.



"HE DIDN'T THINK TO WEDGE THE WHEELS, AN' WITH MUCH SUDDINTNESS IT WENT DOWNHILL."

"Have you saw a feller that's been makin' mischief with our engine?" shouts one.

"Yes," says Pete, while the heap o' canned peas an' marmalade jars shivered. "Yes, there was a feller what's name Billy Mumford, and we saw him in your engine, but we don't know where he went."

"No, we don't know where he skipped," I adds to 'courage Bill. "But if we should happen to see him, we'll tell yuh mighty quick," I promises, "'cause he's a low-down, mean feller that we'd like to get a punch at ourselves." There was a gurglin' from underneath where the marmalade jars was leakin', but whether it was on 'count o' my truthful sayin's or the jam in Bill's hair I can't mention.

Them farmers left after lookin' at us as though they didn't much believe us. Afterwards Billy untangled hisself from the peas and jam. Then, what do yuh think?—if he didn't want to fight us, 'spite o' what we did to get 'im out o' trouble!

"A low-down, mean feller am I!" squalls he, wavin' his arms an' gazin' wild. "I'll show yuh!"

We might 'a' had to squelch him then an' there—Pete an' me—if some piercin' yelps hadn't come from the distance.

"Gosh, I clean fergot to untie Pretty from the engine!" gasps Billy. "An' now I'll bet a all-day sucker taffy that them farmers are abusin' him."

Howsomever, the yelps kept a-comin' nearer and nearer, until pretty soon Pretty careered 'round the bend, a-makin' fierce tracks for us an' pertection.

Billy, disremememberin' his pity of a second before, grunts:

"Those farmers 'll know that the dog belongs to us if he comes on 'ere."

So he licks Zeke, which made the horse go fast as he could. Pretty couldn't catch up, but followed a-howlin' for more'n two miles, about which time we decided to let him crawl in the wagon, thinkin' that the farmers wouldn't nab us now.

Zeke was 'most played out with the hard run. We unhitched him on top of a hill, while Pete pushed the wagon underneath a apple tree. Then he climbed up, with Pretty, a-sayin' that he'd show us fellers the best an' easiest way to pick apples without workin'. But he didn't think to wedge the wagon wheels, an' with much of suddintness the Mousetrap started rollin' downhill with Pete 'n' Pretty still on top and me 'n' Billy a-runnin' after.

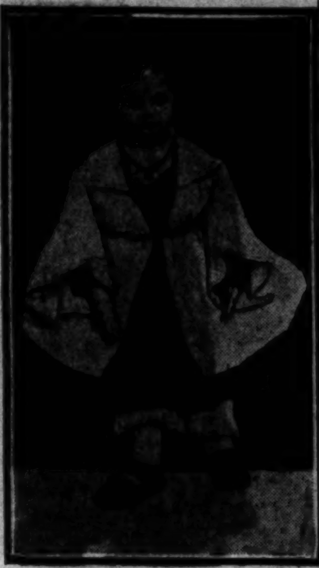
A Shipwrecked Doll

ON A beautiful May morning, seventy years ago, a tiny, dark-haired girl first opened her brown eyes. "Oh, baby, how delighted father will be!" were the first words her mother spoke when she beheld her little daughter. "You have his eyes and his hair and his loving smile."

The captain's baby grew as the months passed. Every morning when her mother came to dress her she would say, "Perhaps your father's ship will come today." When the day passed and no ship sailed in, the mother, as she sang baby to sleep, would say hopefully, "Tomorrow may be the day when father first rests eyes on his little daughter."

Early in November came one of the worst storms that ever visited the New England coast. For three days and nights the northeast wind blew a terrific gale. Blinding snow, sleet and hail fell during most of the time, and it was so cold that everything froze as soon as it struck the vessels.



"A LARGE, BEAUTIFUL DOLL"

On the fourth morning the clouds broke and the sun shone out clear and bright. For miles the shore was covered with wreckage, broken timbers, spars and portions of the cargoes of vessels.

Among this the fishermen found a great sea chest, and on one end were the in'tials of the baby's father. When they opened it, there, at the very top lay a beautiful doll, almost as large as baby herself. Even though she was drenched with sea water her rosy face smiled at the baby when she was lifted out and put into her arms. Pinned to the front of her dress they found a slip of paper on which they could with difficulty read the words: "For my daughter Polly."

They thought that the captain, when he knew that his ship would probably go to pieces, had hastily written the message, pinned it to the doll and laid her at the top of his chest, hoping that she might reach his little daughter even if he himself could not.

And so, you see, it was, after all, the baby's father who gave her her name, though it was borne to her in so strange a manner. Oh, how the mother longed to hear that dolly speak, to tell them from what far country she came and whose hands had so carefully fashioned her quaint garments, her ruffled pantalettes, her homespun petticoat, her neat dark gown, her snowy pelisse and her green plaid sunbonnet.

But strangest of all was the way in which the captain learned that his little one was a girl and not a boy. No one ever knew how this knowledge came to him in those far, foreign seas, unless it was that the angels whispered it to him in the watches of the night as he stood in the bow of his ship listening for the voices which speak to us out of the still dark.

MARGARET WENTWORTH LEIGHTON

Princess Viola's Whims

CENTURIES ago there lived in Normandy a duke and duchess who had a daughter named Viola. The little girl first opened her eyes in a great castle with towers and battlements and drawbridges outside. From the immense rooms, draped with wonderful tapestries and carpeted with rich carpets, trophies of the wars in the Orient, Viola could look down upon a large courtyard where esquires trotted to and fro the big war-chargers.

As she grew older Viola became more and more wilful. And as her parents permitted her to have her own way and gave her everything she asked for, she grew discontented with ordinary pastimes.

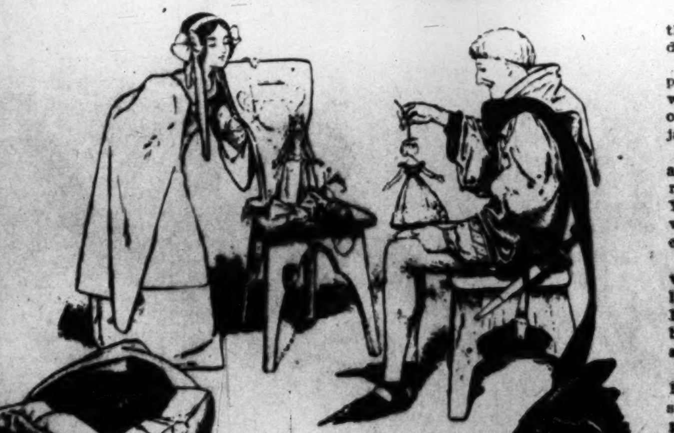
One day the duke found the little girl in tears! Nor would she be comforted.

"She says she wants it to snow and the water to freeze, in order that she may try the skates sent her by the grand duchess of Russia," explained the duchess.

"But, my dear Viola," said the duke, "ice does not come in October."

Viola only sobbed: "I d-d-don't care; I want to try my skates, and I don't want to sit here until December for ice and snow."

The duke was thoughtful. Finally, he turned to the princess and said:



THE DUKE MUST PLAY WITH VIOLA'S MARIONETTES

"Very well; you shall have an opportunity this very day to try your skates."

The little girl's eyes opened in wonder. How could her father bring the ice and snow? Never had he broken his promise, however, and she knew that she would have her wish.

And so she did. For, when she looked through the window a few hours later, she found the courtyard covered with what appeared to be white, glistening snow.

While Viola was enjoying herself, skating over the hard, gleaming surface, the duchess chided her husband, saying:

"You should not have used salt to cover the yard, when our retainers have hardly enough to season their food. Now, for many a day they must eat their soup without salt because of the many sacks you have used to grant Viola's foolish request."

"But you know I can't refuse anything the little girl asks," replied the duke, appealingly.

Nor, indeed, could he. For when the princess asked him that evening to play with her, the dignified nobleman was obliged to kneel and make a jumping-jack dance up and down.

Then it was that a royal visitor was announced. And before the duke could rise there entered the king himself! You see, the king was very friendly with the duke of Normandy, and so had come without warning.

The king had not been in the castle very long before he discovered what a little tyrant of the household Viola was. He departed without saying anything, but several days later there came a summons for Viola to appear at court.

Viola hailed this call with delight. Indeed, she was not as sorry as she should have been at the thought of parting from her parents for a while.

For a time the splendor of the Parisian court dazzled this little girl, who was appointed a lady-in-waiting to the queen. As the months rolled by, however, she began to long for her home in Normandy. Things were much different in Paris, where she was taught to obey instead of give commands.

A chill wintry day in winter, while she was driving through the streets of the city, she chanced to see a woman dressed in the garb of a Norman peasant. Straightway she made the woman be brought to her.

"You are of Normandy, are you not?" eagerly asked the princess.

The woman replied that she was, whereupon the princess asked how the duke and duchess and the people fared.

"The duke and the duchess are well, although they pine for their daughter, who is at court; but we are glad Princess Viola is gone, because now that there are no expensive pranks to be paid for we are more prosperous and better fed," responded the peasant.

Viola lowered her head. Then she took off a magnificent necklace and handed it to the woman.

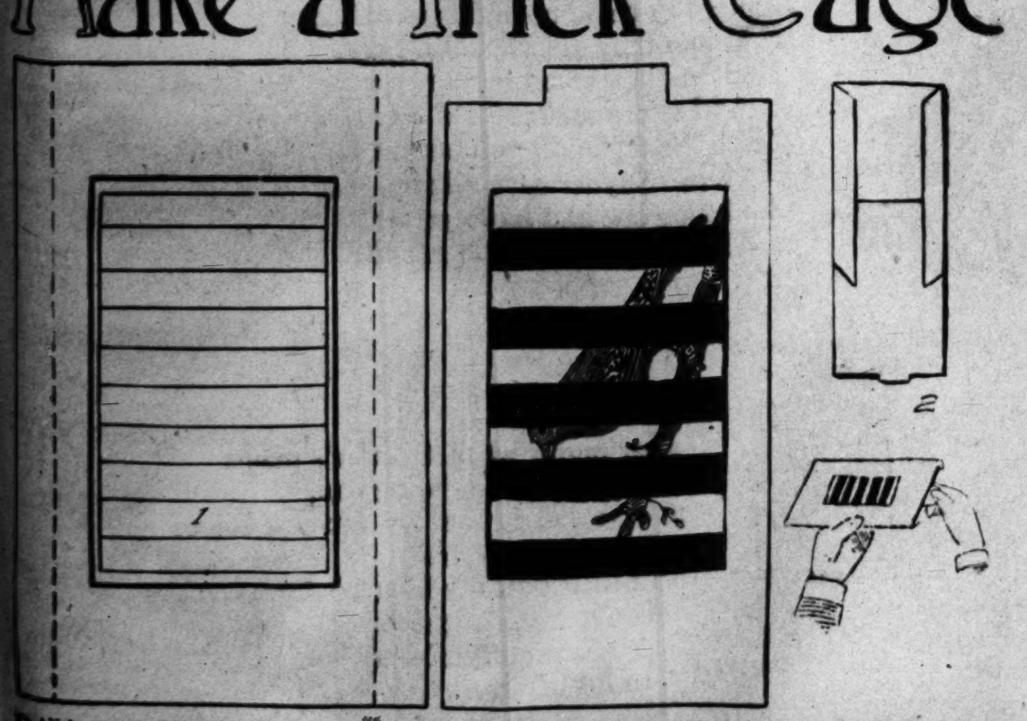
"I have no money with me," said she, "but this you can readily sell."

Upon the following day the peasant was arrested for trying to sell the necklace to the jeweler. Word was brought to Princess Viola, who at once insisted the necklace belonged to the woman. The news of the matter came to the ears of the king and queen. They summoned the princess and finally learned from her of her great desire to return home.

"Methinks the duke and the duchess will find a much changed daughter," murmured the king to himself, as he advised the queen to dismiss Viola for several months.

Indeed, her parents did find Viola greatly changed. No longer was she the madcap of yore. The words of the peasant woman and her experience at court had done wonders for Viola. Thereafter she sought only to bring happiness to her father's people. And she endeared herself to all.

Make a Trick Cage



DAN knew something was the matter as soon as he saw the tear-stained face of his sister.

"What is it, Nan?" he asked, comfortingly.

"The canary has flown," explained Nan, with a little catch in her voice. She loved Dickie very much.

"Canaries usually do escape when the doors are left open," said Dan, reflectively. "Why, even my canary will disappear mysteriously, although I can always make him come back."

"Your canary? I didn't know you had one," said Nan, much surprised.

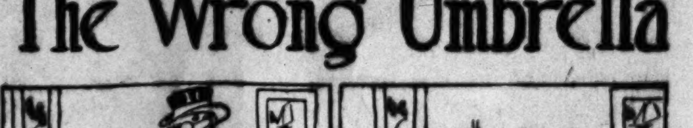
Dan replied, solemnly, "Yes, I have. I'll let you see it if you wish."

He stepped into his workroom, presently returning with a funny little paper cage in which a canary was plainly drawn. Then he waved his handkerchief over the cage, removed the handkerchief, and the cage was empty!

This trick was accomplished so deftly that Nan had no idea of how it was done. So Dan was obliged to draw the diagrams as you see them above, and then direct her to make the apparatus herself.

This Nan did by carefully cutting out Figure 1, clipping away all the white parts from the gray bars and folding along the dotted lines. She then cut out the figure of the bird behind the black bars, sliding it into the spaces reserved for it behind the cage (Figure 2). You will find that the gray bars were exactly in front of the black ones. Dan, under cover of the handkerchief, could remove the slip of paper containing the bird.

The Wrong Umbrella



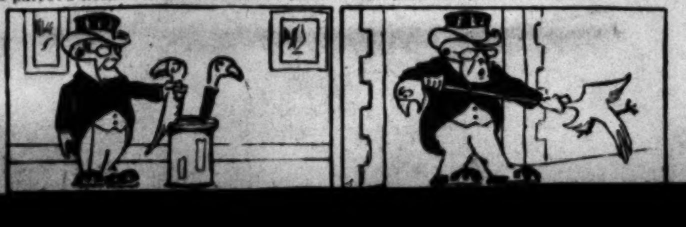
IT WAS Johnny's own fault that Polly came to an untimely end. Not that the boy wished to bring harm to the parrot! Indeed, he was very fond of her. But his love for mischief it was that caused him to play the grievous trick.

Neither was Mr. Brown to blame in the matter. When he called upon Johnny's father, he placed his umbrella in the umbrella stand, without a thought of the accident that was to follow.

Upon bidding his host good-bye, Mr. Brown reached for his umbrella. Now, he was sure that the umbrella possessed a handle carved in the shape of a parrot's head. So, when he saw a parrot's head before him, he naturally reached for it. He did not know that Johnny, remembering that the old gentleman was very near-sighted, had placed Polly in the stand, so that her head stuck out.

Mr. Brown made his way to the door, unheedful of the squawks of the parrot carried in his hand. And then, at the door, he raised the umbrella, as he imagined, with a vigorous jerk. Alas! instead of raising an umbrella, he stretched poor Polly's neck to such a length that the poor bird died. He did this before Johnny could warn him of the mistake.

And now Johnny is overcome with remorse. To think it was through HIM that poor Polly was killed!



Tale of the Tail of the Snake

NOW list to the tale of the tail of the Snake:
The Python himself could tell stories, you know;
His hearers with laughter would quiver and shake—
The grinning old Tiger can prove this is so.

"There's only one fault I can find,"
said the King;
"His tale is amusing, but always too short.
Mr. Snake must a longer tale now to us bring."
King Lion grinned broadly and gave a dry snort.

Then monkeys looked doubtfully
'round for the Snake—
Policemen they were for all Animal Land.
"The King's word is law, and the law we can't break.
To lengthen the tail we must go in a band."

They grasped Mr. Snake—some the tail, some the head—
And the length of a palm tree they stretched the poor thing.
His tale was not longer—the tail was, instead—
Entirely because of a careless old King.

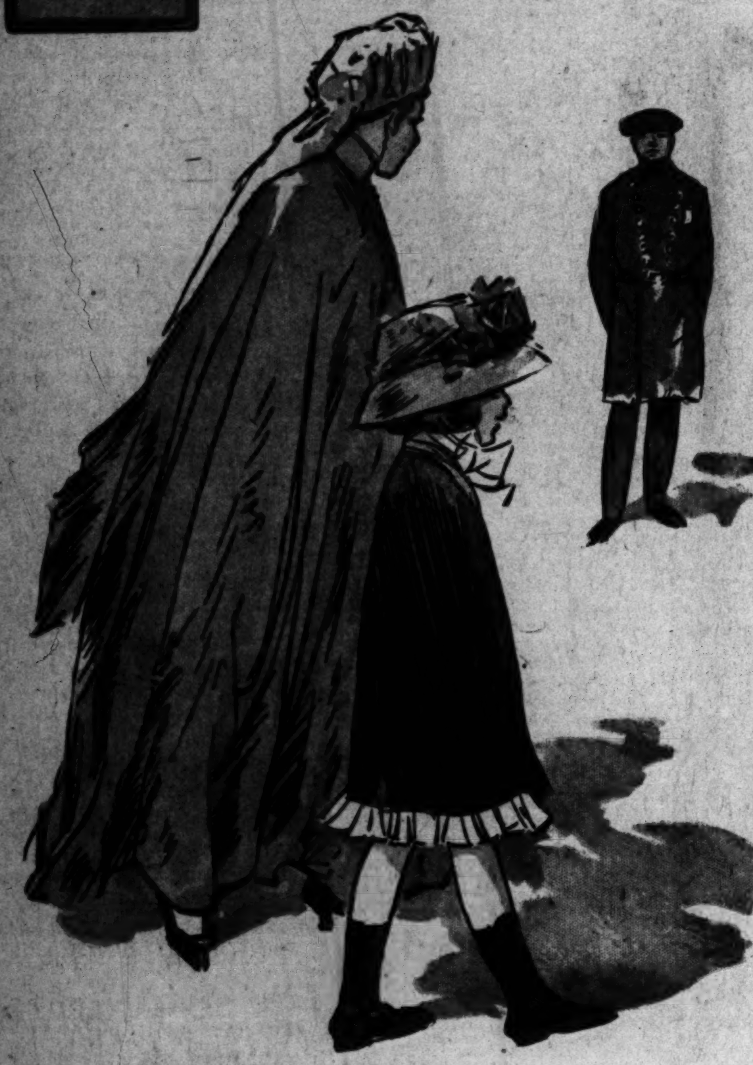
CYNTHIANNA BLYTHE

Drawings by Wallace Morgan—Verses by Harry Grant Dart.

(COPYRIGHT, 1909, BY THE NEW YORK HERALD CO.)
All Rights Reserved.



Cynthianna was out walking,
Accompanied by her nurse;
She wasn't one bit happy, but Exactly the reverse.
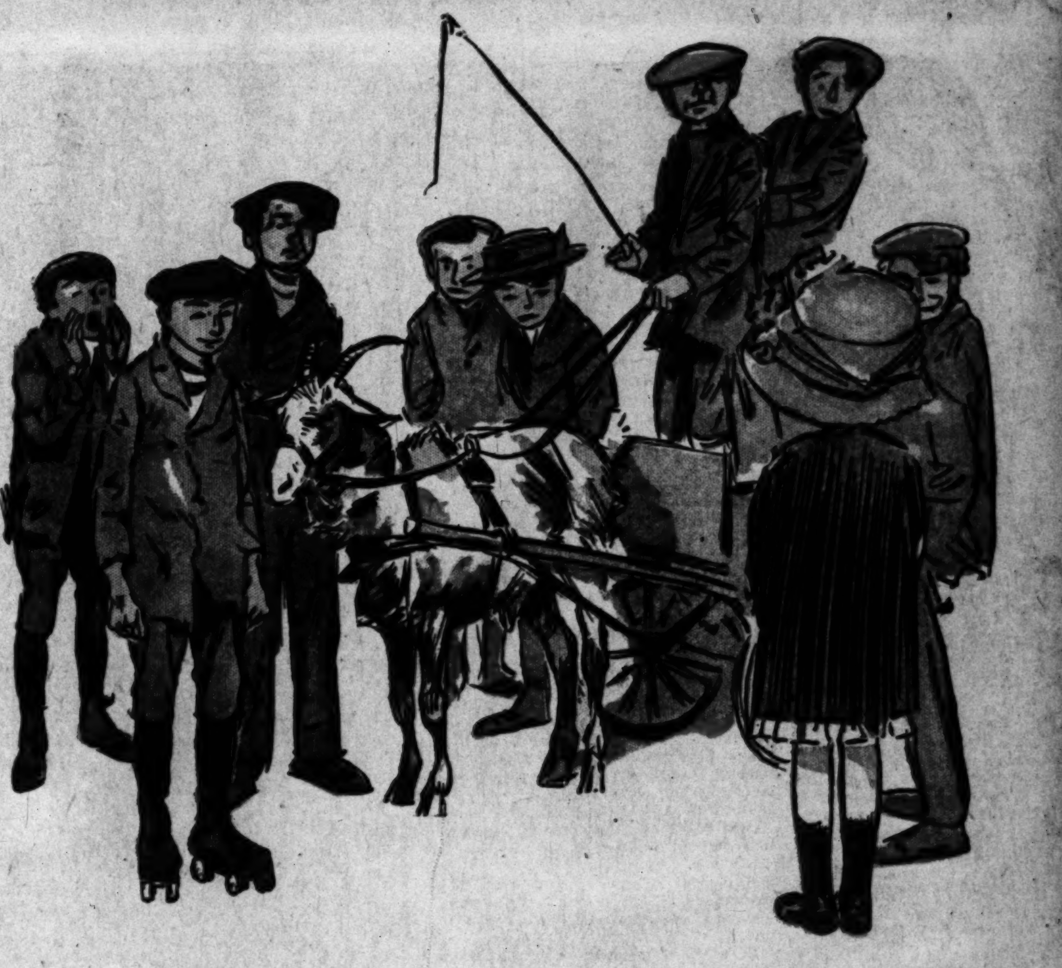
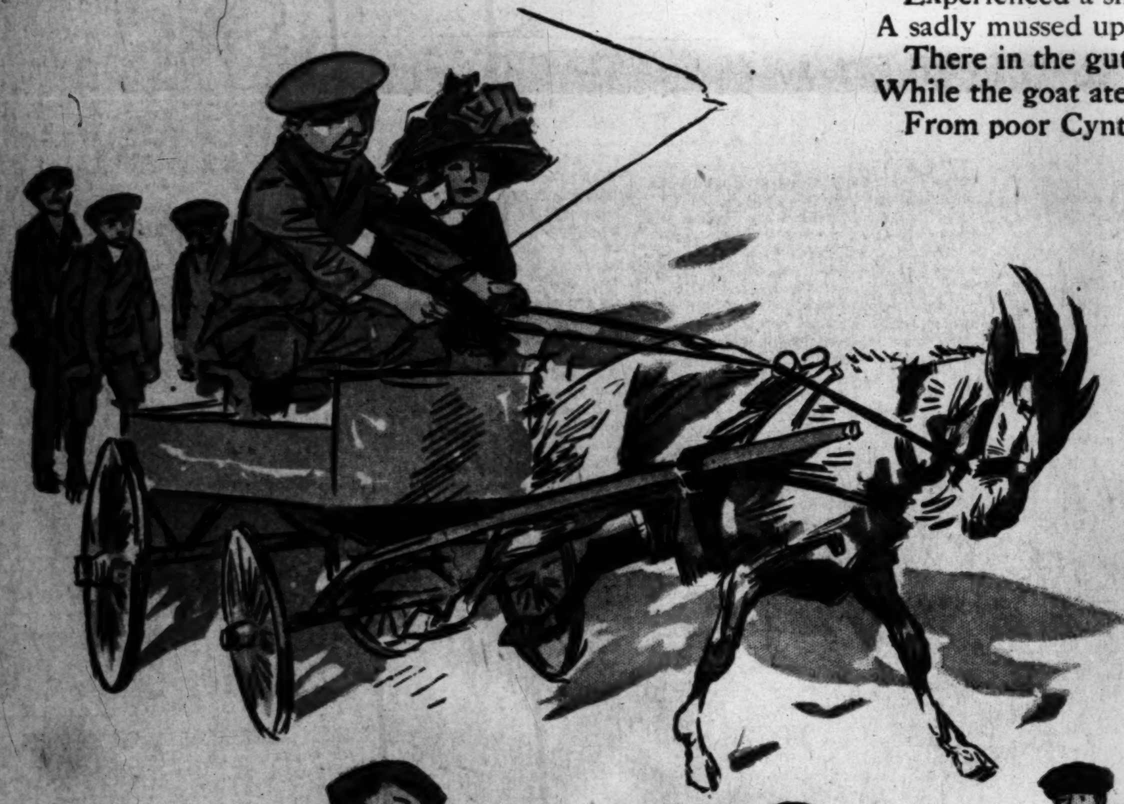
To see the other children free
To roll and romp and skip,
Bred a fond desire to join them,
And she gave her nurse the slip.

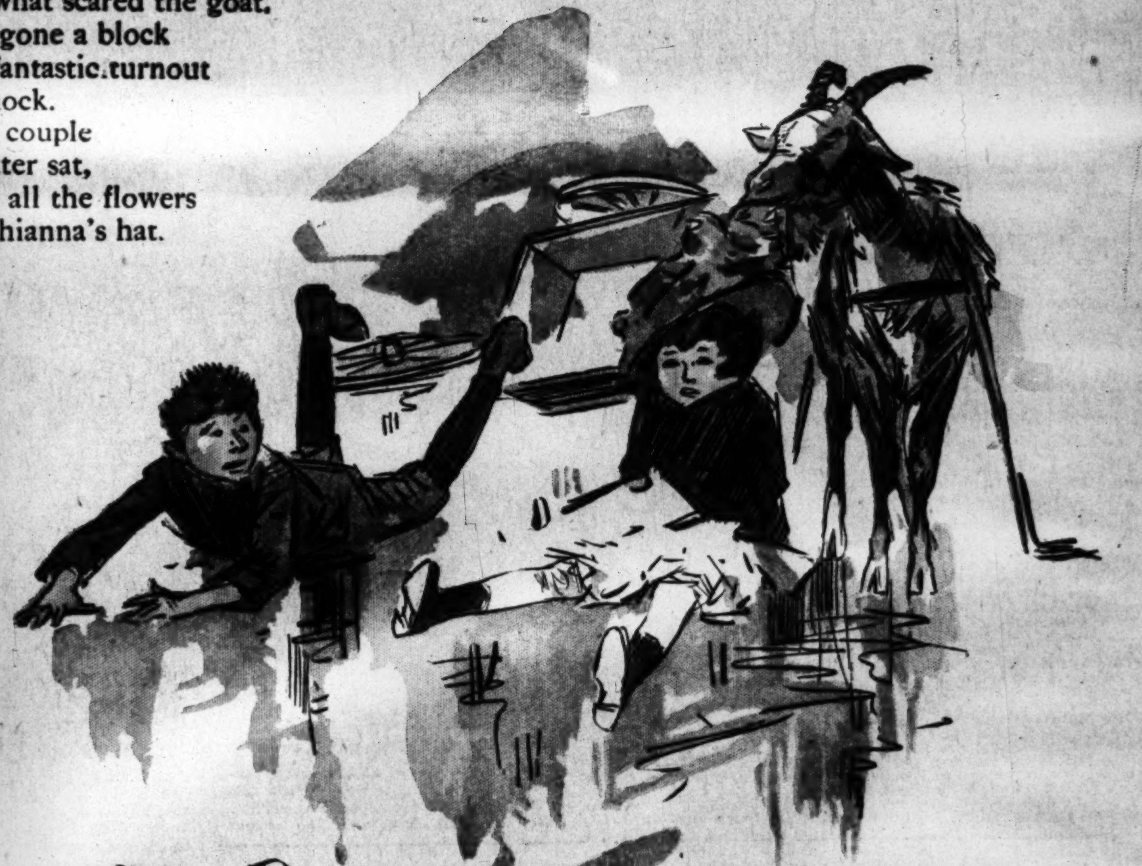
A dozen ragged urchins,
Formed in a group, apart,
Were watching Michael Dugin
With his goat hitched to a cart.
Cynthianna joined the crowd,
And much to their dismay
She smiled upon them sweetly
And asked if she might play.



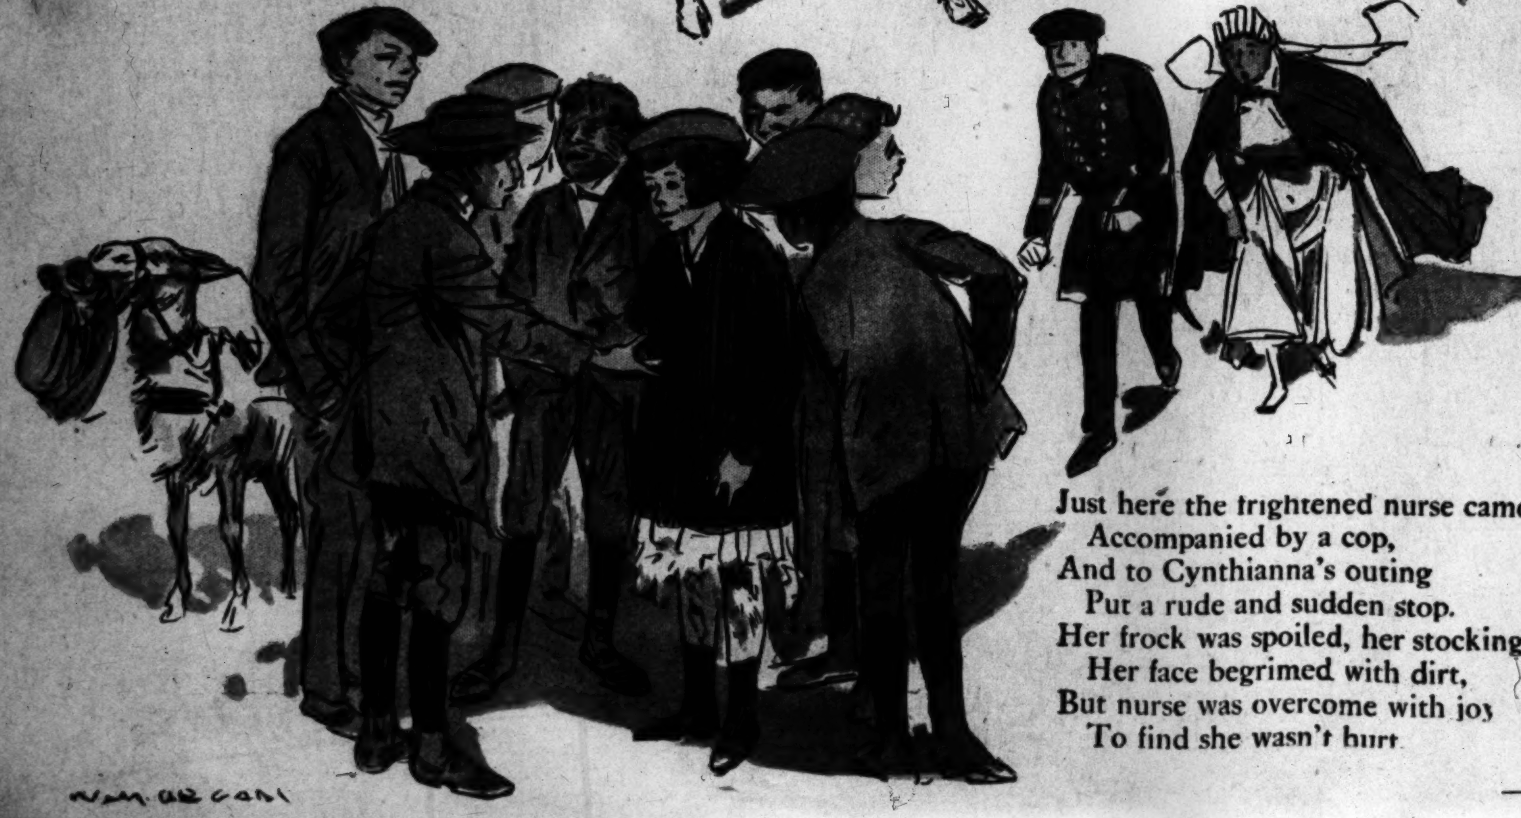
"Sure thing!" said little Michael.
"You bet it's me for you;
Git in and we'll go riden'
Up en down de avenoo."
So Cynthianna climbed aboard,
And close to Mickey's side,
'Mid jeers and exclamations
She started for a ride.

They never knew what scared the goat,
But they hadn't gone a block
When this weird, fantastic turnout
Experienced a shock.
A sadly mussed up couple
There in the gutter sat,
While the goat ate all the flowers
From poor Cynthianna's hat.





The gang came up and brushed her off
When they saw she didn't cry,
And Mickey voted her a trump
And swore for her he'd die.
"Red" Geegan offered her his top,
"Kid" Snyder gave a knife,
And soon she had more presents
Than she'd seen in all her life.



Just here the frightened nurse came up
Accompanied by a cop,
And to Cynthianna's outing
Put a rude and sudden stop.
Her frock was spoiled, her stockings torn,
Her face begrimed with dirt,
But nurse was overcome with joy
To find she wasn't hurt.

That night, when Cynthia's mama
Chided her for being bad,
She vowed it was the greatest lot of Fun she ever had.
And little Mickey Dugan's form
Is wasting, so it seems,
For he's nightly taking Cynthianna driving
In his dreams.

ARE YOU IT?

WHY IS SMART SET?

Tom Masson Says That, Whatever It Is, 'Tis Leading the Way to Freedom and Really Ought to Be Encouraged.

NEW YORK, April 20.—What is a Smart Set?

Have you ever seen or heard one? New York is said to have something the sort concealed about its person, ut opinions differ as to what it is, here it is and who it is.

Years ago Ward McAllister numbered (whatever it is) and named it the ur hundred, a better name than the e that it has at present—that is, if e accept the statement of some peo-le, namely, that it is neither very nart nor very set in its ways.

If you saw a Smart Set coming, what ould you do? Would you caper nimbly meet it, would you go up cordially d shake it by its hand, and be pleas-nt to it, and say that you were glad see it looking so chipper, and you ped everything was going well with , or would you cross over on the other de, look lofty and truly moral and etend that you didn't see it?

Merely pretent, of course. For nat-rally you would see it. Only it ouldn't be worth your while to let it now that you were aware of . And, besides, it wouldn't moral for you to do so. Or, u could stand off, indiscreetly, as pton Sinclair did, and stir it up with stick; that is, you could stir up what u thought was the Smart Set, but u might not know what it was, and you didn't, how could you tell?

That seems to be a little mixed. But, ien, the Smart Set itself is said to be ixed, so there you are.

Perhaps the nearest we can get to the nart Set is to say that we know hat it isn't from our knowing what nclair thinks it is.

But then there is Robert Chambers's ea of it. The Chambers Smart Set is fferent from the Sinclair brand. It pleasant, more chatty and agreeable. oth are alcoholic, have about the me number of butlers. For what is Smart Set without butlers? That's e way you can tell it. Butlers every-here. On the lawn, on the porches, in e dining-rooms. Or perhaps it would better to say that no butler is mplete without a Smart Set. Every tler must have a Smart Set tagging his heels, following him, or he ouldn't be a butler.

Then there is the Edith Wharton nart Set, one, you might say, without redeeming feature. Clever, polished, teresting, homicidal, pathological and nconsecrated.

Humanity, like smallpox, is catch-g. Almost any Smart Set, if left alone ith people long enough, might take me of their humanity. But Mrs. Vharton's Smart Set was vaccinated gainst soul at so young an age that never caught it, and having no soul, is incorporeal.

THE POPULAR IDEA.

The popular idea of a Smart Set is ill different. According to the popular ea, the masculine Smart Set spends s time in breaking his neck playing lo, getting divorces from every oman he has casually met, and rig-ng the stock market. He also builds uses and camps wherever he goes, s a yacht for ladies who are not on od enough terms with his present ife to ask her to come and live with em, keeps a racing stable merely to ow that he is well off, and wears ats. The feminine Smart Setter, on e other hand—and still according to e popular idea—lies abed until about oon. She is always attended by a aid named "Marie," who "glides" iselessly around the room. She takes r bath in a white marbled bathroom ith quiet gold plumbing on the side, es downtown every morning in her otor to secure her daily divorce, or-ers a million dollars' worth of cloth-g in the afternoon and gives "func-ons" in the evenings. A function is ny affair presided over by a head utler, assisted by an under butler, who in turn assisted by the second, third ourth man, and so on. Besides this, here are $12,000 worth of food, $18,000 orth of orchids, and a mon-ey. Then, of course, every ell regulated feminine smart Set-er has week ends. A week end, by he way, is a place of refuge provided or those who have no other shelter. ou get a fairly good bed and lodging or two nights, and pay for it in tips and ridge. The feminine Smart Setter also ives house parties. A house party is eally worse than a week end, because ou have more time to know the people ou meet. Otherwise, it costs just about s much a day.

HE WHITE WOMAN'S BURDEN.

Then there is another way in which he feminine Smart Setter is identi-ied. She always wears a tiara. She wears it for breakfast, dinner and upper, and at the opera in place of lothes. She differs from the Italian easant woman in this respect, that she s stronger, and can carry more weight on top of her head. Her tiara, ndeed, is a sort of American trade-mark, sign manual that she is the real hing. Almost any one can have a iara in just the same manner that lmost any one can be a member of he Smart Set. Get an old horse shoe hat some one has picked up for luck. Order from your hardware store a ouple of quarts of assorted diamonds, and, say, a pint of pigeon-blood rubies, r, if your great-grandfather was an Irishman, a few emeralds not over an nch or so in diameter. Take these to your plumber and have him solder them n, and the whole fitted to your brain; in case you have no brain you can rest your tiara on some of the imported rats that come for that purpose.

The other day I read that it is no longer good form any more in the Smart Set to eat grape fruit for luncheon. That gave me at last a clue to what the Smart Set was. Later, I met a man in front of a market stall eating a grape fruit. He was a large, kindly, Teutonic man, with a long apron on.

"My friend," I said to him, "you are eating grape fruit. It is the noon hour or thereabouts. Therefore, you are not a member of the Smart Set."

"Mein Gott, you vipperschnaapper, you insult me!" he roared, and I narrowly escaped with my life.

And yet in no other way, possibly, could I have told that he was not a Smart Setter. For there is really nothing that a Smart Setter will not do for a living. Except work, of course. And this man was not working. He was merely eating grape fruit at an improper time.

A DREADFUL POSSIBILITY.

I now come to the middle point of my story, which is that there may be, after all, possibly, no Smart Set. I suspected this for a long time, but fought against it. I hated to think that in a great country like this, where we had everything that is going around anywhere—where we had liberty, and freedom and taxes and sudden death, to think that after all we have been doing these few hundred years, we haven't even got a Smart Set to fall back upon—nothing in fact to look up to, nothing to sustain us but the the Smart Set, but when you begin to make your search, when you take away the butlers one by one and put them in a place by themselves so they won't slip back and be counted over again among the magnates—when you sort them all out, and question them closely, you will suddenly find that the Smart Set has evaporated, leaving behind nothing but a quantity of unpaid bills and a social directory. There must be a Smart Set somewhere, of course. But to locate it is quite another problem.

The truth is that unpaid bills are the chief asset of all those people whom we may like to think of as being in the Smart Set but who, when we isolate them, we discover are not what we thought they were. And the reason for this is not that they have no money at all, but that they have too much credit to live within their incomes. Once upon a time Anacreon, having received from Polycrates, a large sum of money, lay awake two nights thinking of it. After this he returned it with the remark that it did not pay for the anxiety.

If he had lived in New York, however, and been a member of the alleged Smart Set, Anacreon would not have been anxious at all. He would have spent his money long before he received it, and thus would have been robbed of any anxiety on account of its presence.

NO CASH IN SIGHT.

This is the way the rich people who have come to live among us get rid of anxiety. They practically never see money. They are always so much behindhand that the sight of real money would give them heart disease.

I know a couple who have an income of $17,000 a year. They cannot afford to live in New York, and so they travel all the time. Having an income of $17,000 is the worst thing that could happen to any New Yorker. It is too much for him not to obtain credit with and too small to live within.

When your income is so small that you can live inside of it you are anxious about money, because you see it occasionally; when your income is so large that you are constantly growing poorer you have nothing to be anxious about except your health, for if this gives out you cannot enjoy yourself as much as you ought to.

I also know a man worth a million who borrowed $9 in cash from his chauffeur, and had to wait three weeks before he could pay him back. Among the rich it is properly vulgar to see money. In a short time to offer money to any one will be considered a reflection upon their ability to get along without it.

The rich people are not, therefore, so badly off, as every one supposes them to be. It unfortunately happens, however, that occasionally they have to buy postage stamps, give tips, and pay fines for over-speeding. It is this that unites them with the common herd, and, up to the present time, it is this that prevents them from being a genuine Smart Set. Until they are entirely removed from such a vulgar thing as money, therefore, we may never hope to have a real Smart Set. We must work indeed for this end. Our scientists must put wireless telegraphy on such a basis that it will be within the reach of all those who otherwise are obliged to resort to postage stamps, and thus may not stand within the sacred line of credit.

LIBERTY AHEAD OF US.

This, then, is our next great reform—the total abolition of money. Vaguely admitted to be our greatest evil, no one seems to have discovered that in no other way can we hope to reach the millennium. It may be argued that to the poor money is an absolute necessity; but this is only because our ideas about the whole matter are defective. It is because a little money, distributed among the poor, seems to keep them going that the practice of letting them have it is assumed to be a good one. But if no one had any, the whole matter would be immediately adjusted. There would be no more sociological books written—in itself a cause for national contentment. There would be no debts, because no one could afford to run up a debt if they had no money to pay it with. There would be no poverty, because the only thing that makes poverty is the fact that some people have less money than others, and without any at all the causes would be removed. There would be no graft, and no dishonesty of any sort. There would be no financial system, and consequently no panics. The Secretary of the Treasury, instead of coming on to New York every once in a while and arranging for a new bond issue, in order to keep the wolf from the door of some martyr captain of industry, would be raking the meadow sweet with hay on his Kansas farm.

There would be no Legislatures. For how could you run any self-respecting Legislature without money. There would be no publishers. Almost any country without publishers in it would be a success.

Without money there would be no appendixes removed, no new diseases and no comic operas, no railroad combinations or stock issues, no Wall street, no politics, no fads, no tariff, no war, no hurry, and no Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, Pittsburgh or New York.

WHY BE SERIOUS?

It is not my own personal business to be serious. I have always believed in my Creator enough to assume that he intended me to be as cheerful as possible under the circumstances, and not to lead the over-dignified, solicitous or muck-raking life. And yet I cannot refrain, with all due respect to everybody concerned, timidly to suggest this brand new idea, which seems to have occurred to none.

Of course, it would have to be a clean sweep. There mustn't be any favoritism. Every one would have to give up—to the last sou marquee.

For money and its constant use are the visible exponents of our monumental lack of faith. We are all afraid to get along without it. And, as each one has, from time immemorial, secretly mistrusted every one else, we have used money as a makeshift, as a sort of universal compromise, a concrete acknowledgment of our own unwillingness to trust the Powers-that-be. Meanwhile, little writers, pompous lecturers, high-falutin sociological experts strut about the stage, offering all sorts of quack remedies to cure our ills.

Money has ruined in turn every nation that took it up. It ruined Egypt, as Thotmes II, who was a genuine humorist, knew it would; hence he built his pyramid, simply as a monument to its utter inadequacy to perform its promise. It ruined Athens. For the Greeks, cleverer than any other people may ever hope to be, fooled themselves with the idea that by using it freely they could build up a permanent State. It ruined Rome, for the moment they began to apply it freely they got pains in the back, lost weight, developed a hacking cough, their stomachs went back on them, and they became fit subjects for a sanitarium.

The singular part of the whole matter is that without it we would lose nothing. We would still have fresh air and sunshine and quail on toast. We would have twice or thrice as much imagination, and hence better works of art. We would have friendships and airships, Shakespeare and Sunday newspapers. We would have genuine ambition and the right kind of advertising matter to read. Kissing would still be in style. All kinds of lovely, sweet girls would be walking around, just as before. We would all want to stay here twice as long as we care to now.

The Smart Set, therefore—or what we are pleased to think is the Smart Set—really has the right idea. It has been blindly groping along the only way that leads to freedom; it has been trying to get along without money. We ought to treat it more seriously. We ought to encourage it in its efforts. Although the most of us have not realized it, it has been leading the way to the ideal state.

If aught that I have written, therefore, even in this humble manner, has helped to shed new light on this great question, I shall feel that—barring all rival claims—I have not lived in vain, as some one may possibly have remarked before.

Neat at Any Cost.

Of the late Capt. Charles Barr, the famous yachtsman, a Marblehead tobacconist said the other day: "Capt. Barr was almost as famous for his neatness as for his seamanship. One summer he took a cottage in the country. It was a marvel of neatness—velvet lawns, bright flower-beds, red fences, and the cottage was snow white with green shutters.

"An old shipmate was invited down in August over Sunday. Saturday night, after their supper of hot brown bread and baked beans, the two friends sat on green wicker chairs on the tidy piazza smoking good cigars. The visitor on finishing his cigar tossed the butt down on the grass.

"'What did you do that for, George?' said Capt. Barr. 'Look at it smouldering down there. Don't it look nasty on the nice green grass?'

"George turned red.

"'I don't think anybody would notice a little thing like that,' said he.

"'George,' said Capt. Barr, 'it's just these little things that make neatness and order, and neatness and order are a big part of success.'

"George, who had never been a very successful man, smiled sarcastically. He said nothing, but a little later he got up and hurried down the neat white path and out of the gate. He was gone a quarter of an hour.

"'Where the dickens have you been?' said Capt. Burr, uneasily, on his return.

"'Only just down to the hollow,' said George, 'to spit in the river.'"—[Philadelphia Record.

No Fashion in Honesty.

The bachelor girl was taking lunch with the woman in her little blue kitchen.

"That's a pretty toothpick holder," she said. "Blue to match your cups and saucers."

The woman smiled in a pleased way.

"I like it," she said. "That's just why I took it. It was at a café. It just fit in the pocket of my coat."

"I thought," mused the bachelor girl, "that taking souvenirs from cafés had gone out of fashion."

"I don't care so awfully much," said the woman, "about following the fashions."—[Exchange.

under the direction of Prof. Rita Reiser.

The choral numbers will include Wagnerian excerpts and other selections from the works of Attenhofer, Handwerg and Kreutzer.

On Saturday night the Mendelssohn Club, assisted by Annie Mottram-Craig, Edward H. Philbrook, A. Ray Carpenter, Grant F. Morgan, Mrs. Thatcher Marvin and a pony chorus, will give the comic opera, "Patience."

The presentation will be in the Auditorium, and the proceeds will be divided with the Children's Hospital.

Bruce Gordon Kingsley will be at the organ, and there will be a number of specialties in the performance.

Pupils of Arnold Krauss will be heard in recital on Friday evening, at Gamut Auditorium.

Pupil-participants will be Le Roy Painter, Miss Mary Reed, Ralph Ginsburgh, Miss Etta Kraft, Miss Sadie Stanton and Miss Nancy Crail. Accompanists will be Mrs. Harry Clifford Lott, Mrs. Elizabeth Eichelberger and Mrs. C. W. Reed.

The programme is an unusually strong one for a pupils' recital.

A concert for the benefit of the Mothers' Fund will be held at Gamut Auditorium, on the evening of May 20.

This concert will be given by several musicians of Christ Church and a good programme is being arranged.

Moore's band programme, at Eastlake Park today, will include the Vollstedt "Queen of the Dance" waltz, a selection from "Martha," Kummer's "Garden of Dreams," Weber's "Peter Schmoll" overture, Eilenberg's "Blue Violets," Verdi's "Atilla" trio and Lee Johnson's "Thelma" serenade.

Quite Sufficient, She Said.

A child-loving man was on his way to Denver to transact some important business. During the afternoon he noticed in the opposite section of the Pullman, a sweet-faced, tired-appearing woman traveling with four small children. Feeling sorry for the mother he soon made friends with the little ones.

Early the next morning he heard their eager questions behind the curtains of the berths, and the patient "yes, dear," of the mother as she tried to dress them, and, looking out, he saw a small white foot protruding beyond the opposite curtain. Reaching across the aisle he took hold of the large toe and began to recite:

"This little pig went to market,
This litte pig stayed home;
This little pig had a piece of roast beef,
This little pig had none;
This little pig cried 'wee-wee' all the way home."

"How is that?" inquired the eager man.

Then the foot was suddenly withdrawn, and a cold, quiet voice said: "I should think it was quite sufficient."—[Ladies' Home Journal.

Mrs. Dolliver.

Wife of Senator from Iowa is Graduate of Wellesley and is Interested in Higher Education.

BY MARGARET B. DOWNING.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—"It is forced on the national mind that the woman question looms large," observed Mrs. Jonathan Prentiss Dolliver, wife of the senior Senator from Iowa, discussing some of the topics of vital interest in the feminine world today, "whether it is studied from the standpoint of the suffragist, from that of the patriotic societies or from the clamoring multitude of girls who threaten to crowd out the boys in all co-educational institutions, it is a question no longer to be waived aside. I think that in my State we have found an excellent solution for women who want to do useful patriotic work which counts in the upbuilding of the community. Iowa has always considered the needs of women as seriously and as solicitously as those of their male kin. Traveling libraries, traveling lecturers, various societies were formed years ago for women in the isolated farming districts. Two years ago, the semi-centennial of the Iowa Constitution was celebrated throughout the State, and with this came a wave of patriotism which resulted in the formation of many county historical societies and the enlarging and improving of those already in existence.

"Each community has its history worth embalming. In these strenuous times when working men and women both have to strive and strain after the needs of life, it seems a fine patriotic duty for those with leisure to pick out the records of the past and get them into shape for the trained historian. We are, of course, merely keepers of a trust in such affairs, but it seems like a sacred trust. I should like to see these historical societies in full operation everywhere. It is the most engrossing work, and it fills the needs of many a woman who finds time hanging on her hands. With the affiliation of patriotic societies the labor is lightened. In Iowa, we take the most absorbing pride in our history. We are young, of course, but then each year we are getting older and more important. We have our State almost as regularly laid out and classified for historical work as for political assessment. We wish the memory of the pioneers sacredly kept, and each society is delving into State records and musty files for photographs, old letters and title deeds. We are keeping the history of every politician, his speeches and his public acts, together with the history of every initiative industrial or commercial movement in the community. Then we have the most delightful times at the historical reunions. We usually choose some anniversary of import to the State as, for instance, the date on which the United States soldiers first encamped at Fort Dodge. We have a basket picnic, which is attended in force from throughout the country. The morning is consumed with pioneer reminiscences and speaking by an interesting talker and some music. Then the picnic and the afternoon is given up to social duties. Neighbors who dwell apart have much to talk about, and the visiting is one of the pleasant features of the day. There is music and drilling, and altogether the historical reunion of Webster county is becoming as famous as the assemblages of the old Scotch border clans."

Senator and Mrs. Dolliver are to be classed among the conservative dignified people who make Washington one of the most agreeable cities of the world to live in. They reside on the high terrace in Massachusetts avenue, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets, and their home, while not, in the strict sense, a social center, is one of the most important ones of the senatorial set. The Senator is one of the trustees of the National Methodist University of this city, and is making heroic efforts to bring the institution into active operation. He is also identified with many local philanthropic movements, and he is constantly in requisition to speak in their behalf. Mrs. Dolliver takes the most cordial interest in all that pertains to her Washington life, and even the care of three small children does not interfere with her social duties or curtail her hospitable inclinations. "I always feel an impelling force to attend to my social duties," she said, "for I desire to carry out the prophecy made when I graduated [illegible] years ago from Wellesley. I was class president, and entered with zest into all that we planned to immortalize the day. In the long list of graduates that day, and we are going to keep it with great solemnity at the anniversary in June, each one had her future predicted. Mine was that I should live in the national capital and should be a social queen. Now nobody prevents my claiming anything more than I do live in the national capital, in the role of an official wife, and I try to live up to what my classmates so kindly predicted in [illegible]

"[illegible] of Wellesley naturally brings up the much-discussed question of higher education for women. Of course I believe in it, and I think all objections have been gradually dissipated. I see no menace in that [illegible] so often held up, which results from the under education of men and the over education of women. The cry is rising from heads of educational institutions, and it [illegible] the shibboleth of sociologists in crowded cities. I note that universities and colleges which admit women on equal terms with men are beginning to curtail the number of women admitted, as against those of men. This, it appears to me, is a mistake. I see no reason for keeping out women because men will not take up the higher education. The best solution is for the State to make room for all. This is the ideal national education. But generally boys in the poorer and middle classes are put early to work. Only those with that ingrained love of knowledge which leads them to study at night and to rake and to scrape enough to take them through college take advantage of what the State offers. Girls are granted more leisure, even by poor parents, and really if one wants to be absolutely impartial, their thirst for learning is keener than among their brothers. I see only good results from girls receiving the higher education. The talk about it unfitting them for their station, making them sour, discontented in life, is now confined to fiction writers and romancers of every class. Those who study the question harp on this side of the problem but rarely.

"The college-bred wife possesses a philosophy which aids in every emergency. She makes a better wife, certainly a more intelligent mother. She not only educates her children, but she will aid her husband to surmount every obstacle caused by limited schooling. I have seen such many times. Then for the future generation it argues well to have the mothers well grounded in what the up-to-date modern college teaches. Our history shows what our great men owe to mothers intelligent beyond the ordinary and usually self-taught. What may we not expect from trained mothers, for a clever woman has said: 'It produces the most useful results to add the incident of education to the accident of brains.'"

Mrs. Dolliver is profoundly interested in all that concerns educational development, and her love for her alma mater is among the charming traits of her character. She belongs to the local College Women's Club, and is an active participant in all its affairs. She is also one of the national officers of the Wellesley alumnae, and though of recent years daily cares and pressing social obligations here and in her home city, Fort Dodge, have kept her away from the class days, her interest is unabated.

This coming June, the anniversary of the graduation, Mrs. Dolliver's class is going to unveil a memorial window to Philips Brooks in the chapel at Wellesley, and she will attend, accompanied by her little daughters, Margaret and Frances, who are 9 and 7. This will be her first visit since her marriage. Mrs. Dolliver, after leaving Wellesley, where she took the highest honors of her class, spent some time holding the chair of mathematics at the Northwestern University at Evanston, a suburb of Chicago. Her acquaintance with Senator Dolliver went back to their early years spent in Fort Dodge, and a friendship which had proved very pleasant ripened into something more ardent during her summers spent in her old home.

Mrs. Dolliver was, before her marriage, Louise Pearsons, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Reed Pearsons of Fort Dodge. On both sides of her family she comes from colonial stock, and is eligible to nearly all the most revered patriotic societies, descendants of colonial Governors, of the revolutionary heroes and of the heroes of 1812 and of the Mexican War. Mrs. Dolliver early joined the Daughters of the American Revolution, and has been one of its most devoted and intelligent leaders, not only in Iowa, but in the national board here. Four years ago, she was besieged by her countless admirers to stand for the interests of that wing of the society of which Mrs. Fairbanks represented so ably, and to become the candidate against Mrs. Donald McLean, but she could not see her way clear to do so. Mrs. Dolliver takes a serious view of what the society means, and it was her conclusion that its best aims are getting beclouded by the scramble for office. She therefore declined the honor, and has steadily resisted all efforts since to have her stand for any national office. She represented Iowa on the board of national vice-presidents for several years and did some excellent work in systematizing the work in her State.

Keenly interested in all that concerns educational development and intellectual endeavor, Mrs. Dolliver has been an able coadjutor of her husband in encouraging and sustaining the local interest of the great American University, which the Methodists hope to see in active operation before another decade passes. Mrs. Dolliver is one of the capable type of women who can entertain seventy-five or a hundred people at an hour's notice, and her fine luncheons for the Methodist trustees when they meet in Washington are among the most delightful amenities which they receive. She has frequently invited the entire concourse to her home, and had delicious cake and abundance of sandwiches and cold meats and relishes waiting for the multitude.

Mrs. Dolliver also takes a special interest in the good work which is being done by her uncle, Dr. D. K. Pearsons of Chicago. This benevolent physician made a great fortune in real estate in Chicago, and now he is spending his wealth in endowing poor colleges throughout the country. He has already given away several million dollars in donations of $50,000, and he has outstanding several tentative gifts which almost amount to half a million. Mrs. Dolliver follows this philanthropy with the keenest interest, and frequently calls attention to some deserving and struggling institution.

Senator and Mrs. Dolliver have as attractive a little group of children as official Washington can show. Besides the little girls, Margaret Eliza and Frances Pearsons, there is a sturdy little boy of 4, who bears an honored name from a literary sense, George Prentiss Dolliver, a combination of his father's and maternal grandfather's, and not from the distinguished clerical publicist and author.

An Old Boston Schoolgirl.

A Boston school teacher received rather a shock the other day when she got an insight into the mind of one of her little scholars. The teacher had asked the children to write an answer to the question, "What do you wish to be when you are grown up?"

One little pale-faced girl with a prematurely old face wrote this single sentence, "I want to be an old maid."—[Boston Record.]

HEREABOUTS.

CONSIDERABLE mining activity in the Shasta district is reported by L. F. McCrea, a mining man from Redding, staying at the Angelus, who also observes that Californians are seemingly disposed to overlook gratifying conditions here to busy themselves with Nevada. "I think it strange," he said, "that the San Francisco papers should be so interested in Nevada and forget what is going on in their own State. We are busy enough in the North. The Balakala mine is turning out 1500 tons of copper a day, and the Mammoth is putting out 1000. The Delamare, which is controlled by the General Electric Company, has finished twenty-seven miles of railroad, connected with the Southern Pacific at Beard, just above Redding. The Iron Mountain, which is controlled by an English concern, is also building a railway; this company has already paid more than $7,500,000 in dividends. Then there are the gold properties, of which the Hazel Mining Company is producing $30,000 a month, and the Midas is getting out $20,000 of ore a month. The Bully Schoop is out of the courts at last and is getting out 150 tons of ore every day, while the Globe Mining Company, which has opened one of the biggest shoots of ore in California, is preparing to pound away with a thirty-stamp mill next fall. Yes, we are pretty busy up in Shasta and Trinity counties."

Californians are getting the best there is in the way of lands in the Yaqui Valley, according to E. M. Elliott of Ventura, a guest at the Hayward, who has just returned from a trip into Mexico. "I found many ranchers from California in the Yaqui country," he said, "and the San Joaquin Valley seems to have been drawn on heavily. I left there last week and they were harvesting wheat—had been cutting wheat since the latter part of April. It was fine wheat, too, the finest I ever saw."

Sugar beets as a means of ridding the soil of the Sulphur Springs Valley of Arizona of alkali, is the remedy suggested by Maj. Carr of Oxnard, one of the Supervisors of Ventura county, who is registered at the Hayward. The major, who represents the American Beet Sugar Company, is on his way to the Imperial Valley to look over the beet-field conditions there. "Some of the land from which we are getting beets," he said, "would only give a scattered stand here and there five years ago, and before that it would hardly grow anything at all. It is giving good crops now, and I have seen the beets drawing so heavily on the alkali that you could see something like a little crystal of alkali on the leaf." There is a rush of settlers to the Sulphur Springs Valley, where the major was discussing the most advantageous crop for that kind of soil. He says it will grow beets better than anything else.

Mr. Ricard tells with a great deal of delight his story about Abraham Lincoln. Ricard was a famous wood sawyer, and Lincoln gave him a job. They got along well until it came to pay day, when they disputed over the number of cords sawed. Mr. Ricard says that Lincoln settled for all except the cutting of one cord.

Washington and cast his first vote for James Madison, celebrated his 113th birthday anniversary May 1 at Oakland, where he lives in a little hut in the rear of Sexton Charles Lewis's home. Diamond, despite his years, teaches physical culture by mail and sells copies of his book on longevity.

Maj. James B. Cavanaugh, Corps of Engineers, one of the assistants of the Chief of Engineers at the War Department, has recently been called in consultation with the representatives of the State of Florida, and Capt. George R. Spaulding, Corps of Engineers, with regard to plans for draining the Everglades of Florida, especially with reference to the effect of the proposed work on Lake Okeechobee and other navigable waters in the State.

Lieut. Burton Mitchell, Twelfth Infantry, has been reappointed aide-de-camp to Brig.-Gen. Funston, now in command of the army service schools at Fort Leavenworth. Lieut. Mitchell was formerly an aide to Gen. Funston in San Francisco. He will be assisted as aide by Lieut. Hornsby Evans

Lieut.-Col. Louis A. la Garde will assume command at the general hospital at the Presidio, San Francisco, the latter part of May. He is at present stationed at Denver. Since Gen. Torney went to Washington Maj. James M. Kennedy has been acting as chief at the hospital.

Lieut.-Col. William P. Evans of the General Staff, on duty at headquarters of the Department of the Missouri, will proceed to Manila on August 5 for duty as chief of staff on that division, relieving Col. Stephen C. Mills, General Staff, who will proceed to San Francisco for further orders.

The prospective retirement upon his own application of Brig.-Gen. John B. Kerr is awakening keen interest regarding what army officer will receive the appointment of brigadier-general. This will be the first vacancy in the list of general officers of the army to be filled by President Taft, and the event has a significance in the possibility that it may serve as an indication of Mr. Taft's policy in the matter

Thomas E. Ewer of Troop L, Second Cavalry, Fort Des Moines, has utilized his spare time while at the post to invent and bring to practical completion a number of useful improvements on agricultural tools, and he has also organized a stock company, under the laws of the State of Virginia, for the purpose of manufacturing his inventions at Des Moines.

PEOPLE OF THE COAST.

B. P. OLIVER of San Francisco, foreman of the grand jury that first brought in indictments against Abe Ruef, Schmitz and others, has suffered a serious loss of business as the result of his connection with the grand jury. His business is that of a real estate broker.

It will be two years before A. C. Dickinson of Walla Walla, Wash., knows how much money 200 acres of land sold to Gustav Vollmer brought. Dickinson is to receive for each acre 100 bushels of wheat, and this wheat is to be delivered in two installments, 10,000 bushels this fall and 10,000 bushels next year. According to the present prices of wheat Dickinson would get $117.50 an acre, but the prices next year may be as low as 60 cents a bushel.

Gertrude Atherton has discovered what she calls a "wonderful place" for literary work—Mt. Tamalpais—where she is writing daily from three to five thousand words of her next book. As Mt. Tamalpais is only a two hours' journey from San Francisco, she relieves the strain of her literary work with occasional visits to the city she loves.

Henry Beeson of Booneville, Mendocino county, the only survivor of the historical Bear Flag party, was recently presented a gold badge in honor of the fact, by Kelseyville Parlor, No. 219, N.S.G.W. Beeson is not only a survivor of this memorable old party, but was a pioneer of Lake county before the massacre of Stone and Kelsey.

Charles Austin, an eighteen-year-old boy of Portland, Or., is an expert amateur wireless telegrapher. His self-constructed apparatus is as powerful as that of any other station on the Coast, and besides sending and receiving messages to points along the Coast, he has occasionally connected with Honolulu.

A SUNDAY SERIAL.

The Turn of the Tide.

XXI. (Continued)

"For two months her looks have worried me. I thought she was fretting about her father. Now I understand. I don't think she will ever marry."

"Burgess said that too."

"Did he?" It's something not easily explained, something in the temperament and character which stretches back and back for generations, something peculiar to our northern races. Do you ever think of the women devoting their lives to other women's children: the nurses, governesses and maiden aunts. The mothers, who perhaps are entirely wrapped up in their husbands, or lovers, or amusements, take the credit, you may be sure, but we doctors know. Potentially, nearly all these women were intended to be mothers, and the maternal instinct cannot be destroyed, although it may be diverted and perhaps perverted. Many of them remain single because they cannot marry one particular man. The primal woman had no such scruples. Well, we are in deep waters, but I predict that Joy Vennable will devote life to children not her own. She won't take me, and she won't take Esmé Burgess. I don't waste much pity on him."

"Why not?"

"He is wrapped up in himself, in his career, in his ambitions, which are worthy enough. For the next five years he will do better alone. A wife, the very best, would be a sort of drag on him. In a sense what applies to him, applies to me, or did apply to me. For the past five years I've hardly had a minute I could call my own. I don't complain, I've enjoyed the fight, but a man must have some minutes to share with a wife. And here's another bit of psychology for you. The right kind of women don't want men who can do without them. Nothing in the world makes a good woman so miserable as the thought that she's a drag on the man she loves. Burgess and I would have an attenuated chance if he lost his tongue and I my right hand. Hullo!"

The clock began to chime.

"Great Scott! I've made you miss your boat."

"That's not of the least consequence. I foresaw the possibility. I told my chauffeur that I might be delayed."

"You must stop here."

Tisdale had a small spare room, always kept in order. He showed Hugo over his flat, which occupied the ground floor of the house, expatiating with enthusiasm upon its advantages. He kept no bothering servants. His landlady "did" for him. The consulting room and dispensary had a separate entrance.

"Very snug," said Hugo.

"I had to plot and plan," Tisdale admitted. "For I hadn't a bob to spare. I could afford a house of my own now, but, bless you, I prefer this. We'll have a nightcap."

With the cunningly concealed intention to distract Hugo's mind and prepare it for sleep, he began a description of his struggles against disease and poverty in what was then a slum of Easthampton. The dreary monotony of the narrative seemed to permeate his voice. Hugo felt that his eyes were closing. Tisdale smiled and touched him. "Let's turn in!"

Hugo started.

"I don't know what's the matter with me," he muttered, rubbing his eyes.

loid into his guest's whiskey and soda.

"Good-night," said Hugo, on the threshold of the prophet's chamber, which in size and neatness resembled a ship's cabin. He grasped Tisdale's hand hard. "I'm glad I missed that boat," he added slowly.

At that moment the captain of the Luna was standing alone upon his quarter-deck peering into a mist which was thickening into fog. An old man, one who had served at sea for more than fifty years, the time was near at hand when he could retire with a well-earned pension. The night was very still, and the waters of the Channel so smooth that the ship seemed to be gliding over them with the swift, tranquil flight of an albatross. Upon the port quarter the Needles stood sharply out. Passing them, the captain had noticed that the westerly breeze was failing and the stars shining less clearly; but as yet he could see far ahead, although his eyesight, admittedly, was not what it had been. Wracks of mist, illumined by the ship's lights, glimmered out of the mirk and disappeared.

The captain could not see fog, but he could smell it. What he did see quite plainly, was the small cottage and garden near Sea View, in the Isle of Wight, which was his, bought and paid for, the cottage wherein his wife and he expected to spend the remaining years of life; a snug harborage for such ancient and weatherbeaten craft. Upon nights such as this, when a child might take command, he had conjured up the vision of this cottage ten thousand times. It represented not merely the hardearned savings of a strenuous lifetime, but all those other subtle, indescribable things for which strong men struggle and wait, often with such infinite patience, knowing, perhaps, in their inmost souls, that the striving is what is really worth while, and that the castle in Spain, or the whitewashed cottage overlooking the Solent, are in truth the places, the pleasant and peaceful places, in which we can only find rest when our work, whatever it may be, is honorably accomplished.

Suddenly the vision faded. The captain realized that the air was dank and chill. Upon his starboard bow the waters of the Channel stretched dark gray and shining; but to the left and ahead lay an inky blackness. The Luna was cutting through the tail of a big fog bank. At the same moment, out of the sooty silence came a long-drawn-out wail, a deep, plaintive note, like the cry of the loon, the great diver of the North American lakes. Across the calm surface of that summer sea it boomed with increasing volume of sound, and then died away in a weird diminuendo. The captain recognized one of the new sirens recently adopted by some of the Atlantic liners, differing from the older instruments by reason of its higher note and more flute-like penetrating qualities. Immediately he pulled a string, and the Luna bellowed forth an answering roar, as she plunged into the edge of the fog. As it swallowed her up, the siren of the liner spoke again. The captain felt the sweat start upon his face as he gave the order to reverse engines, full steam astern. Again he pulled the cord behind him, and this time the Luna seemed to awake to the knowledge of her peril, for she roared like a bison, mad with terror, when he feels the teeth of a tiger in his throat. At the same moment the vast liner appeared, rearing up its green and red eyes of the leviathan. Bells rang out shrilly. Just below the captain a young woman was screaming. A few minutes before the captain had seen her pacing the promenade deck with her husband by her side. Coming down Easthampton Water, the mate had told him with a sly wink that the pair were bride and groom, on their way—if a man might infer as much from the labels on their luggage—to spend the month of June among the roses of Touraine. While the woman screamed, the man slashed at the thin cord which secured a life buoy. The captain bent over and shouted to him, telling him that the cork jackets were under a bench a few paces aft. The man looked up and nodded. Face to face with a stupendous emergency, he seemed to be cool and alert. By this time the passengers were pouring out of the cabins, dazed with terror. The flukes of the port anchor of the liner were within five and twenty yards of the Luna's smokestack.

The captain set his teeth and grasped the brass rail in front of him.

XXII.

By 8 o'clock the next morning Easthampton knew that the Luna had been cut in half by one of the big liners and had sunk like a stone with more than half the passengers and crew. Only those on deck, and not all of them, had been rescued. Tisdale heard the news by chance through the telephone. In the next room Hugo was still sleeping. Tisdale let him sleep on. What an escape he had had!

His housekeeper came in. He told her that a friend was with him, and ordered her to broil some bacon and buy hot rolls. Then he called Hugo. Hugo seemed to be better for a sound night's sleep; his eyes had lost their slightly congested look; his skin had cleared. "He has tremendous vitality," reflected Tisdale; "what a pity it should run to waste." This, indeed, was his hobby—the conservation of energy. It exasperated him to think that the tides ebbed and flowed twice during each day and that the world made no practical use of this tremendous manifestation of force.

After breakfast Hugo looked at his watch and said carelessly: "The Luna is due at St. Malo at 10. I shall wire to my chauffeur."

Then Tisdale said slowly:

"Do you believe in coincidence, Charteris?"

"Coincidence?" Something in the doctor's tone arrested his attention.

"I don't," continued Tisdale. "I try to see purpose behind everything. I am no sectarian; dogma and doctrine are empty words to me, but I believe profoundly in Almighty God."

Hugo stared at him. The match with which he was about to light his pipe flickered and went out. Tisdale leaned forward. His voice trembled.

"Was it chance brought you here last night?"

"Something has happened," said Hugo, quickly.

"Yes; the Luna will not arrive at St. Malo today. She went down last night a few miles to the southwest of the Needles!"

Hugo repeated the words in a sort of dazed whisper, and then there was a long silence, before Tisdale added the details. Hugo listened, stupefied, unable at first to apprehend the catastrophe. Then he started up.

"It's not in the papers."

"It will be in the afternoon papers."

"I must wire to my brother's wife."

Tisdale noticed the odd wording. Why should Charteris wire to his brother's wife instead of to his brother? With a gesture he indicated some forms upon the right side of his desk. Hugo scribbled a few lines and then stood up, staring at Tisdale with a curious light in his eyes.

"So you are convinced that there is a purpose behind everything?"

"Absolutely."

Hugo laughed.

"If you are right, it's my duty to try

Hugo did not answer. He began to pace up and down the small room. Presently he paused——

"Did you tell your landlady that I was here? Mention what an escape I had had?"

"No; I couldn't gossip with her about it."

"Nine men out of ten would have done so. Purpose again!"

Again he laughed, not ironically, but with a boyish spontaneity that astonished Tisdale. A minute or two passed and then Hugo said, incisively:

"Suppose I told you that I had a fancy to read my own obituary notices?"

"Are you joking, Charteris? At the expense of your family—your friends——"

"Hold hard! I'm deadly serious, Tisdale; I don't think I was ever so serious in my life, because this is an opportunity to do what Joy told me: To begin again."

Tisdale gasped.

"You speak of my family. They will benefit enormously by my death. Every penny of mine is left to my only brother. Ever since he inherited the old place his life has been a futile struggle to make both ends meet. I have offered to help him, but he's as proud as Lucifer. To him, to his wife, who is a sweet creature, to his four sons, my death will be the most opportune thing that ever happened. And every man, woman and child on an enormous estate will profit, too. The income which I have squandered will be spent wisely——"

"But——"

"Wait! You mention friends. I have no friends, Tisdale. A multitude of acquaintances, yes. I had friends, the right sort, I mean. I drifted away from them. Now, it would be impossible to pick up those old friendships. I am sick of England, sick to death of the aimless life I have led. What remains? Joy Vennable. How would my death affect her. If there's one thing I'm proud of, it's the knowledge that I won her love. Under false pretenses, if you like, but I won it. And as long as I live she will never be able to forget that. And, as you said last night, it may prevent her marrying—her, the woman of all the women I have known best fitted to be a wife and a mother. If she believes me to be dead she will be free."

"I don't want to hurt your feelings, Charteris, but how do you propose to live?"

"I've three thousand pounds in my pocket. Purpose again. If I can't make a living with that, the sooner I starve the better. I shall begin again in Argentina, California, or Australia."

"Sooner or later somebody would turn up who could identify you."

"Let's face that possibility. What of it? I should tell the fellow that he was making a mistake. How could he prove that he wasn't? You and I have had our noses near together, but last night you hardly recognized me, merely because I'd shaved off a beard, which will grow again."

Tisdale, at bay, thrust the last argument forward.

"You can't take a step of this tremendous importance without long consideration."

"There my hand is forced. I can't allow my people to believe me dead, and then resurrect myself. But, I have a little time. The papers will report me missing, not dead."

"I protest against this wild idea of yours with every fiber of my mind and body."

"It's been done again and again. That Austrian Archduke, who was supposed to be drowned, is living somewhere, depend upon it! Now, look here. I shall go for a walk, and make up my mind, if two hours' hard thinking can do it."

Tisdale nodded, with a gesture of deprecation.

The suburb of Easthampton, wherein Tisdale had lived and labored for five rows of small houses are built of a crude red brick and roofed with dull slates; the streets are laid out in straight lines upon flat and characterless ground. And the people who live there exhibit in their faces and clothes the same drab uniformity of expression. Even the little children are curiously alike. Respectability permeates the air. Real poverty is conspicuously absent, although, here and there, one may divine its presence, even behind highly-varnished doors and lace-curtained windows.

As an object-lesson to illustrate forcibly the sacrifice of a large income and the substitution of a small one, Hugo Charteris could hardly have found a better place wherein to walk and think. And his was the eye of the hunter trained to observe details which escape the vision of the average pilgrim. More than once in his life, in pursuit of some rare species of game, he had plunged into an arid wilderness, knowing that if he failed to find water before night he must perish miserably. And always he had pushed on, impelled by that strange force which drives men to the accomplishment of seemingly unachievable enterprises. In like manner, he had braved again and again hunger and the atrocious extremes of great heat and cold. One cannot account for these things. Turn over the back numbers of the Alpine Journal. Read some vivid description of the conquering of a virgin peak, that first awful ascent of the Matterhorn, if you will, up which we, if we live long enough, may travel in a funicular railway. Why should strong, sane men risk their lives for admittedly no purpose other than the wish to place their feet where no human foot has trod before? In the days of Charlemagne no man went mountain-climbing as a pastime, because, obviously, the work-a-day lives of gentle and simple were full enough of adventure and danger, and nobody, today, leaps into lions' dens to rescue a lady's glove, but in every part of the globe just such unreasonable and dangerous feats are being attempted by a few of us.

Hugo happened to be one of this small minority. And now, upon the psychical plane, he was about to explore a new country, probably arid, certainly strange, because innate in him a force greater than himself was expanding and fructifying. To remain a weed on "Lethe's wharf" had become impossible.

He passed a mechanic with a bag of tools in his hand, hurrying from one job to another. The man's face was grimed with dirt and deep lines lay about the mouth and eyes, although he was still young. Hugo marked the expression never to be seen upon the faces of the loungers in Piccadilly and Hyde Park: the expression which may be said to be the answer and justification of the Yankee injunction: "Root, hog, or die!" The bagman who repeated that homely saw had the same look, the inexorable determination to root and live.

For a long time he sat thus, seeing the past and the present, staring with unblinking gaze into the future. When he rose, there was no indecision upon his face. Coming, he walked slowly, the pace habitual to the man of leisure with nothing to kill except time; returning, he swung along briskly, walking with clean, elastic tread. So the mechanic had strode along to his work. And in Hugo's eyes, as in his, shone the same subtle flame which Prometheus stole from Heaven.

He had made up his mind to—root.

He persuaded Tisdale to become his accomplice, and Tisdale consented not altogether from the highest motives. He knew that the death of Charteris might remove the greatest obstacle between himself and Joy Vennable. This consideration festered during the three days which succeeded the sinking of the Luna. Hugo remained at his friend's flat, while Tisdale bought clothes and made inquiries. Within a week a steamer that carried a few tine from Easthampton. She was sailing on the early tide, and Hugo intended to slip aboard the night before, well muffled up.

Meantime, his death had been chronicled in all the papers, and he actually did have the curious experience of reading his own obituary notices. The sporting papers published nearly a column apiece. Hugo's expeditions were mentioned, and one or two of his most thrilling adventures. The writer of one ended his paper as follows:

"Of late, the name of Mr. Hugo Charteris has been blackened by public opinion, which nine times out of ten is unfair and hysterical. He was too proud and perhaps too wise to defend himself against the most merciless attack we have ever witnessed in an English court of law; an attack that, so far as we can see served no end, for the decree has not been made absolute, and the prosecutor in this famous case has rendered the proceedings null and void by condoning the offence. 'The man recovered of the bite, the dog it was that died.' Mr. Hugo Charteris was handicapped by the possession of too much money, which he never failed to share with his friends and acquaintances. Had he been a poor man, he might have made a great name as an explorer. He was essentially of the stuff of which pioneers are fashioned; strong, hardy, resourceful, always cheerful, and as brave a man as ever tackled a tiger on foot in its native jungle. We never saw him without reflecting that he was as much out of place in a fashionable drawing-room as a peregrine falcon in a gilded cage. R. I. P."

Hugo laughed when he read this appreciation.

"That fellow must have borrowed 'a tenner' from me," he said to Tisdale.

Upon the fourth day, a body was washed ashore in a suit of clothes identified as belonging to Hugo. He had given to his chauffeur, a man about his own size and build, a couple of old tweed suits. He could remember that the poor fellow was wearing one of them when he saw him for a few minutes after dinner. The man, probably, had just had time to slip on the coat and trousers. The body itself, and particularly the face, were unrecognizable, like so many others dashed again and again upon fanged rocks. Tisdale was greatly distressed, but the Man-who-was, as Hugo now called himself, set against the ludicrous horror of a funeral at Saffron Charteris and Cynthia's grief the consoling reflection that Edward would get immediate possession of the money he needed so desperately. The chief steward, who was among the survivors, testified that he had seen Hugo Charteris come aboard between 10 and 11. Nobody had seen him leave the ship.

Meantime, Tisdale was passing troubled nights. From the moment Hugo had announced his intention of disappearing, Tisdale had wondered how Joy would take the reported news of his death. He had not set eyes on her since her father's funeral, but he had heard that she was leaving the Rectory and so it was reported—the Forest of Ys. Night and day her face haunted him, the face out of which had been crushed joyousness and youth. This had been Hugo's work, and he cursed him when he thought of what she was and what she had been. His feeling against Charteris was the more bitter, because he had had a share in the catastrophe, and because both men and the woman had been the victims of inevitable circumstance.

Hugo urged him to visit Hernshaw Magna before Joy left it.

"Now's your chance," he said emphatically. "I should leave England with an easier mind, I shall be happier and more contented over there, if I knew that you'd have her in the end. This is the moment to strike. Go in—and win."

"I haven't a chance," said Tisdale, moodily.

"You owe it to yourself and to her to make sure of that."

A LITERARY EXCURSION.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, April 30.—Kipling is the subject of a good story just now going the rounds. It is told by the Rev. C. J. Harris, pastor of a Congregational Church in London, who is an intimate friend of the author. "I was sitting with Kipling one day in his garden in Rottingdean," said the reverend gentleman, in the course of a recent interview, "when a street organ stopped in front of the place and struck up the tune 'The Absent-Minded Beggar.' Kipling then went on to say that it was difficult to understand how he could ever have allowed 'Pay, Pay, Pay,' to be published, and attributed to the same pen which produced the 'Recessional.'" This is an interesting sidelight on the famous author. Rev. Harris says that Kipling is intensely alive to his own shortcomings; and keenly sensitive to any blunders of which he considers himself guilty. While publishers and many of his friends might lavish unbounded praise on certain of his works, Kipling himself is very severe in judgment and often discredits his own efforts, saying "unfortunately, I am unable to deceive myself about these things." It is certainly a humble and admirable attribute, and might well be taken to heart by a large number of writers who consider that when they walk on one side of the literary world, the other side tips up.

Rider Haggard is at present taking a deep personal interest in the cure of drunkenness. He is chairman of one bench of magistrates and senior member of another; and, in the course of his career, has dealt with some thousands of "drunk and disorderlies." He has recently given his view on intemperance in a British government report. Some of his suggestions are quite radical. For instance, among other things, he says:

"I submit that the best way to promote sobriety is to make it exceedingly uncomfortable for the individual who gets drunk. I am quite certain that if public intoxication ceased to be treated as a kind of troublesome and malodorous joke, and if its repetition were punished with sentences of confinement increasing in length in proportion to the frequency of the offense, instead of being condoned by a five-shilling ($1.25) or even smaller fine, we should hear and see a great deal less of it than we do at present."

The famous author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She" and other books, then goes on to recommend the following drastic measures for eradicating this vice:

"First offense, dismissal, with a caution; second offense, the ordinary fine; third offense, committal, without the option of a fine. Committal should not be to an ordinary prison," he says in his report, "but to a special department, where inebriates could be suitably treated with a view to their reformation." His views on the drunk that goes in for "making a row" are very strong. "If the drunkenness should be complicated with violence," he says, "or with the use of that filthy language in which drunks are wont to foam out their own shame in public, or if the intoxicated person should be in charge of a vehicle or of children, then I think the magistrates should commit upon the second, if not upon the first offense; and to the common jail."

With habitual drunkards he would resort to incarceration whether their own consent or that of their family were obtained or not. In England, habitual drunkards cannot be put away without their own consent for any length of time, but Rider Haggard would alter all this, and treat a habitual just as if he were a lunatic. If the government carry Rider Haggard's recommendations into effect there is a sad time coming for the man who loves the flowing bowl not wisely but too well. As the drink question in England is one of the biggest sociological issues, Rider Haggar' is much to the front with his recommendations. He has also taken a prominent part in the land agitation and is considered a great expert on that subject.

George Meredith recently celebrated his eighty-first birthday. Many of his friends and most writers of prominence in England sent him messages of congratulation; and there were several cables from America. Meredith lives in a tiny little cottage built of flint and brick at a place called Boxhill, Surrey, in a very beautiful part of the country not far south from London. He has been a recluse for many years; though taking a deep and living interest in the world without being exactly of it. He reads his daily papers without fail, and interests himself in the most up-to-date subjects. Recently, he gave a careful study to England's scheme of raising a territorial army, so much so, in fact, that when Secretary of War Haldane spent a few days at Leatherhead, near Meredith's place, he made a special point of calling on the author and discussing his army plans. Haldane and Meredith are old personal friends, both having attended the same university in Germany.

Meredith, up to a few years ago was a great athlete; famous particularly as a walker. Recently, however, he has been confined to taking drives about the country which he loves so well. He goes about with his nurse, Cole; his gardener—a very old personal friend, more than servant—his sky-terrier, "Sandy," in a little cart pulled by his donkey—another friend—which he has christened "Picnic." Meredith is a tremendous optimist and sees the cheery side of everything. He is a devotee of the beauties of nature and loves the woods and flowers almost passionately. He is most expert in matters of floriculture and forestry. When the late Grant Allan lived near Meredith, he frequently consulted the latter on technical points connected with woodland lore. Meredith is also a keen student of ornithology, and though he does not care for the purely technical side of the subject, he knows the habits of every bird in his district, and can tell you to within a few days, the different mating seasons; and he can distinguish by the call of each bird just what state the feathered family is in. Meredith still does some writing; but he seldom visits the little summer house, or wooden chalet, at the bottom of his garden, where he wrote most of his famous books. The interior of this little shanty is kept neat and clean for him, however, in case he should ever wish to go there.

Though Meredith is now recognized as one of the giants of English literature, fame has come late to him. His early books were almost unnoticed; and he was so poor at one time that he sustained himself for days on a packet of oatmeal. It was only when he had produced a number of books that any attention was paid to him. It was recently remarked upon by a critic that the books which Meredith produced in those early struggling days were the cheerfulest of all he had written. This goes to show that he was able to rise beyond and above circumstances, a feat not to be accomplished by an ordinary author.

Needed Interpretation.

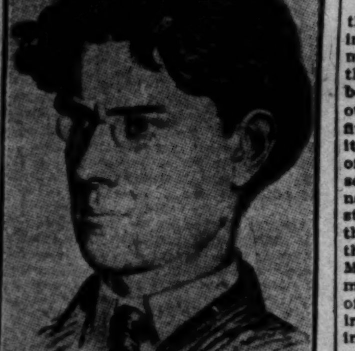
There is no denying that the voice of Nietzsche is the loudest voice of modern times. In philosophical history there are few teachers whose doctrines have colored so much and reached so far as Nietzsche's. There is little modern literature into whose pages Nietzsche does not creep. As Mr. Mencken says, we may mock and hiss, ignoringly pass him by, but his roar is in our ears and his blasphemies sink into our mind. Despite this, there has been little written concerning Nietzsche, and the need of such a book as Mr. Mencken's is undeniable. It is doubly needed in view of the fact that the general idea of Nietzsche, when not nebulous or ignorantly absurd, is erroneous. His teachings are understood in but a small degree; therefore a careful and scholarly study and analysis of his philosophy, rational, and substantiated by direct proof, should at once recommend itself to the student and layman alike. Mr. Mencken, despite the neophytes who probe superficially and find much cryptic mystery, shows that Nietzsche's "ideas are ever clear." This, to Mr. Mencken, is a handicap, inasmuch as people as a whole have come to believe that anything metaphysic is necessarily occult, and irreducible to simple English and simple comprehensions. His literalness is the hall-mark of Nietzsche's entire philosophy. "He is the high priest of the actual, and the divine mysteries seem to him to be but so many grotesque lunacies."

Mr. Mencken has set a standard for himself in his preface which he has clung to with unswerving consistency; namely, to translate Nietzsche into terms familiar to all, and to point out the exact bearing Nietzsche's philosophy has upon every matter of consideration. Mr. Mencken, to test the validity of Nietzsche's conclusions, has applied them to the things in which America and England are most interested, quoting, wherever possible, from the original text.

The opening chapters of the book are devoted to the biographical consideration of Nietzsche. We learn of the boyhood and youth of this anti-Christ whose father was a preacher—this disciple of all unholiness who was a "serious, introspective child," with "dignified politeness." Following the brief summary of his youth, we get the story of the gradual birth of his philosophy which was to be the greatest and most puissant factor in modern thought. We are led through its development to its mature propositions. Further along in the book, Mr. Mencken has endeavored to trace the origin of Nietzsche's philosophy in the minds of other philosophers. By practical methods, this system is applied to human experience with a view to seeing where it agrees and disagrees. In the closing chapter but one, Mr. Mencken estimates Nietzsche's influence on contemporary men, and forecasts his influence on the men yet unborn. On page No. 285, Mr. Mencken attempts (after stating that Roosevelt, Shaw and Reich are all influenced by Nietzsche,) a "roll of other conscious or unconscious retailers of Nietzschean philosophy." Then follows the roll:



Percy Mackaye.

In the "Playhouse and the Play" Mr. Mackaye makes a strong plea for a national civic theater.

George Brandes in Denmark, W. H. Hudson, Thomas Hardy, R. B. Cunninghame Graham, H. G. Wells and H. G. Carpenter in England; Maxim Gorky and the "young Russia" school in Russia; Hugo Kaatz, Max Zerbst, Robert Schellwein, Gerhart Hauptmann and the vast "young Germany" school in Germany; Olga Hansson in Sweden; De Wyzewa, Lavedan and a horde of lesser lights in France; Gabrielle d'Annunzio in Italy; Benjamin R. Tilman (who probably never heard of Nietzsche) and innumerable disciples fourth removed in America; Benjamin de Casseres in Mexico, and stray iconoclasts here and there in Norway, Austria, and even Spain.

Nietzsche's philosophy, as searched and paraphrased by Mr. Mencken, is simply this:

(1.) That the ever dominant and only inherent impulse in all living beings, including man, is the will to remain alive.

(2.) That all schemes of morality are nothing more than efforts to put into permanent codes the expedients found useful by some given race in the course of its successful endeavors to remain alive.

(3.) That, despite the universal tendency to give these codes authority by crediting them to some god, they are essentially man-made and mutable.

(4.) That the human race should endeavor to make its mastery over its environment more and more certain, and that it is its destiny, therefore, to widen more and more the gap which now separates it from the lower races of animals.

(5.) That any code of morality which retains its permanence and authority after the conditions of existence which gave rise to it have changed, works against this upward progress of mankind toward greater efficiency.

(6.) That all gods and religions, because they have for their main object well-being of healthy and efficient men.

Henry L. Mencken, who has given to English readers in his "Philosophy of Frederick Nietzsche" an adequate interpretation of the great German thinker.

(7.) That all the ideas which grow out of such gods and religions—such, for example, as the Christian ideas of humility, of self-sacrifice, and of brotherhood—are enemies of life.

(8.) That human beings of the ruling, efficient class, should reject all gods and religions, and with them the morality at the bottom of them and the ideas which grow out of them.

The book takes up this philosophy and presents it in a clear, bold, understandable manner. The book is neither long nor diffuse, and, on account of its calm, judicial and unprejudiced attitude, will probably be the standard English interpretation of Nietzsche for some time to come. But why is it handicapped with three titles?

For a Civic Theater.

THE PLAYHOUSE AND THE PLAY. By Percy MacKaye. The Macmillan Company, New York. (Price $1.25.)

Mr. MacKaye has given us one of the most important, if not the most important, contributions to modern dramatic literature. His "Playhouse and the Play" is a book of addresses given before Harvard, Yale, Columbia, and other American universities. Of the five leading chapters the first concerns itself with the conditioning influences of the theater upon the drama; the second with a possible goal for our native drama; the third, with the civic status of the dramatist's profession; the fourth, with the need of leadership; the fifth, with art as public service. Mr. MacKaye advocates the establishment of civic theaters and the making of the drama a civic force. He goes into the problem of the theater as an institution of national educative power, and points out the undesirability of the theater as a private speculative business. In addition, Mr. MacKaye answers frankly and authoritatively a great many heretofore questions in connection with the theater. Here are a few of the salient ones, selected at random:

Our theaters in America are attended nightly by tens of millions of citizens: What steps have been taken to investigate whether the theaters are instituted upon a basis which tends to improve, and not to deteriorate, the citizenship of such vast numbers, in qualities of taste, morality and mentality?

What civic societies concern themselves with abuses of the theater's proper function in the community? What churches? What social clubs? What universities?

Why should lovers of art blame theatrical managers for adopting consistent methods to improve their business?

If lovers of art do not like the results of such methods, why do they not take steps to make the pursuit of better methods logical?

It is easy to demand self-sacrifice and financial risk from a business man, but is it reasonable?

How far does the public confuse the creative work of the dramatist with the interpretative work of the actor? How far is this confusion necessary? Useful?

Who appoints dramatic critics?

When appointed, what standard of excellence must they maintain in order to practice their profession?

Can they be guilty of malpractice without expulsion?

Can they, on the other hand, be expelled for practicing their vocation justly?

Is it true that the first night of a production is usually the least representative of the play and acting?

If so, why are first-night performances usually the only performances which are criticised?

Under present conditions, in what space of time, and under what circumstances—conducive or not to mature judgment—must dramatic criticisms be written?

Are these conditions acceptable to critics? To the public? To whom are they acceptable?

What is the rational adjustment of actor, dramatist, stage director, to theatrical production?

What are the wares of the theatrical business?

Are endowment and subsidy by subscription the same in principle?

Is it true that actors are provided, by the practice of their profession, with little or no opportunity for fundamental training in the traditions of comparison of their own work with that of living masters in their art?

To what extent have the contemporary dramatists of Europe influenced American dramaturgy? To what extent is this influence salutary? To what extent harmful?

In America, committees for the critical selection and exhibition of works in sculpture are composed of expert sculptors such as Saint-Gaudens, Barnard, French, MacMinnoes: How are committees for the critical selection and exhibition of plays composed?

Mr. MacKaye's arguments are forcible in themselves, and in addition he is remarkably happy in the language in which he clothes them. A gift for pointed and effective epigram, a firm belief in the justness and importance of his cause, give color and fire to the plea and impart to the reader something of the author's own enthusiasm. Moreover, Mr. MacKaye is thoroughly familiar at first hand with his subject. As a poetic dramatist, he has already won a high place for himself, and there is no one, perhaps, in the country better qualified to speak from the standpoint of the playwright.

Maudlin, But Joyful.

DO THE DEAD DEPART? By E. K. Bates. Dodge Publishing Company, New York. (Price $1.50.)

It has been a long time since I got so much enjoyment out of a book as I got from the quasi-psychic tract by E. Katherine Bates, "Do the Dead Depart?" "Seen and Unseen," from the same author was funny (God wot!) but it didn't begin to compare with this latter book. The cover has a most mysterious caste. It is black with white lettering, and beneath the interrogative title is a nebulous spook, draped in a soiled sheet, carrying a thin gray scepter bent in the form of a question mark.

The preface starts out, "This book is not evidential." We grant this readily, and read further: "After twenty-five years of constant study and investigation and of meeting other psychic students in every quarter of the globe, I suppose I may call myself an expert?" Indeed she may! She may call herself a kangaroo—a clothespin—a string-bean. I could deny her no form of self-nomenclature after the delight the book has given me. Further along in the preface we read, "Some kind friends, on both sides of the Veil, have deeply regretted my writing in a style so far below my capacity and brain power." We, of course, echo the mortal and the spook voices in this particular, and extend our sympathy to her who finds it necessary to debauch her intellectual powers. She finds solace, though, for this misfortune by taking a philosophical stand that after all "it is not a question of trying to impress people with the amount or quality of one's brain-power, but of getting them to listen to what one says." We regret that in this vulgar and commercial day such is the case. So, with a tear, we turn to the text.

Now any one who hasn't had any risible exhilaration lately will find this book highly profitable. There are at least two good hearty, boisterous laughs in each chapter, and there are twelve chapters. How any one can be so childishly gullible in this day is beyond my understanding. It is too bad the book was not written for a burlesque. Listen to this story, which appears in chapter III: The author was aboard a train bound for Cincinnati. A terrible storm was raging, and a "wash-out" delayed matters. There was no way of knowing within a day or two when she would arrive in Cincinnati, and they were already twenty-four hours late. Suddenly thought she, I will consult mother regarding my arrival. (Mother was dead.) Taking a hairpin and holding it lightly in the right hand above her watch, she asked what time the train would arrive in Cincinnati. Then she began repeating the alphabet until the hairpin was pushed downward to the back of the watch, at a special letter. And lo! mother's spirit spelled out "Four o'clock in the morning." Then the author "turned in" and went to sleep. When she awoke the train had stopped,, and she heard "soft, stealthy steps creeping past the thick curtains" of her berth. It was the conductor.

"Where are we?" she whispered cautiously.

"Cincinnati," was his equally cautious reply.

"What o'clock is it?" she asked, excitedly.

ghost playing tiddledywinks with the hairpin is fairly representative of the series of "psychic" experiences through which the author has passed. A delightful new fact has been added to psychic science in this book. We are told that the reason departed spirits do not return directly after entering the spirit plane is because when they die they are generally so worn out or fatigued or sick, that it takes them some little time to recuperate sufficiently to thump tables and strum banjos for the delectation of us earthbound creatures.

By the Author of "Mrs. Wiggs."

MR. OPP. By Alice Hegan Rice. The Century Company, New York. (Price $1.)

Mr. Opp is not an uninteresting character. But when the publishers make the assertion that this book suggests Dickens (poor compliment though it is) they are over-reaching themselves, and over-estimating a very commonplace and uninspired writer. The book is not without interest and merit. Mr. Opp is delineated with sympathetic and workmanlike precision, so that when the book ends we have a fairly clear vision of a pretentious, pathetic, grotesque, patient, brave, unselfish, self-sacrificing, pitiful, ignorant, simple-minded country editor.

He is described twice in his two dominating personalities. Once he is "the aggressive Mr. Opp of the gorgeous raiment and the seal ring, the important man of business, the ambitious financier." Again he is described as "the insignificant Mr. Opp, he of the shirt sleeves, and the wilted pompadour, the delicate, sensitive, futile Mr. Opp, who was incapable of everything but laying down his life for the sake of another."

He is overdrawn, and such a pathetically pitiable figure as Miss Rice describes him takes the life out of the author's fun-poking. The book is rather depressing. Mr. Opp is given to such things as the following:

"According to my notion, or understanding, it's well—what you might call, in military figures, a fight. Of course, there's some that just remains around in camp, afraid to fight and afraid to desert, just sort of indulging in conversation, you might say, about the rest of the army. Then there is the cowards and deserters. But a decent sort of a individual, or rather soldier, carries his orders around with him, and the chief and principal thing he's got to do is to follow them. What the fight is concerning, or in what manner the general is a-aiming to bring it all correct in the end, ain't, according to my conclusion, a part of our business."

Trifling and Cheap.

THE ALTERNATIVE. By George Barr McCutcheon. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York. (Price $1.25.)

Perhaps there is no better proof of the levity of the average mind than the popularity which accompanies the silly books of George Barr McCutcheon. A man with no sense of the literary decencies, incapable of the slightest semblance of art, he stoops to every cheap device known to hack-romanticists to gain favor with those to whom thinking is an anachronism. It is not the prurient books that do the great harm (we survive, as a nation, very well "The Memoirs of My Dead Life" and its classic kind;) but it is the unspeakable trash like McCutcheon's that obfuscates the intellect and perpetuates a taste for the inferior. The self-appointed guardians of other people's virtue, whose degeneracy has reached the point where to them everything that isn't swathed and swaddled is pornographic, might better spend their time suppressing the unintelligent drivel from such sources as McCutcheon & Co. His latest endeavor at commercial literature is published by Dodd, Mead & Co., a house which has the honor to issue Maeterlinck's works. The publishers are really the culpable ones in regard to execrable books, and against them should be directed a law for the protection of the American mind. McCutcheon started in his career writing romantic burlesques. Later he attempted the more serious form of novel, and evidently found himself incapable of the task. He now reverts to burlesque. "The Alternative" will have a tendency to cure even those who admire Mr. McCutcheon of the idea that this inexpensive gentleman is a writer.

LITERARY CHIT CHAT.

The following freak triolet, entitled "Mater," is the only reading matter in poem form which appears in the May Harper's:

"Once I snared a homing bird,
And I knew it had a nest;
And the dawn was when I heard
In the nest the mated bird:
And I dreamed that something stirred
Underneath a mother breast;
Once I snared a homing bird,
And I knew it had a nest.

Is there any one who can throw light on the subject? Any suggestions that would lead to the understanding of the sense of this remarkable rhyme will be appreciated.

Mark Twain confesses in his latest, "Is Shakespeare Dead?" that he was once very much interested in Satan. He argued the whole proposition pretty ably with his Sunday-school teacher, and finally suggested that little Samuel Clemens should write Satan's biography. The idea and the scenario that accompanied it were a great shock to that young Sunday-school teacher. He told the sporting questioner that no one who ventured to mock at the real biographers of Satan could ever hope to enter afterward any respectable house. "How true," says Mark Twain, "were his words, and how wise! How fortunate it would have been for me if I had heeded them! But I was young, I was but 7 years of age, and vain, foolish, and anxious to attract attention. I wrote the biography, and have never been in a respectable house since."

"The White Sister," the novel completed by F. Marion Crawford shortly before his death, was published May 4 by the Macmillan Company. It is a love story of modern Rome, the field which is more intimately connected with Mr. Crawford's fame than any other. Lovers of the society he drew so correctly will rejoice to find in this, the last of his Italian novels, such an old friend as Ippolite Saracinesca, no longer a young priest, but an influentian ecclesiastic, whose wisdom brings joy from a choas of circumstances. The thousands whom Mr. Crawford made familiar with Italian life and character will be glad to learn that almost the last thing he wrote for publication treats once more of his old love.

A characteristic anecdote of Marion Crawford before he attained fame is told by William Mercer in the London Athenaeum. Mr. Mercer says:

"My acquaintance with him began in 1877 in this wise: We found ourselves seated in the compartment of the celebrated Caffe Greco, in Via Condotti, Rome, yclept the 'omnibus'—in that English and American writers and artists have assembled for full a century past. Presently Crawford elongated his brawny limbs and addressed me thus: 'You are Mercer, and I am Crawford; it is not of much use waiting for an introduction; will you play me a game of chess?' I did. Crawford was utterly unknown to fame then, and only scribbled a little for the London papers. About that time he was corresponding for the Daily Telegraph, and I acted as deputy correspondent in place of T. Adolphus Trollope (then on a holiday tour) for the Standard."

Tweny thousand miles without an accident was the unparalleled feat of our battleship fleet on the recent cruise. The voyage created a world-wide interest and a most intense national pride. An accurate photographic record of this now famous cruise is of great interest, and A. C. McClurg & Co. consider themselves fortunate in obtaining such a record for publication early in May. Under the title, "A Pictorial Log of the Battle Fleet Cruise Around the World," Chief Turret Captain R. J. Miller and H. R. Jackson, official photographer of the fleet, have produced a notable work that will be recognized immediately as the standard account of the great naval adventure. As its title implies, the work is arranged as a log. On the one side of the open book are the plates, 7x5¼ inches, and opposite them is a dated record of the places and events which they illustrate. There are between 400 and 500 illustrations, covering the ships, the ports visited, the havoc of the Messina earthquake, the excitements of bull-fighting, the pyramids, target practice, and a number of views in the frozen South. The book will be about 9x11 inches, bound in a manner in keeping with its worth, and will be issued early in May.

Alice Duer Miller's "Less Than Kin" will be issued by Henry Holt & Co. this week. The plot is based upon mistaken identity. A clean-cut young fellow just back from South America is welcomed as a prodigal son by an exclusive New York family of entire strangers. He has in his pocket a letter to the real son, which runs as follows: "Dear Bob: If you left home on my account you need not have gone. Your affectionate cousin, Nellie."

Early issues of the Century are to have a novel fiction feature in a series of three stories written around the superstition of thirteen at table. The three authors are Margaret Deland, Dr. S. Weir Mitchell and Owen Wister; and the names of the authors of each story will not be disclosed until the series is complete. The first of the stories, to be entitled "With the Coin of Her Life," will come out in the June Century, and the editors say the chances are small that readers will guess correctly its author's identity.

PAPER VERSUS STEEL.

New Material Invented from Which Battleships or Locomotives May Be Made.

[Exchange:] Two German engineering experts, Dr. Wagner, one of the technical advisers to the famous Vulcan Shipbuilding Company, Stettin, and Herr von Radinger, director of the Howaldt Shipbuilding Yard, Kiel, have invented a new material from which battleships, ocean liners, and all other kinds of seagoing vessels, motorcars, bicycles, railway locomotives, railway cars, tramcars and other street vehicles, buildings of all kinds, and street paving can be made.

This wonderful material is a strange combination of paper and various fabrics, chiefly linen, raw silk and cambric. These different constituents of the new material are bound together by steel wire.

The inventors have conducted exhaustive experiments which, according to their statements, have clearly demonstrated that their new material is more durable and possesses greater power of resistence than aluminum or steel. It is very light, can be manufactured cheaply, is fireproof and proof against damp.

Dr. Wagner and Herr von Radinger have utilized their new material in the construction of an airship which they are now building at Stettin.

Owing to the extremely light weight of the solid parts of the airship, as Zeppelin airships, which are con- structed all aluminum, Dr. W and Herr von Radinger clai their new aërial vessel will be remain aloft without landin period of seven weeks.

GENERAL MEETING.

In Charge of the Invalid Cheer Chapter—Good Work Done by This Chapter.

A goodly number were present at the general meeting of the Each and All which was held at the regular meeting place, Mammoth Hall No. 2, Wednesday afternoon. The programme was in charge of the Invalid Cheer Chapter and was very enjoyable. Bouquets of beautiful flowers decorated the meeting-room, everywhere, and after serving their purpose for that time were taken to "cheer" the sick and lonely elsewhere.

Miss Daisy Daniels presided at the piano giving instrumental solos, marches and songs, aided in the latter by members present.

Mrs. Lawrence gave a very interesting and comprehensive report of the work of the chapter. Weekly meetings are held and busy hands have fashioned a number of garments for the needy ones, many of whom are confined to their beds, some are lame, some blind and all in need of help. The speaker stated that not only was aid given, but admirable lessons in patience were received. Their work is carried on in connection with the International Sunshine Society and the Associated Charities. In addition to preparing articles they also distribute gifts of clothing and the like, and are careful to investigate all cases brought to their notice, thus making sure that they are worthy of help. Mrs. F. N. Speare recited two original poems. Following this part of the entertainment was a penny march, the pennies being deposited and slips of paper with notices were drawn and read. A duplicate of one of these was wrapped with a china ornament and drawn as a prize by Mrs. Speare. A pair of knit slippers was raffled, the janitor of the hall holding the winning number.

Tea and wafers were served and the chapter is to be congratulated on the success of its entertainment. They have a pieced and finished quilt for sale, the price being placed at $2.25, which is much less than its real value.

One very interesting circumstance is the "passing on" of the wheel chair by the lady to whom it was given, as she does not need it longer and some one else does.

Notice was given of the opening of a medical dispensary at No. 213 West Third street, where medical attention and medicines would be supplied to needy ones at a nominal sum.

The next regular meeting of Each and All Society will be held at the same place Wednesday, June 2. It was voted to suspend the bylaws and hold the annual election of officers at this time, thus giving the incoming officers an opportunity to formulate plans and get the society in running order before the holidays, when there is call for extra work and money.

Secretary.

A Sympathetic Girl.

Our San Diego, Cal., girl, Mrs. M. B., sends the following letter to the Each and All girls:

"I have been hoping for the address I asked for some weeks ago, am sure you must have been more than busy or I should have received them. I send you the comfort I before mentioned, by express, two weeks ago and after I received the inclosed letter; am more than anxious that the girls shall finish and send it; I having been so overdone with work I could not. Has that linen shower fallen through? I hope not, for the sake of that poor woman who evidently gave it many longing thoughts. We surely do not realize the condition of mind under such circumstances else we would not raise hopes only to have them disappointed. I do hope all the Each and All girls will respond to this letter before another week has passed. I once heard a busy mother say, in regard to a large basket of mending, 'it isn't the work, it is the just getting at it.'

"Now, dear girls, get at it and do not let it be a disappointment to that suffering sister for she has had so many already."

It will be seen from the report of Each and All meeting published elsewhere in our department that the girls have finished the quilt which was received at The Times Office on time and turned over to the members. It will be forwarded to Union City as soon as possible.

"Mothers' Day."

The setting aside of such a day as this should make glad the hearts of a girls' society like Each and All. To mark the occasion, I offer for reprinting on our page this familiar poem, which I take from one of the few pages I chanced to preseve out of all that came my way over two years ago:

MY MOTHER.

She gave the best of her life
With joy for me;
And robbed herself, with loving heart,
Unstintingly.

For me with willing hands she toiled
From day to day;
For me she prayed when headstrong youth
Would have its way.

Her gentle arms my cradle once,
Are weary now;
And time has set the seal of care
Upon her brow.

And, though no other eyes than mine
Their meaning trace,
I read my history in the lines
Of her dear face.

And, 'mid His gems who showers gifts
As shining sands,
I count her days as pearls that fall
From His kind hands.

Acrostic.

Mothers! God bless them every one!
Of every nation, under the sun,
True heroines of earth's battlefield
Heaven's best treasures, love only they wield.
Enduring love, love which ne'er grows old,
Rejoice! for our mother's more precious than gold.

—[Gertrude Allyn Long.

Reflections.

Early in the year under the heading "To The Walking Girls," there appeared these lines: "Each chapter is doing good in its own way. Let us be helpers, not leaners, and finally when we have made a few hearts happy and know we have accomplished something our reward will be our first walk, and a day in the woods, with an invitation extended to all the chapters to join with us, and have a day of rejoicing because we have done some good in our society. I would be pleased to hear from any or all of the girls, members or prospective members, of the Walking Chapter. 'MOSEY."

So far nothing has been heard of this first walk of the season, yet surely this is the ideal time of the year for rambles, and it is to be hoped our walking girls are not to be denied the above treat in store at which "Mosey" hinted broadly.

If E. V. M., of Yefmo, Cal., is still an interested member of the society, and received few calls for the copies she kindly offered to send of Senator Lodge's "brief, famous classical speech," relative to humanitarianism, may I invite her to send in a copy for publication, on the page when space permits? In this way all members may share this inspiring document, which E. V. M., praised so highly months ago. It should make significant reading in conjunction with the enlightening articles, Mrs. Deardorff furnishes us in behalf of animal aid.

BLOSSOM.

Seeks Employment.

M. D. of Monrovia writes to ask the aid of our girls in securing suitable employment. Her letter follows:

"I have been a member of Each and All Society for some time, but have never been able to attend any of the meetings on account of many years' sickness in the family. My dear sister has now passed away, and I am seeking employment. I am a pretty good cook, 50 years old, and would like to get some quiet place, which I might claim as home. I thought some of the Each and All girls might know of such a place."

The address of the above writer will be cheerfully furnished to any of our girls who may wish it.

About the Health Chapter.

Versatile Vernona, chairman of the Health Chapter, invites Each and All Society members to attend chapter meetings.

"Dear Each and All members, especially of the Health Chapter, do not forget that the new place of meeting is at the home of Mrs. E. Carpenter, No. 822½ South Broadway, and the time Saturday afternoons at 2. A course of 100 lessons will be given with from five to eight lessons an afternoon; in fact, all that can be absorbed at one time, on how to generate electricity in the body, and other interesting things that every woman wishes to know.

"These lessons are for Each and All members, and each may bring a friend. You are missing an opportunity that does not occur often when you miss these lessons, as they fairly rain gold dollars upon you in saving doctor and drug bills. These lessons cannot be sent to any one in Los Angeles, you must attend meetings of the Health Chapter in order to get them. For members out of town I can arrange, and will upon request with stamp. Ask those who are attending about the jjewels of knowledge they are picking up in the Health Chapter. You can save enough by gaining this knowledge, pay for your subscription to The Times; pay your millinery bill, your shoe bill, and keep you in gloves and tailored gowns for the rest of your life. You must not confound these lessons with any so-called mental or spiritual process of eliminating disease from the body, for those processes keep you darning stockings, and that becomes a monotoness business. When you are weary of it you will probably come in search of the new game—generating electricity in the body with the machinery of the body."

A Kindly Offer.

Mrs. I. Quitzon of Hawthorne will give house rent free during summer months to some one who is in need of an outing.

SUNSHINE SOCIETY.

Its Officers, Its Purposes and Its Methods of Work—Mothers' Day Observance.

Few societies are so well known for their good work as is the International Sunshine Society. The following facts in reference to the Los Angeles branch of that society are furnished by its members:

State organizer, Mrs. W. W. McLeod; State headquarters, No. 403 South Garfield avenue, Alhambra; international colors, yellow and white; State colors, rose pink; flower, coreopsis; society song, "Scatter Sunshine."

MOTTO.

Have you had a kindness shown?
Pass it on.
'Twas not given for you alone—
Pass it on.
Let it travel down the years,
Let it wipe another's tears,
'Till in heaven the deed appears—
Pass it on.

WHAT IS "SUNSHINE?"

It is the "passing on" of the brighter things of life to those less fortunate than ourselves; who are living in the shadow. It is lightening the dark corners with our smiles, our sympathy, and if need be, our money. It is a "good cheer" society; not to do the work of any other organizations, but to do what no one else is doing.

Loaning a wheel-chair to a "shut-in"—the Los Angeles branch has thirteen such chairs, and wants more! Sending a few flowers to an invalid, securing a position for some one out of work, a good-cheer call (in love, not charity) on a lonely stranger—these are a few outward signs of the inner sunshine.

The organizer and president-general of the International Sunshine Society is Mrs. Cynthia Westover Alden of New York.

There are no money dues in "Sunshine," and the society is non-sectarian. Members pay their dues in kindly acts for others. In the United States alone there are over 3000 branches of "Sunshine." The Los Angeles branch has a membership of more than 250.

Officers—President, Mrs. W. W. McLeod; first vice-president, Mrs. H. B. McKinney; second vice-president, Mrs. M. E. Flint; third vice-president, Mrs. A. P. Chapin; recording secretary, Mrs. N. E. Wilson; treasurer, Mrs. James Fox; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Herbert C. Stone; assistant corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. E. Wallace; historian, Jessie M. Flint.

The Monthly Meeting.

The regular monthly business meeting of the Los Angeles branch of the Sunshine Society was held in the committee-room of the Chamber of Commerce Thursday afternoon, with about forty members in attendance. The report of the treasurer showed the finances of the society to be in splendid shape.

The chairman of the Executive Committee reported two very successful card parties had been held in April, the first at Hotel Trenton, and an afternoon party at Goldberg-Bosley Assembly Rooms. Mrs. W. A. Morehouse and Mrs. D. A. Meekins were the hostesses on these occasions.

The chairman of the Investigating Committee reported several new cases investigated. All were found to come under the work of other organizations, with which they were put in touch.

The Flower Committee had been busy with individual and hospital cases. The Visiting Committee has also done much good work during the month.

A complete list of the members was read, with the coming election of officers in view, the regular election and reports of the year coming in June.

Mr. and Mrs. Himrod formerly of New York, were present at the business meeting. Mr. Himrod, up to within two years, was financial treasurer of the Blind Babies' Home, at Bronsonhurst, L. I.

The following committees were appointed to serve until July:

Few Successful Women Lawyers.

Successful women lawyers are much more rare than successful doctors. Since the days of Mother Eve every one has told every one else that woman was not logical, that she acted from instinct rather than intellect, etc. Yet by some miraculous chance the fact remains that there are at the present day women lawyers of such capacity and renown that they have been entrusted with delicate commissions by the President of the United States, who trusted them above their supposedly superior brothers in the profession.

It is true that sex is a hindrance to the woman lawyer, but if she resolutely puts aside all womanishness, she will find that true womanliness is as great an asset for her as for the woman doctor. The law course covers usually three years, and the fees are about $100 a year; this does not include the graduate course, which lasts a year at a cost of about $125.

It is a discouraging profession for a woman, and unless she is absolutely sure that she is fitted for it, no college girl should undertake the long years of preparation. It takes brains and hard work and perseverance, and to those who are lacking in any of these qualities we say emphatically, "Let it alone." But to those who are sure of themselves and who are bound to succeed, "Go in and win."—[The Delineator.

Answer to Request.

A DELIGHTFUL DAY.

Spent on a California Fruit Farm Interestingly Told by an Each and All Girl.

Alicia was spending her first year in Southern California. There had been various trips to beaches and resorts and she felt acquainted with the country. When Cousin Joe said he was going to Felsenthal's ranch she did not ask to accompany him. Indeed, when he said, "Come along, Alicia, and we'll show you what a fruit ranch looks like," she replied, "I have a pretty good idea."

"No, you haven't," answered Joe. "This is not a trolley trip. I'm going in Sam's auto and we'll stay all day."

So Alicia accepted the invitation, though she thought with disgust of the dusty roads. "If we don't bite our own dust we'll swallow plenty of other people's," she said to herself. It was July, and, with no rain for three months, she had a vivid idea of roads several inches deep with dust. However, when Joe arrived the next morning he found awaiting him a dainty maiden in linen suit, her smartest hat carefully shrouded in a chiffon veil tied daintily under the chin. In a moment they were off. Alicia first noticed pepper-lined avenues, then stretches of cosy bungalows, with spaces farther and farther between, till Joe announced they were on the county road.

"But where's the dust?" asked Alicia.

"We have no dust," replied Joe. "Our roads are all oiled. If you're very anxious for some we can go up some of the private roads."

"No, thank you," said Alicia. "I can dispense with it," and she then gave her attention to the olive groves they were passing through. But their gray tints did not appeal to her as the darker green of the apricot trees, which were laden with luscious fruit.

It was not long before they arrived at a pretty cottage situated on the gentle slope of a foothill. The hostess greeted them cordially, and with true country hospitality made them welcome. While they sat on the porch Alicia enjoyed the beauty of the surrounding country. The rugged mountains, brown and bare, were on each side, while the valley was green with orchards. Lemon, orange, olive and apricot trees showed various tints all blended harmoniously in the clear atmosphere.

Alicia was surprised to learn the apricot orchards were not irrigated, but by frequent plowing gave best results. Her keen eyes noted a camp on the mountain side and she was told they were oil wells, the oil being found on the mountains, but not in the valley.

After luncheon they visited the shed where the apricots were pitted. It was under a grove of pepper trees with large tables, at which groups of men, women and girls were working. The work was done so fast it was impossible to tell how with one stroke of the knife the stone dropped in the pan, while the halves were laid on the tray. The trays, when filled, were placed on trucks, pushed into the smudge house, where the sulphur fumes destroyed all insects and prevented the fruit turning black. Then the trays were placed in the sun and the fruit dried. The field was covered with hundreds of trays of drying fruit, and there, with the golden fruit still on the trees, with the green foliage of the groves beyond, with the ever-changing tints of mountains silhouetted against the deep blue sky, made a wonderful play of color.

Alicia noted the gay company working, some singing, some chatting and two old soldiers relating stories of the war. At one table were mother and four daughters; at another a school teacher, a dressmaker and a bookkeeper were earning a little extr money in a pleasant way while on their vacations.

"Who's that sweet-faced girl they call Joy?" asked Joe.

"You needn't look at her. She's a bride earning some money for the new nest," said Mrs. Felsenthal.

Alicia said "Good-by" with sorrow and as they returned studied the purple, lavender and gray tints on the mountains. "How can I leave them?" she asked.

"There's no need," said Joe, slyly.

A YOUNG GARDENER.

Boy Aged Seven Years Who Won a Prize at the Recent Hollywood Flower Show.

Little Paul Mitchell of Hollywood is the youngest gardener in the State of California to receive public recognition of the worth of his work. This little chap, who is but 7 years old, was awarded a prize at the recent Hollywood flower show, for his exhibition of beautiful sweet peas.

All of his short life this little nature lover has been passionately fond of flowers, and during the Hollywood flower show last year he spent much of his time admiring the many beautiful specimens of flowers there.

The idea of becoming a little gardener himself, and entering his own flowers at a show, must have occurred to little Paul then, but he wisely kept his own counsel. Last November he secured a pick, which was about [illegible] the size of himself, and after much hard work succeeded in digging a trench, in which he planted sweet peas. The abundant rain of the past winter helped the little gardener, and the flowers thrived wonderfully well. By the latter part of April the vines were laden with blossoms, and the choicest of these were in full bloom just in time for the flower show, April 28.

Without consulting any one the little fellow carefully gathered his flowers and proceeded to the building in which the show was being held, and with boyish simplicity entered his treasures in the juvenile class of cut flowers. Great was his joy when, on the afternoon of the same day of the entry of his flowers, Paul was announced as a winner of one of the prizes offered to juvenile exhibitors, and presented with a beautiful spoon. The little boy prizes it very highly as a reward for his labor, although it was a labor of love. Paul is already planning to cultivate other flowers which he says he will enter in the show next year.

This little gardener is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Mitchell of No. 543 Rose street, Hollywood.

CLEVER YOUNG SINGERS.

Christ Church Choir Members Entertain With Delightful Operetta for Outing Fund.

The Juvenile Choir of Christ Church is composed of 100 girls and boys, ranging from ten to twenty years in age. It was organized three years ago by Mrs. Eugene Torrey with fifteen young singers. The choir is a vested one, and makes a pretty picture when singing at the Sunday-school services.

For two years this choir has sung at the evening services on the third Sunday of each month. Every summer the entire choir goes for an outing to one of the beaches, giving a musical in the spring of the year to defray the expense of this outing. Mrs. Torrey, the director of the choir, always goes along with these jolly boy and girl singers and helps them to have a good time.

The choir is divisioned into three parts for the outing, the smallest of the singers form the first batch to the beach, the intermediates next, and the big girls and boys last.

Last Thursday evening at the Gamut Club this choir presented a charming little opera, entitled "Fleuretta," in order to defray the expense of its outing this summer. The opera was given in a faultless manner and delighted the big audience which crowded the pretty auditorium, for this Juvenile Choir of Christ Church is a very popular organization.

The smallest boys of the choir contributed their effort to the evening's programme by giving the "Pajama Chorus." Clad in pink pajamas a score of them appeared and sang in a very fascinating manner. They were enthusiastically applauded. The girls' chorus, in "O Lovely Night," was one of the prettiest of the evening's offerings. Hazel Landeres and Hazel Rose and Alice Addis are the soloists of the choir.

Has a Tender Heart.

A little Los Angeles girl has made some observations which she sends to The Times. She is only a tiny girl, 12 years old, but she is already asking herself, why some things should be. Cruelty of any kind causes this little maiden deep pain for the victim, and great is her indignation against the one who causes the hurt. She writes: "My sister and I found a tiny kitten on the streets one day. A boy told us that a man had left it there. When we got home with it we begged mama so hard to keep it that she at last gave her consent.

"Shortly afterward our landlord spied the cat, and yelled at us, 'Whose cat is that? I don't allow cats or dogs in my house.'

"But we kept the cat anyway, and moved out of his house as soon as we could. But where we moved we found a mama cat and three fat little kittens, and the old mother cat took our kitten and mothered it, too. I guess it was because we were good to her and her own babies.

"The woman who lived in the house before us had thrown the box which was the kittens' home over the fence into a lot of tall pricklies, so we rescued the family, but here our landlady again did not allow cats on the premises. My little brother told her that if he knew where to find the person who threw the cats into the pricklies he would have her arrested. If they did not want the cats they could get rid of them in another way. We have added a baby dog to our family now. The poor little thing, too, was cast into the streets by some unthinking one.

"Folks who are unkind to dumb animals are rarely kind to other human beings, either. I heard one woman tell another who was sick and homeless that it wouldn't hurt any one to sleep out in this climate.

"My brother was run down once by an automobile, and his leg was hurt; the man got down and bound up my brother's leg and then told him to run home, he wasn't hurt much.

"I wish there were no cruel people in the world.

Birthday Party.

In honor of the sixth birthday anniversary of little Arthur Schaeffer, a delightful party was given by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Schaeffer of No. 1400 East Eighteenth street last Monday afternoon. From 3 o'clock to 5 o'clock, the little people had a jolly time playing games of all kinds, and then there was an enjoyable birthday supper served to them. The birthday cake stood in the center of the table and was a very beautiful affair, decorated with frosting, candies and six pretty candles.

Arthur's guests were Ione Sellars, Josephine Johnson, Geraldine Keough, Genevieve Mulligan, May Packer and Georgie and Ernest Quamiroux and Franklin Allain.

Children's Hospital Benefit.

For the benefit of the Florence Lawson room at the Children's Hospital, the Kindergarten Alumni will hold a May festival on the grounds of the William Workman residence, Saturday, May 15. Members of the Kindergarten Club will give an exhibition of Kindergarten games, and there will be a beautiful May-pole dance by the little kindergarten people themselves, besides other festivities popular during the month of May. Over 200 children will take part in the festival.

A feature of the festival will be the exhibition of a number of beautiful colored posters made by members of the Kindergarten Club, pupils of the Norman Training School, and of the Thirty-seventh-street School. These posters are now on exhibition in stores of the city, and at the clubhouses, and are truly works of art. The orchestra of the Kindergarten Club will furnish the music for the festival.

The Florence Lawson room at the Children's Hospital is to perpetuate the memory of the first kindergarten instructor of the Normal Training School in Los Angeles.

The Young Biologist.

But a boy, say six or seven,
By the lake I sat, my heaven,
'Cause my mother told me: "There!
All the babies come from there."

Saw frogs hopping, pebbles rolling,
Saw the glittering fish gamboling,
Storks in, wading on the edge,
Saw them frog and fishes catch.

And I waited, waited, waited,
For my longing to be sated,
Waited, stalking for my game—
Stork with baby never came.

Went away, went gravely doubting,
Went to mother, told her, pouting,
Mother said: "You mickle mite!
Storks catch babies in the night."

A Bumble-Bird Ballad.

Let us imagine, just for fun,
That when you children have begun
To study lessons for next day,
The Bumble-Bird comes 'round that way.

And, when his little friends he sees,
Of course, he makes such sounds as these,
Bumble, Bumble, and you, as usual, begin
To yell and make a horrid din.

You'd best be careful, girls and boys,
And try to stop your foolish noise,
Because, unless you do, some day
You'll scare the Bumble-Bird away.

Surprise Birthday Party.

Eleven little playmates, one to represent each of the happy years of the little hostess's life, attended a very jolly birthday party, given in honor of Sophia Abrams, during the week.

The party was arranged as a very happy surprise by the little lady's parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. Abrams of No. 917 Valencia street. A delicious spread was temptingly arranged for the young people, a huge birthday cake being the center of attraction, and the afternoon was spent in playing games, music and song.

RURAL PLACE BEAUTIFUL.

EARTH RANSACKED FOR COUNTRY HOME.

Huntington Coming Back to Behold Miracle—To Retire from Presidency of Pacific Electric—Harriman's Will—New Rumors of Wedding.

BY ERNEST BRAUNTON.

H. E. HUNTINGTON, the Napoleon of the trolley world, is soon coming to Los Angeles to see the wonders that have been worked in laying out his superb country home at Oak Knoll, one of the landscape marvels of the United States.

Although he gently and often denies the "soft impeachment," some of his friends declare that soon after the completion of this wonder-home, he will take to himself a wife—and that she will be none other than Mrs. Collis P. Huntington, the accomplished widow of his uncle, a lady of about his own years.

Mr. Huntington is expected to arrive in Los Angeles about May 28, two weeks from next Friday. On his coming, important railroad matters will claim his attention.

The control of the Pacific Electric Railway system has long been in the hands of Mr. Harriman, who owns 55 per cent. or 51 per cent. of the stock. Mr. Huntington is nominally the president of this great corporation. It is expected that in July or August or thereabouts he will formally retire.

The ultimate verdict in Pacific Electric matters has for some time rested with W. H. Herrin of San Francisco. It is well understood that Mr. Huntington is tired of acting as nominal president. At some time in the near future Mr. Harriman will designate a man to succeed him This arrangement will be agreeable to both magnates.

Coming Soon to His Beautiful New Home.

H. E. Huntington, trolley magnate and empire builder, who is expected to return from New York within a few weeks to supervise completion of his charming country residence, and about whom there is some interesting gossip.

Out San Gabriel way where the tempered sea breezes woo the weary traveler to restful slumber, where the air is heavy with the fragrance of orange bloom, where the slope of the valley floor from the near-by mountains toward the Puente Hills forms a picturesque setting for the gems of knolls a great home is in the making.

Here on a large tract acquired by H. E. Huntington for that purpose the multi-millionaire railway man is establishing a residence for which many parts of the world are contributing their special attractions. Trees and shrubs from faraway lands are being placed with a view to harmonious appearance in the aggregate.

Nearly eleven miles northeast from Los Angeles lies what is known to old-time residents as the Shorb Ranch, the home of the well-known Shorb family for more than two-score years. At present its location is best described as lying on the left as one approaches San Marino station on the Pacific Electric Railway, this point being where the Monrovia and Sierra Madre lines diverge from a common trunk.

The ranch at present consists of 468 acres of the finest landscape scenery in the world—the gem of the famous foothill belt of the San Gabriel Valley. Upon this beautiful estate there are thousands of native oaks of at least three species, among them some of the largest and most picturesque to be found in the South. Other than these there are great numbers of native trees and shrubs and the lower benches of tillable land are covered with orchards of oranges, walnuts, pecans and other fruits.

LIKE THOUSANDS OF ACRES.

The topography is very rough and so well balanced with hill and dale, plain, plateau, and cañon deep that one is led to believe, as he drives over the nine miles of fine new roads, that he is traversing an estate of several thousand acres. The charm of the natural landscape is still further enhanced by myriads of wild flowers and ferns which at this season are at their best and a pleasing and unusual variety is lent the whole by "a little babbling brook" which meanders

STOLEN BANK CASH BACK.

Conscience-Stricken Man and Woman Return Missing Twelve Thousand.

Through two stricken consciences the last $12,000 of the $29,000 stolen from the First National Bank of Monrovia five months ago has been voluntarily returned, according to a report now under investigation by the Sheriff. The money was taken to the Farmers' and Merchants' National Bank by a husband and wife into whose keeping it had been given by Charles S. Martin, one of the confessed robbers who is understood to have planned the crime. Because of their proven desire to do the right thing the authorities do not disclose the names of the man and woman, who live in this city.

It was supposed that Hathaway, the one robber who has not been captured, had the $12,000, but it seems that Martin had the lion's share of the loot, including this. He persuaded a man and woman of his acquaintance to agree to hold it for him until he should get his freedom and be able to reclaim it, and they kept it intact until smitten with the conviction that they were parties to a crime.

J. A. Graves, vice-president and manager of the Farmers' and Merchants' National Bank, the institution to which it is asserted the money was delivered, made the following statement yesterday:

"If that money is in the bank I do not know of it. We have heard reports about the missing money from the Monrovia bank, but I believe that these reports deal with the former loot secured by the officers and now held in custody by Sheriff Hammel, pending the disposition to be made by the court."

WHERE?

WANTS ARMORY NEARER CENTER

PARK SITE NOT SUITABLE, SAYS GEN. WANKOWSKI.

Declares New Home of National Guard Should Not Be Placed on State Agricultural Grounds Because of Distance from City's Heart.

National Guardsmen in Los Angeles hope some generous and public-spirited citizen or citizens will donate a central site for the proposed armory. They object to the building for which the State has authorized an appropriation of $100,000 being located in Agricultural Park. It is too far out, they say, and will tend to discourage young men from joining the organization.

"We want the armory located close in, if possible," said Gen. Robert Wankowski yesterday. "It should be north of Washington street. There would be no objection to locating it east of Main street, providing it is not taken too far from the center of the city.

The site should be at least 250x300 feet. That would give us adequate room for a drill hall. We hope some one will come forward with an offer of a site. There is $100,000 waiting for the erection of a building that will be a credit to any locality.

"It is not a matter of expense, but of convenience, so far as the guardsmen are concerned. Under an amendment to the law passed at the recent session of the Legislature every guardsman will be paid 25 cents for each drill night, provided he attends 80 per cent. of the drills in a year. So you see the objection to the location of the armory in Agricultural Park is not because of extra car fare that might have to be paid.

"The objection is solely on account of the distance of the park from the center of the city, and the time that would be consumed by gardsmen getting to it. Most of them are employed in factories, shops and stores, and many of them would not be able to go home for their evening meal and get to the armory in time for drill.

"For the good of the National Guard, therefore, the new armory should be located as near as possible to the heart of the city. We do not expect any one to donate a site in the business district, because land is too valuable there. But it should be as close in as possible."

The donation of such a site as Gen. Wankowski suggests would represent a cash gift of from $50,000 up, say real estate men. It is hardly believed that the big lot desired could be obtained "close in" for the amount named.

The requirement, according to Gen. Wankowski, is a building area of at least 75,000 square feet, or ten city lots, each 50x150. It might be that a group of lots could be found in such a location as Gen. Wankowski deems desirable, but it is believed that their value would go far beyond $5000 each.

Even if a desirable central site for the armory could be found, the question is, who would pay for it. There is some hope that improvement associations of various sections will take up the matter and enter into rivalry for the armory, much as owners of property on North Main street got together to secure the new Federal building for their part of the city, and as they proposed to do to secure the location of the municipal building in that section.

There is said to be a possibility that these same people will get behind a movement to secure the armory.

TWO PAINTERS FALL.

F. L. Johnson and Charles White, painters, were painfully injured yesterday morning while painting a building at No. 1618 Rockwood street. A small scaffold on which they were working slipped and they fell thirty feet to the ground. Johnson sustained a fracture of the left arm and leg, and White suffered a sprained back and numerous cuts and bruises. They were treated at the Receiving Hospital.

WHO'S GUILTY.

QUIET TIP IS CAUSING STIR.

Police Wondering How Their Plans Are Known.

Notorious Houses Warned of Purposed Raids.

Only One Exception in the Last Three Years.

The "quiet tip!"

It worked with the virulence of vaccine again, last Wednesday night, in opposing police efficiency. It balked the well laid and supposedly secret plans for raids against several notorious assignation houses, leaving an ugly scar on the arm of the law. The history of "tipped off" raids for several years past repeated itself.

Police officials high in authority do not deny that the "quiet tip" was given. They have information that the four houses on which the ban was placed were given information of the contemplated raids. They have information that one of the houses was to be sacrificed but the others saved. The house to be sacrificed would be the one raided first. At the first approach of the police, word was to be flashed to the others "to get under cover." Somehow, plans went wrong and the Manhattan was the only one of the places to escape. That the Manhattan had been given the word was evidenced by the tomb-like aspect of the place when the raid took place. As a result of the "quiet tip," police "higher ups" are asking themselves pertinent questions.

What is the medium through which the "quiet tip" reaches the underground from the department? Why did the specially detailed police squad, when it crashed through the entrances of that resort of the fashionably wicked, find the usually gay place practically deserted? Why was the front door closed during the evening? Why were men and women, who came on foot, in cabs and in automobiles, turned away? Why could entrance be gained only through a hole in the wall in the alley, which leads to an elevator and which could be known only to habitues of the place? Why, when the peace officers forced their way through this door, was the leader compelled to draw a revolver on the elevator attendant to gain access to the inner domain?

DINING-ROOMS EMPTY.

Why, too, were the private dining-rooms on the second floor empty, when on any other night late comers were usually forced to wait until predecessors departed or were compelled to occupy living rooms on the upper floors? Of these living room floors there are four, so that in that regard there was scarcely any night that the supply could not equal the demand?

Why were only a scant dozen persons found in the place by the police when at that time of night the place is usually crowded? Why were half of the Japanese servants in bed? Why was one of the managers in his room—lights turned on bright, undressed, in bed, but with wooden leg unremoved?

Why also did the Manhattan alone receive the tip? Were the Boston and the Bacon "double crossed," if they carried out an agreement that whichever house was raided first would notify the others? Did the Manhattan profit by the lapse of a minute or two? Were the Boston and Bacon sacrificed that Jim Dunne's customers might be saved?

These are only minor questions. The big one is: Are there policemen who are systematically "tipping off" department business when it relates to the control of the underworld? If such a coterie exists in the police department, by what influence has it been maintained there?

It was noticeable that Jim Dunne, who conducts the Manhattan and has given it his attention since he closed his chowder house on Second street, did not appear at the "joint," or at the jail after his numerous servants and guests were arrested.

OFFICIALS WONDER.

Police who are near the throne wonder why Jim Hale's place on Second street—the Boston—was allowed to be riddled while running full bast. Jim Hale has been a power about City Hall. Many times he has only said the word to have his man appointed to office. About two years ago, a blockade was placed on Jim's place. A policeman stood at the door and exacted the name of every person who entered. This continued only a short while and since then, Jim has run his place "wide open."

The Bacon had no political pull. John Foster, the proprietor, until recently was cook in a café. His friends advertised the place as "quiet" and that word was sufficient.

The Manhattan, however, has been notorious for years. It flourished as the Bisbee Inn. About three years ago a young woman, dancing on a table in a similar resort, fell from her uncertain stage and died from her injuries. There was a wave of public indignation and many joints were closed. Among them was the Manhattan, the license of which was revoked by the Police Commission. Jim Dunne then conducted it. The commission refused to give another license to Dunne. Finally an agreement was reached whereby a license would be given to the building on the understanding that the new managers were men from San Francisco. The license was granted, and soon the fine hand of Dunne was seen in the management. It was run by him as a "feeder" for his Second-street chowder house.

LUXURIOUS APPOINTMENTS.

The Manhattan is a magnificently-appointed six-story brick building at No. 115 East Third street. There are numerous entrances on the ground floor. Entering from the street, one comes to a splendidly appointed grill, small and cozy. To the left is an ordinary appearing elevator. Parties coming in autos and cabs can step from an alley directly into the elevator cage and be whisked to rooms upstairs.

On the second floor are the private dining-rooms, luxuriously furnished, with Japs ready to answer at every beck and call. There are no white employés except the clerk. He remains behind a wire cage. In the room next him is a wonderfully stocked barroom from which the police, Wednesday night, took many specimens of liquors.

On the next four floors are all bedrooms. There are dozens of them, making a good-sized hotel. The interiors are extremely inviting and cozy. In days past, one did not need to register in the book which is kept in that peculiar alley elevator to gain access to these rooms, but recently it has been otherwise. The book would make Ananias throw his best efforts into the furnace.

Police officials last night, would not talk about the "quiet tip." Yet it was enough when one with stars and bars on his shoulders remarked. "One of the raids was begun about one minute too soon."

In three years or more only one raid has been "pulled off" wherein there have not been an indication of the "quiet tip." That was when Haddock's Bohemian Club in the Germain building was raided, recently.

HEALTHFUL?

ONE WILL END FAST TOMORROW.

COVINA MEN HUNGER FOR MORE THAN A MONTH.

Both of the Ranchers Who Are Undergoing Long Period Without Food Are Greatly Reduced in Weight—Overholtzer Walks Unsteadily and His Voice Is Weak.

Gaunt and hollow-eyed with a total fast of thirty-three days and nights, David Overholtzer, a Covina rancher, walked into the office of Dr. J. D. Reed yesterday afternoon and told his physician that he will end the long period of hunger on Monday. At the same time Perry Bashore, another Covina rancher, who is keeping the fast with his friend, and who has now been thirty days without food, stated that he was still strong and will continue until his system warns him that it is time to revert to natural methods of living.

Overholtzer's walk is a trifle unsteady and his voice weak. He has dropped in weight from 145 to 118 pounds. Bashore has depreciated in weight from his original 219 pounds to 170 pounds.

Bashore says he does not crave food. Overholtzer is resorting to his couch frequently during the day. Bashore said that he was not sleeping as well as when he began his fast.

"I am positive that not a mouthful of food has passed the lips of these men since they began this fast," said the physician. "Every indication points to this fact. The complete emaciation in the case of Overholtzer, and the remarkable change in Bashore shows beyond dispute that the systems are greatly ravaged for want of food. The tongues of the two men are heavily coated and the breath is foul."

Both of the men abstaining from food are wealthy orange ranchers in Covina and members of the Brethren Church. Much water is consumed by both patients.

NOT ONE-SIDED.

DEMURRAGE LAW DEALS JUSTLY.

SHIPPERS AND RAILROADS ALIKE HELD RESPONSIBLE.

Penalties for Failure to Furnish Cars When Ordered and for Delay in Unloading—No Shortage Now, Although as Much Business Is Done as Two Years Ago.

"There is no shortage of cars here now, and the railroads are doing about as much business as they did in 1907 when there was so much complaint about lack of transportation facilities," said F. P. Gregson, traffic manager of the Los Angeles Jobbers Association, yesterday.

"The new reciprocal demurrage law will go into effect June 18 and the shippers of California expect it will be of great benefit to them in times when the facilities of the railroads are severely taxed. Gov. Gillett did not sign the bill until he had secured the opinions of many shippers and had convinced himself that the measure will be largely to their benefit. Local shippers are very prompt in unloading cars. There was probably not more than $2500 demurrage charged against them during the month of April.

"Under the new law the railroads will have to be just as prompt as the shippers. It provides that if an order for ten, or a smaller number of cars is not filled within five days, the railroad company shall forfeit $5 a day for each car that it fails to furnish. For an order of ten to fifty cars, the railroads will be given fifteen days in which to place them at the point of loading before demurrage can be claimed.

"Besides fixing this reciprocal demurrage, the new law also establishes a uniform rate of demurrage to be collected by the railroads from shippers who fail to unload their cars promptly. Heretofore the roads have made a distinction between tank cars for oil and cars for other traffic. Demurrage of $3 a day has been assessed for failing to unload tanks within forty-eight hours later they are spotted on the tracks. On other cars, the amount has been $1 a day after twenty-four hours. A charge of $6 a day for all cars is fixed by the new law and shippers are given forty-eight hours in which to unload."

Upon request of counsel for the Southern Pacific, and by consent of the shippers, the hearing by the Interstate Commerce Commission in Los Angeles of the case involving switching charges has been postponed from May 14 to May 19. This will be the final sitting of Master Commissioner Ledderman for the taking of testimony. Arguments will be heard later in Washington. Railroad men and shippers throughout the entire country are interested in the outcome of this case. Shippers are resisting the payment of a charge of $2.50 per car, made by the railroads here and at San Francisco for placing cars on sidetracks. The plaintiffs claim the through rates cover switching charges and that the defendants have no right to collect any extra amount.

SLUGGED IN NORTH.

Los Angeles Man Robbed and Seriously Injured in Encounter With Highwaymen in San Francisco.

Frank Scott, a Los Angeles machinist, is in a critical condition at the Central Emergency Hospital, San Francisco, as a result of injuries sustained in a fight with highwaymen in the northern city yesterday morning.

Scott left Los Angeles to attend some business in San Francisco. He arrived there a few days ago. Early yesterday morning as he was returning to his lodging-house he was attacked by footpads. When he resisted they slashed and hacked him about the face and head with knives and then robbed him of $20.50.

THE OIL INDUSTRY.

PALMER WELL IS A WONDER.

Reopening to Have Been a Great Event.

Capped by Big Cement Block to Hold in Flow.

Stendel Number One May Be Equally as Good.

The breaking out of the great Palmer well in Cat Cañon, Santa Maria, after being shut in for some two weeks while the great sumpholes and tanks were being emptied again draws attention to that great wonder of California. So big is this gusher that the eastern oil man's mind seems incapable of grasping it. The well was capped by an enormous block of solid cement eight feet in height placed right over the top of the pipe. The pressure upon this was reckoned at some 400 pounds to the inch when The Times reporter visited the property on Thursday.

The well broke loose on Friday evening, according to the dispatches. That it should have lifted the huge block seems incredible. It was anticipated on Thursday that this would be removed in a day or two and preparations were then on for that event which was looked forward to with anticipation all over the vast field. Quite a few in the older district and in town were keeping posted with a view to going in automobiles eighteen to twenty miles to see it start again. It seems probable that an attempt was made to let the well out partly and it passed entirely beyond control.

The Oil City Derrick, the organ of Pennsylvania oil, that lays claim to being a special authority on the industry but which never reaches beyond Oklahoma, recently declared flatly that it was impossible for statements published about this well to be true; as, for instance, it insists that a flow of 4000 barrels daily through a four-inch pipe is beyond belief. The Derrick's statement simply arouses derision among those who know the facts, for what it declares impossible is known to all to be actually short of literal truth.

The Palmer has earthen sumpholes for some 40,000 barrels, two completed steel tanks of 10,000 capacity each and two others of like size nearly finished. The quantity of sand that comes with the oil fills the storage in a few months to depths of ten to twelve feet. The shut-down was to get an opportunity of cleaning the sumpholes so they could be utilized as well as to get rid of the oil.

OTHER PALMER WELLS.

The Palmer company has just cemented its Biochman No. 2 an eighth of a mile from the gusher at 1725 and it will be drilled to greater depths at once. The flow is expected at about the same depth. Number 3 on the same lease is just starting. The gusher is officially Biochman No. 1.

The Stendel No. 1 of the same company some two miles east is about to come in at 3300 feet. The company's men say they look for another gusher as great or greater perhaps than the Biochman. Its indications are superior to the Biochman's at the same stage.

The Mission Oil Company, owned by the same people, is rigging to drill a second hole, the first having been lost through collapse of the casing at 1100 feet. This is about a quarter of a mile from the gusher.

The gusher is finished in oil sand at 2300 feet. The product is about 16 gravity. It appears to be getting a trifle lighter as it comes out, but, of course, storage quickly lowers this.

If the expectations as to the Stendel are fulfilled, more transportation and storage must be provided with a rush. Today two eight-inch pipe lines are barely able to handle the first's output, and they extend no farther. There is talk of another pipe line; perhaps the new Associated carrier from McKittrick to Gaviota will go through this region, but that is some time off, even if it comes. Paralleling the present line is more likely, it would seem, as a means of quick relief.

R. C. Andre, formerly manager of a large eastern company, has just been appointed superintendent at the Palmer. He comes last from Coalinga, where he was employed.

THE UNION'S WELLS.

Just beyond the Palmer's Biochman lease the Union has five strings on the Bell ranch and a sixth rig is going up. No. 1, in oil sand at 2700 feet, is nearest the Palmer line; No. 2, half a mile south, is at 2500, in oil sand; No. 3, a quarter of a mile east of No. 2, is down 2200, approximately; No. 4, the same distance north of No. 3, is down 1500, and No. 5, to the east of No. 4, is 500 deep.

Two 35,000-gallon steel tanks are about finished by the Union. If its wells do as good as expected, large facilities will be needed very quickly. Of course, it is purely speculation as to what they will come to. There is some unconfirmed talk of twelve more rigs planned at once. It is likely, however, that this action will depend upon present results. It would be ridiculous to rush work faster than the product can be handled.

The chances of the Standard building to Cat Cañon are not considered at all at this time. The oil is a fuel proposition, so far, and the Standard takes only 20 gravity and better in this field.

OTHER DEVELOPMENT.

The Dome has two strings and a rig on its tract, sandwiched between the Palmer and the Union.

About a mile east of the Palmer's Biochman lease the new Pennsylvania is down some 900 feet on its No. 1, and was setting the fifteen-inch stovepipe casing last week, the start having been with seventeen-and-a-half-inch. The lease is eighty acres.

Adjoining and but a few feet from the New Pennsylvania, the West Oil Company of San Luis Obispo, of which Thomas Norton, City Attorney of that municipality, is president, is down 300 feet.

Nearly a mile farther east and west of the Stendel lease, the Henderson and Brooks companies have each a string busy. The first is down 2300 and the second 2200, both approximately.

At the Great Palmer Gusher in Cat Canyon.

Oil is pouring into this sump hole through a submerged pipe at the rate of four thousand barrels a day, causing the disturbance plainly seen on the surface.

MISSIONARY

NOTED WOMAN ARRIVES HERE.

FOUNDRESS OF SISTERS OF THE SACRED HEART.

Mother Cabrini to Take Work of Orphans in Order's Care to Seattle Exposition—Prominent Members of Both Sexes Meet Her at Station. Her Accomplishments.

Mother Francis Xavier Cabrini, foundress and superior general of the Missionary Sisters of the Sacred Heart, arrived in Los Angeles yesterday afternoon, to inspect the home of her order, established in this city, about four years ago and located at No. 610 North Hill street. She is accompanied by a sister and was met at the depot by Mother Ignatius, of the local orphanage and home; Mrs. Luigi Del Orto, wife of the Italian Consular Agent; Rev. Father Bucci, of the Italian church, and a number of other priests and lay people.

This is the mother's first visit to Los Angeles since the establishment of a branch of the Sisters of the Sacred Heart in this city. She will remain for several weeks to assist in the work which has been carried on for the benefit of the Italian orphan children and those of other nationalities.

It is only twenty-seven years since the order of the Sisters of the Sacred Heart was founded, by Mother Cabrini, under the approbation of Pope Leo XIII. Since then fifty-two houses have been established in Europe, and North and South America. These include orphanages, colleges for girls and young women, hospitals and day schools. The principal center of work in this country is New York City, where the order has four establishments and where the American head of the order is located.

Mother Cabrini came here from New Orleans, where the Sisters of the Sacred Heart have a magnificent orphanage and where more than 100 children are cared for at present. In Los Angeles, the order takes care of fifty children in its orphanage and conducts a day school for Italian youngsters.

The mother will secure some of the work of the children of the home for exhibition at the coming Seattle exposition. In a recent Milan exposition, the work of orphans in care of the Sacred Heart order won the premiums offered and it is expected that some of the creations of the Los Angeles children will please the public.

From here, Mother Cabrini, who has spent the entire time since founding the order in travel, will proceed to San Francisco, where there is another branch of the society. After a short sojourn there, she will proceed to Seattle.

GRIM COMPETITON.

CONVENIENT TIME TO DIE IS NOW.

BARGAINS IN TOMBSTONES ARE OFFERED BY RIVALS.

One-Time Dignified Business Swept Into Stream of Modern Commercialism—Money Can Be Saved on Cemetery Decorations as on Clothes and Cigars.

"Bargains in tombstones, did you say? Yes Sir-e-e! And why not? I don't see any reason why a man shouldn't save money on a tombstone just the same as on a suit of clothes."

Thus quoth a stout and rotund-faced stone-cutter as he dropped his mallet and chisel, shook his dust-covered apron and looked over his spectacles at his questioner. Then, with the air of a man who has delivered himself of something of real importance, he folded his arms and, leaning against a granite shaft, surveyed with evident pride the rows of monuments that stood about.

He was one of the rival dealers, whose plants are located opposite a local cemetery, and who are in the throes of a trade war. Over the door of one shop is the statement: "Positively closing out," which the casual passerby would construe as an invitation to a sacrifice sale. Posted over the door of an adjoining shop is the sign: "Positively not closing out," with the word "not" in such large letters that the meaning could not possibly be misunderstood. Just below are these words: "Discount on all tombstones for 90 days;" and "Come in and see for yourself."

But these announcements do not convey an adequate idea of the intense rivalry that has grown out of this unique fight for business. The competitors are on continuous watch and the pedestrian who halts to read the placards is lucky indeed if he escapes being dragged into one or the other of the shops. When one rival "collars" a possible buyer, the other is on the alert to lassoo the visitor when he makes a dash for the street.

Were Mark Twain to wander into the vicinity of this novel trade war he would probably remark: "This is a most convenient time to die."

As the philosopher of the mallet and chisel remarked that he could not see any reason why a man shouldn't save money on a tombstone as he would on a suit of clothes; so it might be said that there is no reason why a man should not rest just as long and as peacefully under a stone marked down from $50 to $49.99 as under one for which his heirs (regretfully, perhaps, if not tearfully) paid full price.

But the obvious feature of this tombstone war is not its grim humor, after all; but the emphasis that it places on the march of progress. The tombstone business which has been running in a rut from time immemorial, has at last yielded to the invasion of up-to-date methods. Dealers have resisted the temptation of bargain-counter ideas simply because they feared that such a display of commercialism would shock the sensibilities of prospective patrons. The tombstone man, like the undertaker, has stood for ages on his dignity, preferring to rely upon an appeal to some vulnerable point in man's sentimental nature to sell his wares. Now he is being cut away from his ancient moorings and will be swept along in the great commercial tide with the butcher, the baker, and the candlestick maker.

It is no sacrilege, as some timorous, fearful souls would make believe, to sell tombstones and caskets like other wares. It is true a tombstone is not a necessity and there are many who will plead that it be kept sacred from the grasp of commercialism. But man's foibles and follies live after him and the cemetery is often their abiding place. John Jones will, in centuries to come, want a bigger stone planted over his grave than marks the resting place of his lamented rival, John Smith. And if the heirs must part with a portion of the late lamented's cash, there is the prospect that the parting will be easier if they know they have driven a bargain in providing the stone.

SURPRISE FOR HIM.

William T. Holmes of No. 413 Temple street, an employé in the office of the County Assessor, whose birthday anniversary occurred yesterday, was surprised by his colleagues in the office. Just what birthday it was is neither here nor there, but his desk was covered with a beautiful collection of flags and flowers, with strips of bunting to give it a picturesque appearance. The women in the office contributed much to the success of the pleasant affair.

REATAS OUT FOR HORSE THIEVES.

CITY AND COUNTY OFFICERS ON THEIR TRAIL.

More Than a Score of Animals Recovered in the Past Week and a Large Quantity of Harness Traced. Methods Employed by the Rustlers Operating About Here.

For the first time in the history of Los Angeles men from the Sheriff's office and the police force are operating as partners for the suppression of wholesale horse and cattle stealing.

A number of small gangs, composed chiefly of men from Arizona and the Imperial country, are playing havoc in the county and getting away with many head of stock from the city corrals and stables.

It is to put an end to these depredations that Officer Frank Mack of the police department and Deputy Sheriff Harry Wright are working together. For the past week these officers have worked night and day riding through the county in buggies trailing missing horses. They have recovered more than a score of horses and traced a large quantity of harness.

Unlike the gangs of the range country, the horse thieves of this district take buggy or saddle horses, saddles, harness, buggies and everything they can get their hands on.

Many of the thefts in the city are known as curbstone raids. A member of the gang sees a good-looking horse and rig hitched or anchored on one of the downtown streets. He looks around to see that the owner is not in sight and then steps into the buggy and drives away.

The officers have a difficult time in trailing such thefts. The raider generally disposes of his loot as soon as possible. He sells the horse to a farmer or horse dealer, usually at a lower figure than the animal is worth and yet at a large profit to himself, considering the amount of labor necessary to acquire the property.

The farmer or horse dealer imagines that he is driving a good bargain and making a large slice of money and is only too anxious to pay over the money, take the stock and get a bill of sale which the horse thief readily makes out, signed with a fictitious name.

The buggy, wagon or other vehicle is also sold in the country at a low price. It is an easy matter to dispose of harness. Almost every farmer wants harness of some description. The second-hand stores and some pawn shops will take it and a good deal finds its way to small harness shops, and even big ones for that matter, because there is a constant call for second-hand leather goods. Harness valued at several hundred dollars has been recovered by the officers in the past week.

In the country the thefts are accomplished in the old western way. Cut out a fence at night, round up a string of likely looking horses and drive them out, herd them and pass them along at a fast trip to get them out of the county and sell them to the first ranchman that needs horses—that is the style. A number of head of cattle have been rustled in the same way.

Horse traders in Los Angeles have also suffered by thieves taking the animals from the corrals at night from under the very noses of the horse guards.

The gangs rarely number more than three or four members, according to the officers. In many instances a lone thief carries out his game to good advantage. Generally the thieves are ranch hands from Arizona, who have learned the trick of rustling from experts and are content to pick up a little money on the side as they move through a country.

Several local stables have reported the theft of saddles and horses. A man will rent a horse for an afternoon and ride away. Some of them do not care to take a risk by selling a horse. In such instances the saddle is taken off, the horse turned loose and the saddle sold.

MOTHER.

Who kissed my baby tears away
And hushed my childish fears?
Who loving watched me day by day,
Whilst onward sped the years?

Who thought, and toiled, and prayed for me,
When lured by wayward youth,
Not knowing man's infirmity—
I turned from Right and Truth?

Who won my heart and mind once more
With patient love divine,
To honor duty as of yore—
To seek life pure and fine?

'Tis mother man shall praise this day,
The mother-soul revere;
For though the body pass away,
Her spirit bideth here.

To Mother memory turns this hour,
To mother faithful, true.
Both young and old, a sweet white flower,
Their tribute—bring to you.

MILL AWAITED.

Market Thus to Be Furnished Is Needed for Lower Grade Ore.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

RAWHIDE (Nev.) May 7.—The camp is waiting for the completion of the King Heisner mill to afford a market for ores that will not stand shipping, and it is expected that the builders will begin laying their concrete foundations some time this week. Some difficulty was encountered in the construction of the pipe line, which proved defective in the joints to such an extent that over half a mile of the tubing had to be discarded. The mill's promoters say that they will treat ore as low as $10 at a profit, and if this promise is verified the camp will receive quite an impetus. The policy will be to run a certain percentage of this low grade to encourage development, but the real saving will be on freight rates that are in the vicinity of $10 to $15 a ton.

The Grutt Balloon Hill continues the sensation with a shipment during the week that ran $300 per ton. The Grutt Mining Company seems to have centered on an immense body on the Marigold claim that furnishes sure high grade. The new shaft is down twenty-two feet and the owners are sacking three tons per day that is almost identical with that of the Grutt Balloon Hill that runs at the rate of twenty ounces.

Dr. E. A. Wheeler of Goldfield, associated with Denver capital, has taken over the Reynolds Ogilvie lease of the Queen state, and has opened six feet on the apex of Balloon Hill that from careful sampling from a sixteen-foot hole gives returns of one ounce. Work will be vigorously prosecuted from this lease, which has three years to run, with a 15 and 20 per cent. royalty.

STIFF FINE FOR DRUGGIST.

Frank Sohn, a druggist of No. 1924 East Ninth street, was fined $350 by Justice Frederickson in Police Court yesterday on charges of violating the liquor law and selling drugs without a prescription. Sohn pleaded guilty as charged Friday morning. He was fined $200 on the liquor complaint and $150 more because he sold morphine without a prescription.

SOUTH PASADENA.

SOUTH PASADENA, May 8.—Mrs. A. Ewart of Long Beach and Mrs. May McNeil of Pomona are the guests of Mrs. G. W. Lawyer of No. 1211 Monterey Road.

Ralph Rogers appeared before the Trustees, at their last meeting, to point out the alleged necessity for an increase in the water rates in this city. He declared that unless there is an increase the Lincoln Park Company would have to go out of business. He asked for a meter rate of $1.50 for 800 feet and 8 cents for each additional 100 feet. As there has been a good deal of complaint on the part of Lincoln Park water users, the board decided to look into the matter before taking action.

Mrs. Edward Hobert and daughter, Ruth, of Marengo and Oak streets, have gone to Belmont to attend the commencement exercises of the Belmont school. Mrs. Robert's son, John, is a member of the senior class.

The cesspool diggers of South Pasadena are considering the question of applying to the Trustees for a license ordinance for protection. When business is light, the plasterers and bricklayers, they say, dig cesspools.

Mr. and Mrs. R. D. List and their two daughters, Helen and Ruth, of No. 155 Pasadena avenue, have started for Boston, via Panama. They are going East to be present at the graduation of their eldest daughter, Augusta,

Editorial Pen Points

Good morning, mother! Many happy returns.

Do the stepmothers and the mothers-in-law get in, too?

Today we sing the praises of mother, God bless and keep her!

"Cuba should be grateful," declares the Philadelphia Press. But is Cuba not a republic?

It is not a question of "Where did he get it?" in the case of Morse, but a question of "What did he do with it?"

Instead of singing "Mother, mother, mother, pin a rose on me," switch it around a little and pin the rose on mother.

Perhaps it is just as well that all attempts to muffle the Fourth of July have been in vain. No patriotism, no noise.

A "killing frost" is predicted for Missouri on May 24, next. If it comes true the pawpaw crop will be totally ruined.

The Chinese in China have organized what they call "The Chinese American Friends Society." Bully for old friend China!

In the Elks' fiesta parade of nations Ireland will be represented, of course, although she is a nation only by common consent.

In China the mother rules everything and everybody. It might be all the better for us if the same rule were in force in this country.

Beauty is a matter of education. For example, the Abyssinians do not think a woman is beautiful unless she weighs at least 240 pounds.

We can see how much Mr. Taft loves us since he is willing to come and pay his own expenses out of a purse that isn't any too fat, at best.

A grave problem faces the railways of the United States. And it is how to carry all these Elks who are already buying tickets for Los Angeles?

Dropping from a fortune of $22,000,000 to bankruptcy and jail marks Mr. Morse as the champion toboggan-slide financier of the present generation.

Rumors are persistent that Carter Harrison will be the Democratic candidate for President in 1912. He would carry the bungalow colony of Pasadena solid.

Every day that a settlement of the tariff is delayed costs the business of this country $10,000,000, according to an authority. The Senate should hump itself.

Apparently the atheists who have been ruling France are about at the end of their string. The Joan of Arc celebration at Lyons marks the reaction.

Think of the mothers there have been in this world—the mother of Napoleon, the mother of Lincoln, but, above all, the mother of the Wanderer of Galilee!

The Young Turks now demand that Abdul Hamid shall cough up a matter of some $200,000,000 which they suspect he still has in his jeans. We wish them luck.

You never can tell about anything. Just as France was being touted as the happiest and most prosperous nation in the world, trouble hit her like a load of brick.

This being Mothers' Day, let us enjoy it to the full in order that we may be in the humor to make tomorrow and the next day and every other day Mothers' Day, just the same.

When the hundreds of thousands of visitors who will come this summer from the East to Los Angeles return home, think of all the other visitors they will drive out here next winter.

It is reported that Gov. John A. Johnson desires to go to the United States Senate from Minnesota. He can have it if he wants it; or anything else that Minnesota has to give, for that matter.

Henry Watterson declares that no man can be either a Prohibitionist or a Protectionist and remain a Democrat. Leaving both these considerations out, how can a man remain a Democrat, anyway?

A man has been found dead under a snowslide in Colorado. We have no doubt that many more cases of this character will come to light when the spring opens up in Colorado about next July.

In Argentina and France May Day was characterized by riots and bombs, but it seems that in the eastern portions of the United States nothing worse than numerous cases of pneumonia occurred.

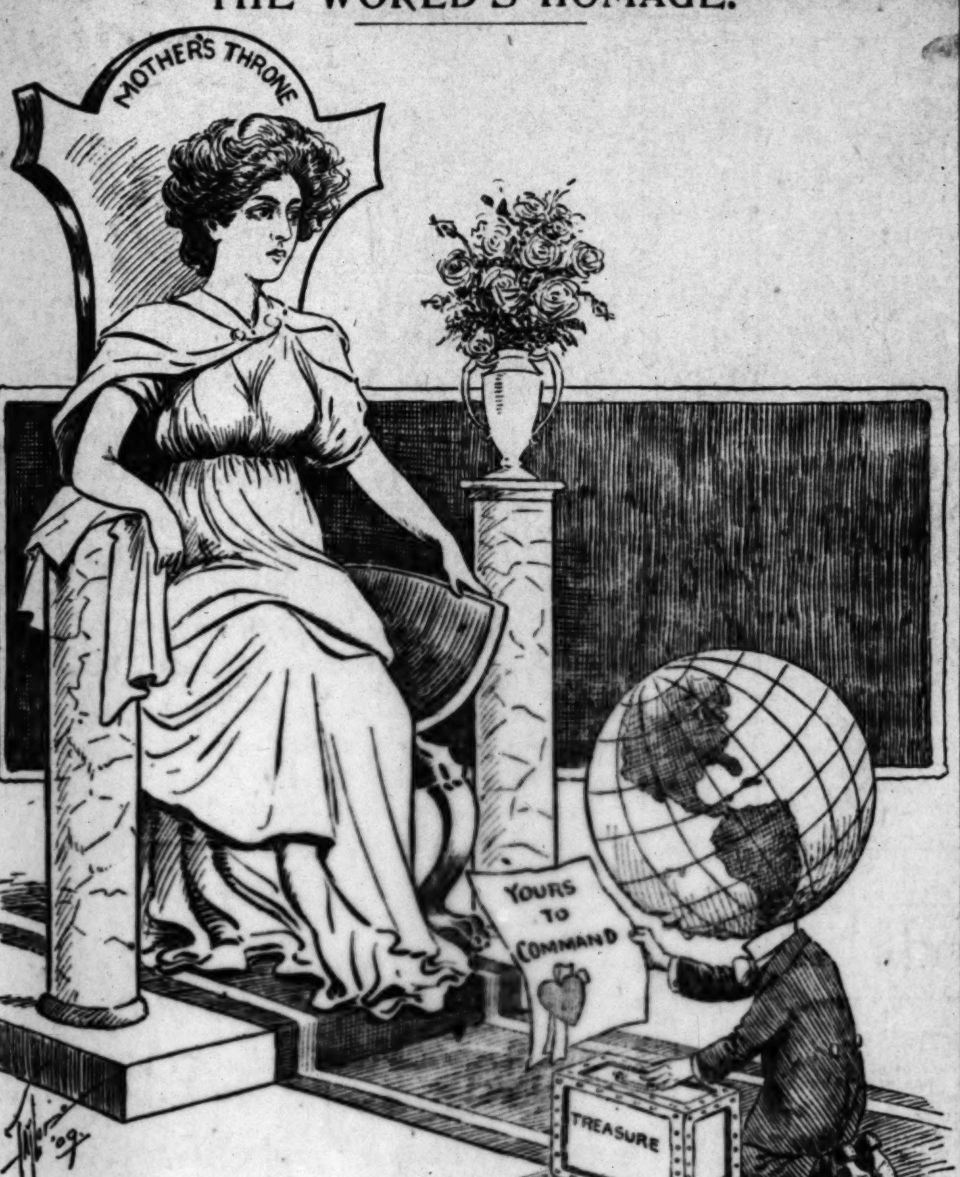
The last Grand Army man will be with us for some time yet, and don't you forget it. Just think of that old soldier back East who is celebrating, at 60 years of age, the arrival of a lusty infant son of his own.

The kidnaping business appears to have assumed alarming proportions all over the country. If we are to continue to hang murderers, there is no good reason why we should not use the same ropes for kidnapers.

The Washington Star thinks that former Vice-President Fairbanks has done remarkably well in keeping before the public. And recently he thrilled the country by announcing that he is to make his home in Southern California.

What is this we hear about Miss Bogue of San Francisco being the most beautiful girl in California? Shucks! We have at least 4000 girls in Los Angeles who are forty times more beautiful than any San Francisco girl.

THE WORLD'S HOMAGE.



RECRUITS OF THE REPUBLIC.

We are again in that pleasant and uplifting time of the year when the schools are preparing for their commencement exercises. Promotions are in order. That wonderful thing in life, known as "a step higher," is absorbing the youth of the land. Here and there stand those who are palm-crowned with victory, diplomas in hand, life's great battles stretching before them, and school days forever done.

We are all deeply interested in these affairs because these children are either our children or else they are those who bring back to us the long lost springtimes of our own lives. The public schools of America are the recruiting grounds of the republic. It is from them that come our future citizens, our statesmen, our agriculturists, our soldiers and sailors, our teachers and scholars, our preachers and that vast bulwark of Americanism which has saved the nation intact for nearly a century and a half, and which will save it still intact, please God, until the end of time.

Moreover, and most important consideration of all, these commencements have to do with little maidens in pig tails, and the high school girls and the college girls who are to be the mothers of a generation to come. They shall be the mothers of the men of another day. In their bright eyes gleam the destinies of our race. Wholesome, sweet and beautiful as they are in soul and body, well may we rejoice in the promise they give us.

Whatever may or may not have withstood the test of time in the history of the republic, there can be no question as to the splendor with which our public school system has endured. On all the wide globe there is no institution that can look backward on its past with greater satisfaction, or forward to its future with greater assurance than the American public school.

The security of the American nation was guaranteed when the hills and the valleys of the land were dotted with little red schoolhouses. It was from them that our Jacksons, our Monroes, our Lincolns, our Grants and all that glorified line of soldiers, statesmen and patriots came. The first care of every new American community is to erect a schoolhouse; its first duty is to raise revenues for the maintenance and perpetuation of that school.

And they have always been, as they are now, open to all. The alien came from every land, bringing with him every creed. But no matter what his nationality, his creed or his color, the public schools are open to his children, Jew and Gentile alike, without discrimination against him or his.

Is it any wonder that we are here producing a new race the like of which the world has never seen? Is it any wonder that the republic endures, growing always stronger and greater on the sure foundations laid by the fathers? Let us rejoice in our country and our country's children. And let us pray:

"Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget."

OUR MACHINIST MAYOR.

Those who fear the Mayor's machine is in some danger because he finds need for a "City Machinist" are borrowing trouble. According to all testimony the machine of His Recall Honor is being assembled with diligence and promises to be in thorough running gear, with frictionless bearings when the December campaign nears.

That he should see a need for a "City Machinist" to make repairs on the city automobiles may come naturally from the fact that he has so perfect a recall machine of his own and knows the value of repairs. Having a machine, the Mayor expects to drive it, and this is why he is giving evidence of expert judgment as to cogs and gasoline engines and their requirements.

With Bosses Graham, Topham, Betkouski, Plant and Gibbon rubbing and greasing the different parts of his machine, with the Mayor himself craftily working to win over a majority in the Council, which he failed to get by bluff and storm, with the "Good Government Organization" piecing itself together so that the silk-socked recallite millionaires can capitalize their conquest for self-aggrandizement, the recallite machine is running briskly. The good people of the Third, Fourth and Fifth wards are shown the holy zeal of a purity administration by raids; and the people of the Eighth Ward are being the friendly interest of the administration by an offer to put a free physician for the poor in that district, while the City Attorney is trying to find laws to chastise saloonkeepers who refuse to answer private questions.

From Meyer Lissner's office the command has gone out to whip the Council into line; and just as soon as it can be done His Recall Honor will renew his attempt to control the civil service, the public library and the water department. Promises of non-partisan nominations in the coming municipal campaign, threats of vengeance on the "liberal" element, the bludgeon over the saloons and other means are being used to bring Councilmen to taw. When it dare, the administration will seek the removals of many subordinate officers it cannot fit in the recall machine.

The Mayor is too good at the game to need that his friends worry about him. With the Earl-Lissner-Municipal League-City Club finances behind him and the power of his office in his hands, he will not need an official "City Machinist" on pay to help him along.

WOMAN AND HER WAYS.

Pope sings, "The proper study of mankind is man." That erotic teacher of most advanced "modernism," George Moore, would have you think that the only persistent interest of man is woman. Certainly the successors of Eve do occupy a large space in the history of the world and in the life of those now in the flesh.

Why should they not? The first ministrations which save the new-born infant from instant death come from a woman, and the same hands wipe the death dews from the temples of the dying. The child's tottering steps are steadied by the hands of a woman and to her the budding development of the mind owes its inspiration.

It is to her maternity that woman owes the throne she occupies in our civilization; and it is this thought which lies at the root of the observance of today. We are not celebrating "Woman's Day," nor "Wife's Day," "Sister's Day" nor "Sweetheart's Day." This is "Mothers' Day." The peculiar duties and responsibilities of the mothers of humankind separate and differentiate woman from all other species.

Perhaps the greatest good to be looked for from "Mothers' Day" is the reflex action on women, to come from the coronation of motherhood. Write the biographies of the mothers of any epoch or nation and it will be easy to divine what the men of that day and generation were. The time or the place whose women were most motherly were those whose men were most courageous and capable. Where women were true mothers there was progress in all things, material quite as much as intellectual. Where the duties of motherhood were found irksome and its responsibilities held in contempt, the race suffered general degeneracy and national decay was rapid.

There are many men, and any one mind differs from all others. Womanhood develops even more "sports," as naturalists name what the newspaper reporter calls "freaks." Here we have a wife the other day who, in a divorce case, says, "I will not cook for any man." Next day we see a wife seeking a divorce because her husband will not let her cook. The man was unfortunate who married the first woman; the woman unlucky who married the second man. Another day we have a divorced wife of a millionaire, unhappy because unwomanly, opening an office to manage a combine backed by millions of money to destroy the tobacco monopoly of her former husband. In all three cases the idea of motherhood had been lost, if it ever existed, and so the lives of all concerned went wrong.

We have had many women of many minds down the course of the human race. How marked the mother type is from all others, how marked the "mother" boys from all others! See Hannah in the temple pouring out her heart-longings to Jehovah, and follow the great career of Samuel, her son, prophet and judge in Israel, the maker and writer of the history of his time. Then turn to Bathsheba, the faithless wife, and follow the career of her handsome, vain son, Absalom, with his long hair, rebel against his own father's reign, and a victim to his own long locks. Read the story of Cornelia and her sons, the Gracchi, and that of Cleopatra, the fascinating but deceitful serpent of old Nile. Maria Theresa was, in a way, a fond mother, but had she been wise, simple and truly motherly, the reign of terror might have been averted in France or at least its horrors mitigated.

We in America know little of the life of the mothers of Washington, Jefferson, the Adamses, Monroe and Madison. Why? Because they were true mothers. They were home-bodies. Like the Roman matron, Cornelia, their sons were their jewels. They were little in the public eye, because their eyes were always on home affairs. The pages of history are full of the great things accomplished by the sons their mothers raised; but when the recording angels pen the biographies of men, the mothers who devoted their time to their home duties are set down as the makers of the great men who made America great.

While there are in America mothers like the one who reared John Alden and the one who brought up Priscilla Mullins, we shall make history worth reading. If you would know why Lincoln was so gentle and patient, listen to Nancy Hanks on her death bed say, "Abraham, be kind to your sister, Sarah."

The harems in Constantinople are the fountains whence have sprung many of the present troubles of Turkey. If future Americans are to be generally rearlings of divorcées, to whom motherhood is odious and its responsibilities irksome, our history will not be glorious.

THE PLATFORM AND THE TARIFF BILL.

There is disappointment in some quarters over the tariff bill as it was when presented to the House of Representatives by the Committee on Ways and Means, as it was when sent by the House to the Senate, as it was when the Senate committee presented it to that body, and as it exists at the present time.

If there were no more to be said than this concerning the bill we might stop; but the opposition to this tariff measure comes from sources and is based upon assertions which leave room for further comment.

No one ever expected the Democratic members of Congress, or those of that party outside of Congress, to assent to any tariff bill made by Republicans of the true faith. But with the Democratic discontents are found arrayed quite a number of members of Congress claiming to be Republican and elected in the main by the votes of that party. The allegation of these alleged Republicans is that the promises made by the nominating convention of the party in the platform, and by the speakers who advocated the election of Mr. Taft, have been violated by those who arranged the new tariff schedules.

It is alleged that the Republican party went before the people and sought their support on a pledge in the platform, and on promises made by the speakers of the party, that in revising the Dingley tariff law the changes would be generally, if not universally, downward.

Now it is impossible for any one to say what the understanding of all who read the platform of the party might have been from the words in the tariff resolution or any other plank. It is as impossible for any one to state definitely just what outgivings were made by all the speakers in all the States who advocated the election of Mr. Taft and of a Republican Congress.

But we turn to the platform as it was finally adopted, to the editorial utterances of a large majority of the staunch, loyal Republican press of the country, and to the speeches of the leaders of the party who addressed the people during the campaign of last fall, and fail to find any justification anywhere for this clamor of the so-called Republicans who are now allied with Democratic influences in Congress and outside to bring about such changes in the tariff bill as will bring it into pretty general accord with the views and wishes of outspoken, pronounced Democrats. We insist that there is an important significance in this fact, that Democratic members of Congress, Democratic newspapers and Democrats in general throughout the country are finding allies among the so-called Republicans, and that the discontents in the Republican ranks are working hand in hand in close accord with the members of the Democratic party to bring about such a revision of the tariff as will be acceptable to the Democrats.

Promising a revision of the tariff promptly after the inauguration of the new President, the Republican platform set forth, first, that the new tariff act, if the making of it should be confided by the people to the Republican party, would be a Republican tariff, protective in its warp and woof and in every fiber of its fabric. The promise was first that there would be ample protection given to every American industry to make up the difference between the wages paid in these industries in foreign countries and those proper to be demanded by American labor in this country, with a reasonable profit to the stockholders and capitalists whose money, time and talents were devoted to the conducting of the various enterprises.

The next promise made was that the new tariff act would be so constructed as to afford abundant revenue to defray all the expenses of the government. Measured by the outlays of the government during the immediate preceding years, by the policies of the outgoing administration so ardently supported by the people (Democrats, generally, as well as Republicans, almost universally,) and by the other declarations in the platform favoring the enlargement of the navy, the continuance of the work on the Panama Canal and the improvements of the national waterways, including harbors on lakes and ocean fronts, it was well understood that the expenses of the government would be exceedingly large.

As to the protective feature of the new tariff law, particular emphasis was laid upon the necessity of protecting American labor from crushing competition with cheaply-paid labor in foreign countries. In fixing the tariff schedules on such a level as to make up first the difference between wages as paid in foreign countries and that proper to be expected on the part of the great mass of the American people, it is quite reasonable to measure this difference, not by the highest wages paid in foreign countries, but by the lowest. By this rule we must measure the space between wages abroad and wages in America, not by the standard in England or Germany, France or Italy, but by the standard existing in Japan and China.

Where any one can find in this language any basis for the contention that the Republican party promised a revision of the tariff which would be universally or even generally downward is a linguistic puzzle that we ask the allies of free-trade Democracy to unravel. We confess our own inability to perform the task. As to the utterances of speakers in the campaign, there was probably a great deal of difference. Senator La Follette and Mr. Cummins of Iowa, Mr. Bristow of Kansas, and other Republican discontents may have addressed audiences in terms closely synonymous with those emanating from Lincoln, Neb., through the Commoner. That wing of the Republican party was represented upon the Committee on Platform and Resolutions. They had their say, made their propositions, and generally acquiesced in the platform as presented to the convention and as adopted by that body. Some of them did not. A few on the floor of the convention openly antagonized the platform and were told by the vast assembly in the Coliseum to take their contention to Denver, where they belonged.

The fact is, the dissatisfaction of Senator Dolliver, his colleague, Mr. Cummins, and their yokefellow, Senator Bristow, all ably backed up by their Democratic allies in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, is a clear case of "Hancockism" as to the tariff. We hear no word of protest from the representatives of the people in either branch of Congress from the semi-free trade States as to high duties on anything produced by their own constituents. Their clamor is altogether for low duties on something not produced in their own States. It is exactly the spirit which animates Democratic members of both houses of Congress from Mississippi, Georgia and Louisiana.

Take a notable instance of this harmony of utterance and action between discontented Republicans and Democrats. The Republican platform says the tariff shall be so arranged as to produce sufficient revenue to defray all the various expenses of the government. The Republican party has at all times, speaking of the body as a whole, opposed every proposition to levy a national income or inheritance tax. It is a Democratic device conceived by Bryan and his closest allies, a conspiracy on their part to undermine the Republican policy of protection. But we find Mr. Cummins and other insurrectos in the Republican party joining hand in hand with the Bryan wing of the Democratic party for an inheritance and income tax, one or both as may seem necessary in order to raise sufficient revenue to defray the expenses of the government, curtailed and cut to pieces by a semi-free trade tariff bill such as they propose.

We protest without hesitation against this attempt to bring about free trade by the imposition of this direct tax on inheritances and incomes. If the day ever comes when imports fail to produce sufficient revenue to defray the expenses of the government, then will be quite time enough to resort to these direct forms of taxation; and when that time comes it will be proper to impose such taxes only after the Constitution is amended. Mark that. The Supreme Court of the United States has declared an income tax as passed by a Democratic Congress in Cleveland's administration to be unconstitutional. It is more than probable that this decision will not be overruled by any further adjudication on the part of the court.

THE LANCER.

The burning question of the hour: Was Alexander Hamilton such a devil that his statue won't do for the nation's capital?

Senator Johnson, representative of the State which maintains a public cemetery at Sioux Falls, has gained a little free advertising by objecting in Congress to the statue.

Gertrude Atherton, who desires to remind the book-buying public that her historical novel about Hamilton is still on sale, of a necessity takes the other side. So the contest wages.

We are informed over the telegraph that Mrs. Atherton shrugged her shoulders (both shoulders) and said, with a [illegible], "We have become so dreadfully proper this last fifty years."

Coming from a perfect lady, this, of course, is shocking; but not so shocking as Mrs. Atherton would have us believe.

On the contrary, I am willing to give Gertrude the benefit of the doubt and assume that she would have taken the other side of the controversy if Senator Johnson had not seen it first and grabbed it—ungallant old pig!

At any rate, it is with pleased astonishment we learn that Dakota ever heard of Alexander Hamilton. Maybe, Senator Johnson is just trying to show that they are eddicated out there.

Chief Dishman—Shake!

Altogether unconsciously, Dishman is the fiercest critic of all the previous chiefs of police this city has had.

The sturdy forehanded way in which he has started to clean house is a pretty severe contrast with the past.

If he should quit on the spot, or never do anything else, this city would be his debtor for cleaning out the "Manhattan" and the Bohemian Club.

It is the prediction of The Lancer that Dishman will be found at the broom cleaning out a worse evil the first time it presents itself. This is the "packed" Police Court jury.

To allow policemen to summon whomsoever they choose for jury duty is simply a ghastly defect in the law, as was seen when a man was recently tried for fighting bulldogs, and nearly all the jurors summoned were owners of fighting bulldogs.

An honest Chief of Police, in spite of this imbecile law, can force his men to be honest in serving jury summons.

The Courage of Women.

The attempt of some women to mob the kidnapers of Willie Whitla was a condensed essay.

When the mob became nasty, you will remember that Boyle, the man kidnaper, became badly frightened, and begged the officers to protect him. But the woman turned on the mob, handcuffed though she was, and wanted to fight the whole outfit.

Any one who has seen anything of mobs or other perils must have been impressed with this curious phase of a woman's nature.

I remember seeing an example of this almost appalling courage in women during the street-car strike in San Francisco.

It was the worst day of the strike. The mob was terrible. I confess I was scared sick, flying by in the shelter of an automobile. The cars were protected by a squadron of mounted police, and they were losing control. The cars turned a corner into Sacramento street, and then came to a dead stop. A barricade had been placed across the track.

We all knew that wholesale murder was about to begin. The cars could go neither forward nor back. The mob was closing in like a pack of snarling wolves.

Just at that moment, two young girls stepped out from a little florist shop, and, without a falter, walked through the mob and handed two great bunches of carnations to the pale, frightened, "scab" motorman. I never shall expect to see another act of human courage to equal it.

At the same time, I imagine that these girls would yell bloody murder at the sight of a mouse. I wonder if women lion tamers are afraid of mice.

Probably the explanation of this sudden courage in women is that a woman does not count odds. George Ade says that when a woman wants to make a four-bagger, she doesn't bother about making a three-base hit. She just swipes at the ball and runs.

According to Richard Grant White, this peculiarity in women was used by Shakespeare as the basis of Macbeth.

In his "Studies From Shakespeare," Mr. White gave as an illustration the launching of the United States frigate [illegible].

As part of the ceremonies, 120 minute guns were fired. Thus cannonading continued for two hours at one-minute intervals.

When the first guns were fired, the men who composed the official party seemed worried and nervous. The women, on the other hand, seemed to enjoy it. Before the last minute gun had been fired several of the women were in hysterics and several more had fainted; but the men no longer minded it.

The Shakespeare scholar gave this as an example of the correct psychology of "Macbeth."

In the first instance, Mrs. Macbeth had a hard time ribbing her husband up to murder. But before their troubles were over, it was she who saw bloody daggers. Old Mac, on the other hand, had become so used to killings that he could hardly get up an appetite without daggering some one before dinner.

Humphrey Ward Novels.

A western university professor is attacking the novels of Mrs. Humphrey Ward on the ground that they are insipid and of a deadly sameness. His remarks, although slightly sensational when Mrs. Ward's immense popularity is considered, are not so [illegible] to a nameless critic who wrote to [illegible] not long ago.

He said that the Humphrey Ward novels are like a well-bred afternoon reception: You come in whenever you like, you have a reasonably good time, and go out when you are tired, and never miss anything.

Fighting Bob.

In a sort of sneaking, round-about way, some of the newspapers of this country are making insinuations about Admiral Evans in connection with his attitude to Hobson.

They hint that Fighting Bob is long on conversation and a hollow bluffer. Probably they "have the wrong [illegible] on 'Fighting Bob,'" as horsemen would say.

A newspaper correspondent with the fleet told me that you could see the difference in a day whenever Evans left the fleet or temporarily relinquished command. The magnificent record of the fleet after circling the globe must be justly attributed to Fighting Bob's iron discipline.

The theory made up by literary ladies is that the fierce talker is of no courage, that the little, quiet man is the real fighter, and that barking dogs don't bite.

Well, my advice is, don't try to travel very far on that theory.

Fighting Bob is prone to growl out rough remarks; unquestionably he likes to see his name in the paper; but he is "Fighting Bob" all the same, and a crack expert in his profession.

The Navy's Sore Spot.

As long as there is a navy, the Hobson incident will be a very sore place.

The sinking of the Merrimac was the greatest chance for fame in the history of America. The navy will never forgive the fact that it went to one practically an outsider.

The navy officers who have felt bitter for ten years against Hobson ought to be satisfied: they have been revenged. Since going to Congress, Capt. Hobson has had it "rubbed into him."

Not long before leaving the White House, Col. Roosevelt raised his voice one day at one of his noon levees, and said as though he intended every one to hear:

"If that man Hobson had a little more brains, he would be an imbecile."

The most painful scene I ever witnessed was when Hobson was howled down at the Democratic convention, and, in his desperation and humiliation, yelled out, "You may jeer, but the President of the United States told me we are in grave peril of war with Japan."

Fine!

This was just at the time when the President and the Mikado were nearly cricking their necks off trying to express "affection and deep mutual esteem" of the two governments. (Fingers crossed.)

At that moment, Statesman Hobson's light went out forever.

In the case of some other man, one might take savage satisfaction in seeing him go on the rocks. But Hobson is appealing; he is so sincere and honorable and bears these insults so proudly as a sacrifice he is willing to make for his country.

Hobson is, in my mind, a good deal more of a hero today than when he sank the Merrimac. It takes nerve to go on with the career of warning that he conceives to be his duty, in the face of the abuse, derision and ridicule.

But, oh, Capt. Hobson, why didn't you stick to building warships? The navy officers claim that the Merrimac venture failed because Hobson was not a seaman, and let go an anchor at the wrong time; and, as a Congressman all his anchors are out at the wrong time.

Hobson is an honorable, brave-hearted man, and, withal, a singularly modest man; but Fate seems to put him into places where he doesn't know the ropes.

Echoes of Great Paris.

A most remarkable book, now, out of print, has chanced to fall into my hands. It is an Englishman's recollections of the celebrities of Paris in 1840—a piquant narrative of Dumas (pere) of Rachel, Balzac and many others who were intimate friends of the author.

He tells two fascinating stories of Dumas.

On one occasion, Dumas ran for Parliament and, while addressing a political meeting at Joigny, was challenged by a M. de Bouncliere to reconcile his title of republican with his title of Marquis de la Pailleterie and the fact of his having been a secretary to the Duc de Orleans.

The reply of Dumas was scathing.

"No doubt," he said, in an off-hand bantering way, "I was formerly called the Marquis de la Pailleterie, which was my father's name, and of which I was very proud, being unable then to claim a glorious one of my own make.

"But at present, when I am somebody, I call myself Alexander Dumas and nothing more. You, you absolutely nobody, you have merely come to be able to boast tomorrow after insulting me tonight, that you have known the great Dumas."

He also tells how Dumas changed an entire scene of the "Three Musketeers" because the theater fireman seemed bored at a rehearsal.

The great Rachel is described as a greedy little ingrate, whose specialty was making gifts and taking them back again.

On one occasion she presented Dumas a magnificent ring. He instantly slipped it back on her finger. "To save you the trouble of asking for it," he said.

PUBLIC SERVICE—OFFICIAL DOINGS.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

The Home Telephone Company is to spute the validity of the referendum tition suspending the ordinance in- easing its rates.

Judge Willis yesterday fixed the date r the hearing of the Gertrude Driggs rgery case for June 21. The court clared that no further delay will be lerated.

Judge Monroe worked a clever ruse Walter Wehner, complaining wit- ss in a criminal case involving his gnature, and the dismissal of the arge of obtaining money under false etenses against James C. Henderson llowed.

Capt. Dixon yesterday explained in e Police Court the manner of smug- ing drugs to prisoners in the stock- le, during the trial of John Sargent, arge with vagrancy.

Al Greenewald, on probation after ing convicted of selling lottery tick- s, may be taken to court to show why ought not to serve out his sentence r violating his probation.

AT THE CITY HALL.

AIMS BLOW AT REFERENDUM.

ELEPHONE COMPANY TO DISPUTE VALIDITY OF PETITION.

Will Hold That Council Acts in Judicial Capacity in Fixing Telephone Rates and Referendum Can Affect Only Legislative Acts—Plans Resistance.

When the time comes for the refer- dum petition on telephone rates to come effective, the Home Telephone mpany is expected to ask the courts pass on the validity of the char- referendum provision. Just how is will be done is not divulged, but legal position of the company has made known.

e effectiveness of the petition will attacked on the ground that the ferendum provision of the charter n only affect legislation. In fixing lephone rates, it will be held, the uncil acts in its judicial capacity d not in its legislative capacity, and nce the referendum cannot bind it. If the referendum may destroy the wer of the Council to fix rates, the itiative can also be employed for e same purpose. An initiative peti- n asking for a rate of $1 monthly ould either require the Council to ake this the rate or submit the ques- n to an election.

The charter, in its grant of powers the Council, gives it the sole power fix telephone rates. If the referen- m or the initiative may overthrow e judgment of the Council, then it s not the sole power. On this con- ntion the referendum petition will be puted.

The verification of the petition will t be completed until after the next uncil meeting, and it will be two eks before it is acted on. If the uncil should assume that it is valid e company may raise the legal ques- ns at that time and cause their ref- ence to the City Attorney, and thus ing about a construction of the two arter provisions before seeking the urts.

As the increased rates do not go to effect until July 1, there is am- time to thrash out the legal ques- ns before litigation must be re- rted to.

SIXTH WARD PARK.

WANT TWENTY-FIVE ACRES.

A park of twenty-five acres for the xth Ward is the demand of the Im- ovement Association of that district d with the Council yesterday. It is e first official document under the w park law, which, by the way, has en in effect only a few days.

The land sought for park purposes is Hooper avenue and Thirty-eighth reet, and contains about twenty-five res. It is stated in the petition of the sociation that it is the last available rge tract in the ward, and fortu- ately happens to be almost in its ge- raphical center. The ward, it is presented, has a population of 50,000, which 5000 are small children, and assessment for the land distributed roughout the ward would be very ht on the individual.

The petition is deemed sure to bring t a full discussion and perhaps the terpretation of the new law. This w provides that the Council may ndemn land for park purposes and sess the cost of condemnation ainst a district. The ordinance of tention so to do may be nullified by protest signed by a majority of the operty in the district. The Council es not need a petition to begin pro- edings, and is also the judge of the istrict to be assessed.

No estimate of the cost of this land given in the petition of the Improve- ent Association. It is a mile and a alf from any other park or play- round, and the association believes it ill answer all purposes for the Sixth ard for generations.

Should the Council order the condem- ation it will be up to the property wners to file a majority protest. If is is not done, the proceedings con- nue in the usual manner as for the pening and widening of streets.

Howard Robertson, Deputy City At- rney, who prepared the law at the quest of the park department, says ch a proceeding will require eighteen onths to complete.

Preparations are being made in other calities for similar action. The only ost to the city is the improvement nd maintenance of the land after ac- uisition.

Saw an Alarm.

A six-foot cross-cut saw decorated he Mayor's office yesterday. Health oard employés who dropped in and aw it leaning near Secretary Hender- on's desk fled with blanched faces. ther near-martyrs from other depart- ents paled before its keen teeth. Be- ore Henderson became aware of it, cores had peeped into his office to "have a look." The general supposi- ion was that it was to supplant the Mayor's ax.

But it has no menace in official life. "I just got it to cut fuel and timber with at Twin Spruce Camp in Bear Cañon," said Henderson, as he hid it behind a bookcase.

BIOLOGICAL LECTURE.

The last meeting for the year of the biological section of the Southern Cal- fornia Academy of Sciences will be held at the Pacific College of Osteo- pathy tomorrow evening. A lecture on "Tuberculosis" will be delivered by Dr. A. O. Conrad.

To "Liner" Advertisers:

Dating from June 1, classified advertising in The Times will be charged by the word at the present established rate of 1c per word in the daily issue and 1½c Sunday.

Close calculations, covering a period of several months, develop the fact that the average number of words to the line are a fraction over seven. This basis for charge, therefore, will prevail after June 1.

Cash "want" advertising has always been calculated by the word, and this regulation will not change the manner of handling it.

The present "want" ad. rate has been in effect for many years, though the circulation

FORGERY CASE TO BE PUSHED.

JUDGE REFUSES TO ALLOW ANY UNNECESSARY DELAY.

Mrs. Driggs Pleads Not Guilty of Crime in Connection With Charnock Estate—Trejo Brothers, Monrovia Bank Robber and Colton Youth Ask for Probation.

Judge Willis made it perfectly plain yesterday that he will allow no undue delay in the case against Gertrude Driggs, who is charged with forgery in connection with the estate of the late John J. Charnock.

Mrs. Driggs's attorney, R. C. Noleman, on the arraignment of his client, filed a motion to set aside the information and asked that, as he was unprepared to make his argument, the matter be postponed until Friday.

The court replied: "This action has dragged along for nearly a month, and it appears to be the policy of counsel to still further delay a hearing. I want to say that the request for postponement will not be allowed, and that the hearing on the motion to set aside the information will be had now. Another thing, this case will be heard before the adjournment of the courts for the summer vacation."

Attorney Noleman protested, but was ordered to begin his argument or allow his client to plead to the indictment.

The lawyer based his objection to the information on the alleged non-eligibility of Justice Ling, the committing magistrate, to hold office under the provisions of the County Government Act, passed by the Legislature in 1907. The point he made was similar to that raised by H. H. Appel in his defense of Charles S. Martin, the alleged Monrovia bank robber, except that in the latter case it is Justice Summerfield who is attacked.

The court overruled the motion, and then Mrs. Driggs pleaded not guilty, and her trial was fixed for June 21.

W. P. Clark, who had pleaded guilty to forging the name of M. D. Hurley on a $20 check drawn on the Home Saving Bank, was an applicant for probation, but Probation Officer Dodds produced witnesses who testified to the defendant's very peculiar financial actions, and the matter of suspending his sentence was postponed for a week. He had nothing to say in regard to the new charges against him.

The case of Ernest W. Sundin, one of the Monrovia bank robbers, was postponed for a week. He, too, is an applicant for probation, and it is claimed that powerful influences are at work in his behalf. His attorney, George B. Adams, could not appear yesterday.

The three Trejo brothers—Albert, Peter and Edward—each wearing a carnation in the label of his coat, and looking as jaunty as a trio of vaudeville performers, pleaded guilty to the charge of robbery and made application for probation. The matter will be settled Saturday.

Justice of the Peace Hanna of Colton was made special probation officer to look after Earl M. Armstrong of that town, who confessed that he had passed a forged check for $10 on the Farmers' and Merchants' National Bank of Redondo. The justice asked that leniency be shown to the young man, and his father, an assaying chemist, told how his son had fallen into bad company. The accused himself made quite a speech to the court, concluding: "I wish you would give me a chance to make good." The probation period was fixed at five years by Judge Willis.

SUIT AGAINST CITY.

IN GRAND-AVENUE OPENING.

The city of Los Angeles was made a defendant in an action brought by H. A. C. McPhail, in the Superior Court, yesterday, in the proceedings following the opening of Grand avenue from Temple to California streets. The plaintiff says that in November, 1905, the city adopted an ordinance to improve the thoroughfare, and condemn property affected by the opening. An assessment was made upon the private property in that restricted district to pay for the improvement, and the assessment was laid on the property of the plaintiff, known as lot No. 11, block E, Mott tract.

A notice was given by the city of an intention to sell all property described, including the plaintiff's, on January 23, 909, but for some reason no sale was made until last Tuesday, when it was announced that the city had become the purchaser, without the city making any bid upon it.

Since then the city has claimed the property, but the plaintiff believes the Board of Public Works had no jurisdiction, right or authority to sell it. The prayer of the petition is that the city be required to set forth the nature and extent of its claim; that the court adjudge the city has no right or title to the property, and that it be further enjoined and debarred from asserting or setting up any claim.

DAMAGE SUITS.

THEY COME IN PAIRS.

The Southern Pacific Railway drew a pair of damage suits yesterday, in the petitions filed in the Superior Court. The aggregate amount sought is $70,000.

Martin Egan alleges that he is a track laborer on the line, and that on January 19, last, when at work on siding No. 7, on the California and Nevada line, thirty miles from Mojave, he was struck by a train and disfigured for life, besides being badly crippled. He asks for $50,000.

Fred Fischer is a brakeman, and on June 24, last, he was employed on a train of lumber running between Mojave and Searls; in some way the load slipped and he was knocked down and covered with the lumber, severely injuring him. It is alleged that the corporation was guilty of negligence on that occasion. He wants $20,000.

CLEVER RUSE.

RESULTS IN DISMISSAL.

Judge Monroe yesterday gave a splendid exhibition of his powers of induction, and as a result dismissed the criminal action against James C. Henderson, who was charged with securing money under false pretenses. Henderson, it was alleged, had sold to Walter Wehner, sixty shares of stock in the Humboldt Brewing Company of Arizona, whose plant was supposed to be located at Eureka, this State. It was further claimed that the establishment did not in fact exist at all, and that Henderson was guilty of perpetrating a fraud in selling the stock.

The point in the case revolved largely around a question of Wehner's penmanship, and several signatures were shown to him which he promptly declared were not his own. There was a belief current that there might be some mistake about this, and Judge Monroe essayed on his own behalf to try to ascertain if Wehner knew his signature. The court quietly took a copy of the complaint, folded the paper so that the only line visible was the signature of Wehner, and showed it to the witness.

"Is that your signature," asked the court.

Wehner looked at it critically, and finally answered, "It is not."

"Look carefully now," admonished Judge Monroe, "are you sure it is not your writing?"

"I am quite sure. I never wrote that signature."

Then the court showed to the astonished witness the signature upon which he had passed judgment.

It was quite evident that the court thought a man who could not tell his own name might be mistaken about his assertion that he had not signed other agreements, and when the testimony for the people was closed he promptly dismissed the case.

EXPENSIVE SPILL.

THIRD DAMAGE TRIAL ON.

The automobile accident that occurred on August 23, 1908, at the intersection of Western avenue and Sixteenth street, as a result of which the pleasure party was thrown to the ground and much injured, to say nothing of the wreck of the big machine, is likely to prove an expensive one for the victims of the trouble and the Los Angeles-Pacific Railway.

In the auto when the crash came were Lucalvin Hoff and his wife, Anna M. Hoff; their son, Cory G. Huff, and his wife, Allie May Hoff; Raymond McKibben and his wife, Elsie May McKibben. Following the accident a trio of damage cases were instituted, all tried in the court of Judge Conrey. In the McKibben case a verdict of $2750 was rendered against the defendant railway; Cory G. Hoff and wife failed to convince the jury that they were entitled to anything, and yesterday the action of Lucalvin Hoff and Anna M. Hoff was begun before Judge Conrey and a jury.

The same testimony has been adduced in all of the trials, and the same attorneys have appeared for the plaintiffs. New juries were of course drawn in each case.

CLOSED BOOK.

TESTIMONY IS ALL IN.

The incident affecting the citizenship of Superior Court Judge George H. Hutton, is now closed. Yesterday, Frederick Jones, the local United States naturalization officer, sent a letter to the judge, informing him that he has investigated the question of his naturalization thoroughly, and that all the requirements of the Federal law have been complied with in every particular; that he is a bona fide American citizen.

COURTHOUSE NOTES.

BREVITIES MISCELLANEOUS.

INCORPORATIONS. Papers for the following incorporations were filed in the office of the Clerk yesterday: California Medical Institute, capital stock, $50,000, by C. N. Hopkins, J. W. Pendergast and F. H. Salisbury; United Friendly Protective Association, by J. B. Williamson, J. R. Robinson, J. C. Williamson and Passie B. Williamson; Success Hardware Company, capital stock, $10,000.

CONDEMNATION SUIT. In Judge Hervey's court yesterday objections on behalf of the city of Los Angeles to the report of the referees in the suit of the municipality against J. B. Lankershim et al., were filed, and the hearing of the case on its merits set for the 24th inst. The objectionable features of the report relate to the amount to be allowed property owners in the widening of Eighth street.

NOT CHEAP, SAYS HE. Stanley E. Thorne, against whom a charge of securing money under false pretenses was dismissed a few days ago before Judge Davis, objects to the averment that "he is a cheap jewelry salesman." He says he's an auctioneer—and who ever heard of an auctioneer selling anything cheap?

UNDER ADVISEMENT. Justice Stevens has taken under advisement the two cases against W. H. Carlson, one charging the embezzlement of $127.65, the other a $3000 false entry on the books of his defunct Consolidated Bank of Los Angeles. Carlson spoke for an hour yesterday in closing the cases.

THE INFERIOR COURTS.

DREAM DRUGS HARD TO DAM.

CHAIN GANG OFFICER TELLS OF SMUGGLING.

City Prisoners Addicted to the Use of Cocaine and Other Poisonous Narcotics Work Together to Deliver the Stuff Into the Stockade. Greenewald Case Goes Up.

The manner in which drug fiends outwit the guards of the city chain gang and smuggle cocaine, morphine and opium into the stockade was explained in the Police Court before Justice Chambers yesterday morning by Capt. Dixon in the course of the trial of John Sargent, charged with vagrancy.

Sargent is scarcely 21 years old and yet he is a confirmed "hop head," or drug fiend. Deprive him of the drug and he screams for it like a madman. Frequently he has been known to roll about the floor as if in agony when the surgeons of the hospital refused to give him any of the cocaine he craved.

The boy has traveled to all parts of the United States. His parents are respected people who have done everything they can for their son but he has not appreciated their kindness. Time after time when arrested on vagrancy charges Sargent has appealed to his people and they have provided the money to pay his fine and keep him off the chain gang but it would be only a few days until he was back again.

The present charge against him brought up the smuggling of drugs into the stockade. Sargent was given the limit after his trial. He will have to serve out 180 days on the chain gang. The officers say it may or may not break him of the drug habit; probably not, for the prisoners can get the drug.

"There is a constant fight to keep the stuff out of the stockade but it is practically impossible to do so because of the methods used by the hop heads," said Capt. Dixon.

"The men are so determined to have the drug that they will go through fire and water to get it. They will steal or commit any kind of a crime to get cocaine, morphine or yen she.

San Bernardino and Its Dose of Reform Medicine.

SAN BERNARDINO, May 7.—That an old Tammany politician should come out on the edge of the desert and run for office sounds like a fine start for an O. Henry story.

But alas for dramatic effect, the wrong man won. That is to say, the right man won. Oh, well, the Tammany man was beaten to a frazzle and the O. Henry story was spoiled.

San Bernardino is tired of being an O. Henry story. It is now resolved to be an unromantic city, with office buildings and a reform Mayor.

The reform pill recently taken by San Bernardino will begin to work next Monday, when J. J. Hanford, who has been the big political boss, goes out of office. He was the old Tammany war horse who committed an anti-climax.

I had a long talk today with S. W. McNabb, the sandy little Scotchman who has overthrown the machine maintained by the gamblers and saloon men and who will be San Bernardino's first reform Mayor.

As a general thing a reformer is a bore. But McNabb isn't that. Probably the reason is that McNabb isn't a reformer.

His attitude is fascinating. He regards himself frankly as an experiment. His philosophy is refreshing.

"Don't talk about me overthrowing the machine," says McNabb. "You know there really isn't any such thing as a political machine. There are always a couple of political organizations fighting for the jobs; whichever one wins is the machine."

However, and in spite of Mayor McNabb, his election is regarded as an era-making one for San Bernardino. Speaking frankly, the people look to him to wipe out somewhat tumultuous conditions.

San Bernardino lies at the gateway of the desert—at the edge of all that is left of the old-time border. Her sheriff polices a vast territory, in which you could lose a European kingdom and never find it again.

In the old days it was a stage station on the Mormon trail. Its early history was one of Indian fights and desperado murders. Many hot stories have been sent out from this capital. McNabb's election is a signal that San Bernardino declines a Wolfville reputation any longer.

J. J. Hanford, whom McNabb displaces as Mayor, is an old New York Tammany Hall man. He is an iron molder and is proprietor of a machine shop here. With Tammany politics in his blood, he couldn't possibly keep out of the game.

He became boss of his ward and then Mayor of the city.

Meanwhile a new commercial spirit had grown up in the old Mormon settlement, manifesting itself in Chamber of Commerce, Merchants' Association, etc.

At the last election they unhorsed the saloon men and elevated McNabb. It was Tammany against a Frank Wiggins boosters' association. Poor Tammany!

McNabb is a mild, witty young person, with a head that is steady though [illegible].

He has been a printer and deputy sheriff and occasional writer of humorous sketches. Recently he was admitted to the bar. Lastly, he is a [illegible].

On the verge of tipping over into official reform, he told me today that he has no quarrel with the saloons, but is against certain measures usually regarded as reforms "idees."

McNabb seems to be a reform Mayor who wants to reform the reforms.

He told me, for instance, that he regards the consolidation of the city and county tax collections to have proven a failure. He does not favor the idea of concentrating power in a Mayor, and views the election of Councilmen-at-large with suspicion.

McNabb has some interesting ideas regarding this latter reform idea.

"I should think the right way," said McNabb, "would be to have Councilmen nominated by wards, but elected by the voters of the whole city.

"The danger of electing Councilmen-at-large is that small wards have no chance of representation. The danger of the ward system is that some boss trades the ward for a watch charm, and the votes of his ward become almost his personal property.

"By the plan I suggest neither evil would exist. Of course, I don't know, though. I never thought much about politics until I was elected Mayor three or four weeks ago."

McNabb says the consolidation of city and county tax offices has proven a failure because it precludes the possibility of assessing the city property high enough to raise the required income without also raising the assessed valuation of the country property. To raise the total assessed valuation of the county is to bear an unjust burden of State taxes.

San Bernardino had in Hanford's one term a bad example of the beauties of concentrating power in the Mayor. There is no police commission here and the Mayor appoints all the cops single-handed. "When Hanford was out of cigars he gave away police jobs," a politician says.

Hanford was really not a bad sort, but his Tammany training was too much for this chance to turn the police force into a political machine.

McNabb says he will do his best to have the city charter changed to the commission system in vogue in Los Angeles.

Since his defeat Hanford is said to be heart-broken. He has advertised his business shop for sale and is apparently on the point of moving to San Diego, where he has friends.

With all due respect to Mayor McNabb, the present rush of prosperity is attributable to another source.

The truth is that San Bernardino has lately discovered that a labor union consists of two parts noise and one part bad smell.

The greatest boom that ever happened to this place was the fierce Santa Fé strike.

Now, here; listen to this:

Before that strike the big Santa Fé shops were run exclusively by union men. The union feeling was so bitter that the family of a railroad man who refused to "go out" during the strike of 1894 endured every form of petty persecution for twelve years. The man's wife was insulted in stores by the union clerks.

The men at the Santa Fé shops were [illegible]. They would get a tired feeling and go lie down in a box car while their pay went on.

On one memorable occasion the door of the box car was suddenly snapped shut and the car trundled down to the office, where the men had to climb out in the presence of officials of the road. Embarrassed? Not a bit of it. They simply refused to be "fired."

The discharge of these men eventually led to the big strike that set San Bernardino free.

The union tried to compel their reinstatement and the merchants of the town actually raised a fund to keep up the strikers in idleness to avert the horrors of a strike.

At length the strike burst with terrific fury and, as every one knows, the union was licked until it could not raise a whisper.

As an evidence of the changed feeling, it is said that the one lone woman who dared sell food to the "scabs" has become independently "well off." Her life was many times in peril.

Freed of the "Old Man of the Sea," the city is booming. Every respectable organization seems to be meditating a business block.

Most significant of all that's stirring, however, is the beginning of a settled campaign to kick into the "tourist trade."

Some of the business men here have come to realize what an asset San Bernardino has in her gorgeous mountains that seem to tower over the city.

I once knew a girl who loved mountains with a romantic passion. Every summer she used to come into these beautiful summits back of San Bernardino. The ambition of her young life was to see the Swiss Alps.

Finally the time came. She went to Switzerland and saw the Alps.

She didn't say much when she saw them. All she said was: "Stung!" Then she came home.

Every one says that no mountain scenery compares with these California ranges.

They are going to have some sort of an auto run from Los Angeles soon to signalize the opening of some of these mountain trails to motor cars.

Before a great while San Bernardino intends celebrating her one hundredth birthday.

FISHING FOR SECRETS.

APPEL TRIES NEW TACTICS.

Seeks Grand Jury Testimony in Small Installments.

Broadhead's Counsel Bumps Into Many Objections.

Lengthy Question Takes in Pages of the Evidence.

The two hours' session of Judge Davis's court, yesterday, considering the cases against Thomas H. Broadhead, former Chief of Police, and Sam Schenck, former Police Commissioner, developed a new line of attack on the part of H. H. Appel, attorney for Broadhead.

He has been all along trying to show that the testimony of E. T. Earl was material in bringing the indictments of Broadhead and Schenck, and he is now going after it in a new way. Other plans having failed, the information will be sought by single questions relating to that testimony instead of vainly trying to secure that showing by the wholesale plan.

At the opening of the court yesterday, Mr. Appel demanded the minutes of the recent grand jury, and N. H. Peterson, stenographer of that body was placed on the stand. In reply to questions, he said he had taken the notes of the testimony, but did not have them with him; he had a good recollection of what transpired, regardless of his notes.

JUST ONE QUESTION.

Then followed this Marathon, long-distance question by Mr. Appel: "Do you recall at the time E. T. Earl was a witness before the grand jury, Earl testified that on or about March 23, Broadhead visited Earl's office, and had a conversation with him; his evident purpose was to assure Earl of his innocence of the charge embraced in the indictment; that on that occasion, Miles Gregory, secretary of the preceding grand jury had introduced Broadhead to him (Earl;) that the conversation took place in Earl's office in the Central building; that Earl told Broadhead to stay where he was as Chief of Police, and not to run; but that if he should resign and run everybody would say he was guilty; that Earl said: 'Stay on your job, Chief, wait until there is a new Mayor; when we get a new Mayor, if he wants new chief he will probably be man enough to tell you so;' that Broadhead said: 'I understand you have heard some things,' and Earl said, 'you should have come to me and told me about it;' Broadhead said: 'No, that would not be right to do,' and Earl said: 'Don't run like Ed Kern did; stay where you are;' Broadhead said: 'All right, I am not going to run.' Earl said: 'There may be all kinds of rumors and charges against you and the opinions of people that you have received graft; I feel that the city has been rather hasty in the rush to put a man in the Board of Public Works under the circumstances. Mayor Harper and Walter Parker and others took this step; 'if Walter Parker wants you to get out don't you do it.' That Broadhead had said: 'I never took a dishonest dollar.' Earl said: 'That is a strange statement.' That Broadhead said: 'I have said it, by God.' Earl said: 'Don't you know that I have the books of the red light district showing there was a syndicate;' Broadhead said he had never heard of the syndicate; Earl said: 'Your name is mixed up with the syndicate; I can't ask questions about it;' that Earl testified he questioned Broadhead concerning the property that was purchased by the latter and as to the sources from which he obtained the money for the purchase; Broadhead said he had bought a ranch at Corcoran from his earnings as a member of the police force? You may state whether it is not now your recollection of some of these statements were made before the grand jury by E. T. Earl."

Appel gasped for breath in the last laps of this lengthy query.

BUT NO ANSWER.

Deputy District Attorney Ford was on his feet in a minute with an objection. He invoked the secrecy of the grand jury proceedings; claimed that the testimony of Earl was material only to the Oswald indictment, and has nothing to do with the Broadhead and Schenck indictments.

The objection was sustained.

It was the intention of Appel to get in the testimony of Earl, Parker and Joe Durand et al., to show that the minds of the grand jurors were prejudiced against the defendants, Broadhead and Schenck.

Objections were sustained to a number of questions of the witnesses's recollection of what transpired in the grand jury room. Appel made a long argument to uphold his position that the witness should testify and that the secrecy of the grand jury room could not be interposed.

He was interrupted by Dist-Atty. Fredericks, who said the argument had gone on for the fifth time, and it ought to stop; the time of the court was worth something.

Appel said sarcastically: "The rights of these defendants are worth something; the District Attorney is paid for his time."

Then Judge Davis got busy.

"You will confine yourself, Mr. Appel, to the reading of the authorities, with no comment on them," he said.

Appel excepted to this.

COURT DRAWS LINE.

Judge Davis: I have heard enough of authorities; you will not be allowed to read any more authorities.

Appel took exception again to the ruling and began reading authorities to show that the court was wrong in its rulings.

Half a dozen questions were asked as to what took place in the juryroom, and objections to them all were sustained by the court.

Mr. Appel demanded the grand jury exhibits.

The box was produced by the clerk of the court.

Deputy Dist.-Atty. Ford objected to its introduction.

"This is not the time to introduce these exhibits in this proceeding," he said.

The objection was sustained.

Mr. Appel again argued at some length on the proposition regarding the secrecy of the grand jury, and asked the witness (Peterson) if immunity had been offered to Nick Oswald.

He was not allowed to answer the question.

A number of other questions were asked, but ruled out on objections by the District Attorney.

FORGOT HE WAS WITNESS.

"Do you know Joe Durand?" Peterson was asked.

"I have not answered a question for so long that I did not know I was a witness," said Peterson. "I do not know him, but I saw a man who said his name was Durand on March 19; he was a witness."

"Do you know Walter F. Parker?"

"I do not; I know a witness who appeared before the grand jury who said he was Parker; I saw the same person the day before and he was pointed out to me as Walter Parker. I remember that circumstance because I had heard a great deal about him. He was a witness March 24."

"Did you hear him testify?"

"Yes."

"Do you know E. J. Fleming?"

"Yes; I had seen Fleming in the juryroom; he was a witness March 25."

"Do you know Hector Rabagliatti?"

"He was a witness, but I would not know him if I saw him."

"When was he a witness?"

"Before the indictment of Broadhead and after the indictment of Schenck."

"Do you know J. D. Fredericks?"

"I didn't know him until the day before the grand jury met; there are 1500 attorneys in Los Angeles and I cannot keep track of them. He was the first witness, March 19."

"Do you know Paul Blair?"

"By sight."

"When did he testify?"

"I think you have the record," replied the witness.

Mr. Appel, looking sarcastically toward Dist.-Atty. Fredericks: "Oh, no, I am not allowed to get my hands on any record in this case."

At this point both sides rested and the court announced the hearing would be resumed Monday morning at 9:30 o'clock.

INSURANCE WORLD.

A little woman in Denmark has established the most novel insurance company in the world. The Company for Insuring Women Against the Terrors of Penniless Spinsterhood, Ltd.! The purpose and business of the company is told in its title. No single woman in Denmark need look forward now with dread to the day when her chance for marrying is past. The means for providing for that gloomy time are at her hand. All that she needs to do is to take out a policy in this strange insurance company.

The policy in form is considerably like the regular annual premium, the amount graduated according to her age. At 40 she steps into a pension for life, provided that she has remained and is single. If she marries before reaching this dead line of matrimonial hopes her premiums accrue to the general insurance fund and go to benefit those less fortunate.

The Geological Survey, through its technologic branch, some time ago completed a series of preliminary fire tests of building materials which will soon be printed by the government in the form of a bulletin. The building materials were placed in a furnace where gas flames were forced by a blast of air against one side of the material. After two hours, in which the material was heated to the point expected in a conflagration, the material was taken from the furnace and the water turned on from a hose to get the conditions which obtain after the firemen begin their work. The conditions under which these tests were made were unusually severe, and as none of the materials passed perfectly, it proved a good test for comparative purposes. The tests were not in any way conclusive, being the first of an extended series of investigations, but they point out the weaknesses of the different materials.

The cost of fire to the country, including not only property destroyed, but maintenance of fire departments, payment of insurance premiums, protective agencies, additional cost of water supplies, etc., amounted to over $456,485,900 in 1907, or about 50 per cent. of the total value of the new building construction in that year. This fire tax exceeded the total value of coal, silver, copper and petroleum production of the United States in that year, and was thirteen times the interest on the national debt. Four-fifths of this loss, or $365,000,000 is preventable waste compared with the present European standard of building construction and fire losses.

The property loss from fires in the United States in 1907 was $2.51 per capita, while in the cities of six large European countries it was only 48 cents per capita. The total per capita loss, including interest and maintenance of fire departments, excessive water supplies, insurance premiums, etc., was $5.34. In addition, 1449 persons lost their lives in fires, while 5654 were injured.

A notable feature of this fire loss is that 27 per cent. was due to fires extending beyond the buildings where they originated. Such losses are the result of inflammable construction, for with brick and less inflammable buildings fires are most readily confined to the buildings in which they start. It is even more noticeable that only $68,000,000 of this loss was on brick, concrete, stone and other slow-burning construction, while double that amount, or about $148,000,000, was on frame buildings. In the last thirty-three years the total fire waste amounted to about $4,500,000,000.

The New York Life Insurance Company quit hiring agents on May 1 because of the New York insurance law limiting the amount of new insurance a company is permitted to acquire in any year.

The Wisconsin Legislature is considering some novel insurance measures. One of these, if enacted, will require all life insurance companies having policies in force in the State to make annual payment of fees to the State and to render annual statements, although the companies may have withdrawn from the State. This proposition is backed by the decision of the higher courts of the State in the test case brought against the Columbian National Life Insurance Company of Boston.

The Suffragette Cocktail.

The suffragette cocktail is the newest American drink.

Some other kinds of cocktail make a man want to go home and beat his wife. The new drink has exactly the opposite tendency. Two or three of the new drinks make a man go home and relinquish his position as head of the household to his wife and accord her all the privileges he now enjoys as a citizen.

That's true, for it has already been tried. A Hennepin-avenue bartender invented the new drink. Here's his recipe:

Sloe gin, French vermouth and Italian vermouth in equal parts to make a gill; mix in a cocktail glass, add a dash of orange bitters, twist in two strips of lemon peel and serve.

One makes a man willing to listen to the suffragettes' argument.

Two convince him that it has some merit.

Three make him a missionary, willing to spread the gospel abroad, and four make him go home and wash the dishes.—[Minneapolis Letter to the Pittsburgh Press.

I'll Cure You Without Drugs

Every sufferer nowadays finds himself surrounded by scores of so-called remedies. You see hundreds of advertisements of cure-alls. You see the many announcements of doctors (and some that are not doctors) offering to guarantee a cure with their concoctions for almost any sum. In nearly every case you will find the remedy is no better than the guarantee, which is usually worthless.

You have seen the patent medicines exposed by the U. S. Government. You know how these mixtures were loaded with alcohol and poisons. You have heard of the wrecks, the fiends, and of the chronic diseases resulting from the use of this factory-made dope, but you know nothing of the stuff that goes into the doctor's preparations. That individual has the right to put anything he desires into his medicines, and without any restrictions. You pay him his price for vile, poisonous mixtures which you force yourself to swallow, and try to believe it's doing you a lot of good.

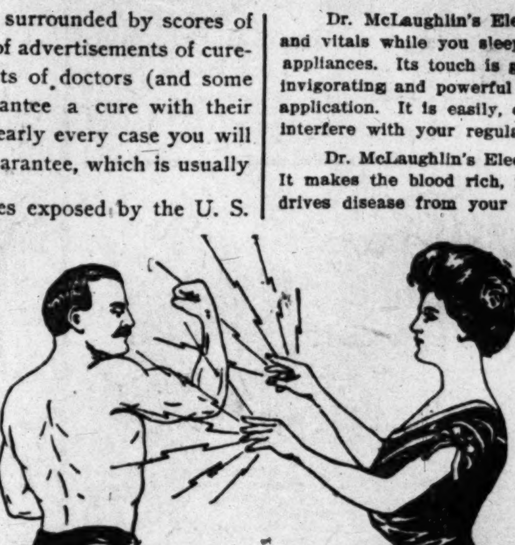
I have told you many times that drugs are made to sell, not to cure. You can't get strength, or vitality, or nourishment, or one thing that builds health, from poison. Every doctor knows this just as well as I know it.

My way of curing is to help Nature cure. Drugs don't do that. Nature wants nourishment, something that gives strength, power to the body. Drugs work against Nature. They tear down instead of building health. The help Nature needs is electricity—Nature's own medicine, pure, unadulterated.

When one part of your vital organism goes wrong the entire system suffers, and numerous ailments often develop. It is proven that electricity is the motive power, the force that runs every part of your body. The reason any organ breaks down or fails to work right is because it needs electricity. Restore that force and pain and sickness will disappear and strength will take the place of weakness.

Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt pumps electricity into your nerves and vitals while you sleep. It is entirely different from other electric appliances. Its touch is gentle, soothing, without shock or burn, yet so invigorating and powerful that you can feel the improvement after one application. It is easily, comfortably worn, and the use of it does not interfere with your regular work.

Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt knocks the spots out of rheumatism. It makes the blood rich, red and warm. It soothes weak nerves, and drives disease from your system. It has cured others, why not you?



"Your Electric Belt has cured me of rheumatism, cramps and general debility, and none of these troubles have returned since I stopped the treatment. I am 64 years old and feel as strong and well as I did at 40."—W. G. Beers, Long Beach, Cal.

"I was a very sick woman when I began your treatment. I suffered from kidney and digestive troubles, besides a serious female complaint."—Mrs. A. T. Whaley, Gardena, Cal

"Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt saved me from undergoing an operation, and I am now so well that I need no further treatment."—Mrs. Anna Dahlin, Walker, A. T.

NO TURNIP IN HORSE RADISH.

KNOCKERS FOR KNAVES ARE PURE FOOD LAWS.

Workings of Act Protect Honest Merchants, Relieving Them from Competition With Dealers in Short-Weight and Adulterated Goods.

BY G. W. BURTON.

WHILE Theodore Roosevelt is hunting big game in the wilds of Africa, one of his policies is beating game all over the United States. One of the great reforms inaugurated by the former President is pure food legislation. The Federal statute covers the shipment of goods from one State to another and its administration comes under the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Federal pure food law was the inspiration from which sprang the pure food laws passed in the several States. The California law is known as the Cartwright Act, as the bill was introduced in the Legislature by Senator Cartwright. It was to learn how retailers found this act working in practice that a representative of The Times the other day paid a visit to a considerable number of the large retail grocers and druggists of the city. In seeking information among local dealers the writer took pains to visit only retail dealers of known reputation for honesty in their business and truthfulness in their statements. The large retail grocers visited, and also the druggists, were absolutely unanimous in the declaration that they had advocated the passage of laws like the Cartwright Act from the very beginning of the agitation, that they rejoiced in the existence of just such laws, finding them a great protection to them in their honest dealings, and valuable restraints upon those who do business in a different way through dishonesty in handling spurious goods or giving light weight, making competition exceedingly hard to meet otherwise than by the policy of "fighting the devil with fire." They say the law in its practical application is proving the greatest safeguard to the honest dealer he has ever had.

EFFECT ON BUSINESS.

The first inquiry was as to whether the administration of the Cartwright Act had increased or diminished business. In answer to this question, the universal reply was that no noticeable effect had been observed. The fact is, the public must have about so much goods of the different staple varieties one year with another, and therefore no law would be likely to prevent people eating or increase their appetite. The volume of business, generally speaking, is considered to be about the same under the law as it would be had the act never been passed.

The second question put was as to whether it had given the retail dealer a great deal of trouble. Here again there was scarcely any variation of an important kind in the answers received. The druggists experienced more trouble than the grocers, but at first the inconvenience was quite considerable all along the line. One large retail druggist estimates that the making of new labels, involving a change in dies for trade marks and devices, and cost the house as much as [illegible]. Others gave a lesser sum as the expense they had been put to, and none of the grocers made much complaint under this head. As a general rule the expense of new labels, markings on packages, etc., fell upon the manufacturers.

HONEST MERCHANT PROTECTED.

The satisfaction expressed by the dealers as to the practical working of the Cartwright law was in the protection it affords an honest merchant. Take the matter of adulterated goods. A manufacturer of syrups is putting up two kinds. Before the Cartwright Act was passed one of these would be labeled "Maple Syrup," possibly with the adjective "pure" preceding the noun. This cost the retailer by the five or ten cases say $1.25 a gallon, less 10 per cent. for prompt payment. This was retailed at $1.50, or thereabout. The other syrup, labeled, perhaps, "Sugar Drips," cost about one-half the prices stated and retailed accordingly. The only difference between the two commodities was in the use of a little coloring matter, harmless in nature, and of a little flavoring extract, also innocent of the real product of the sugar maple. No expert in the grocery trade, any more than the most fastidious consumer, could have told that this imitation syrup was not the real article. In the first place, here was a gross injustice practiced upon the consumer, not by the retail merchant, who generally sold the goods in good faith, but by the dishonest manufacturer. It was a competition, too, that no honest manufacturer could meet. If an attempt were made to put real maple syrup, absolutely pure and genuine, neither the manufacturer nor the retail grocer who handled the goods could compete in price with the maker and seller of the spurious article.

Then there are spices. You go in to a grocer to buy your spices and he buys pepper at 20 cents wholesale, 18 cents and 16 cents. It all contains ground pepper, but the 20-cent pepper is all pepper, the 18-cent is a mixture containing 10 per cent. of the [illegible] but useless bark of a tree or ground cocoanut shell, and that sold at 16 cents contains 20 per cent. adulteration. Now the honest retailer is at a great disadvantage in competition with the dishonest one, and the [illegible] the dishonesty practiced the [illegible] the reputation for honest dealing and philanthropy earned by the [illegible]. The grocer who charged a fair price for pure pepper was considered a [illegible] man, dealing with whom [illegible] money. Here again he can tell the customer under the Cartwright Act by the label on his pepper box and tell how much spice and how much adulteration he is buying.

LIGHTWEIGHT GOODS.

There is a provision of the law which requires that goods sold by weight shall contain a mark specifying exactly the number of ounces or pounds avoirdupois contained in the package. Here again the law protects the honest dealer and makes dishonesty almost impossible and altogether dangerous. A retail grocer interviewed Wednesday contracts for 100,000 pounds of butter a year. Before the passage of the Cartwright Act he was receiving about twenty-eight ounces instead of thirty-two in a two-pound roll. He figures that he was losing about $1400 a year in butter.

Honest dealers were at a disadvantage in this respect in competing with the dishonest ones. The good [illegible] which had a high regard for his reputation tried earnestly to live up to the mark on the roll of butter, which read thirty-two ounces for the two-pound roll and sixteen ounces for the pound roll. This butter, let it be said, cost 40 cents a pound, and was sold retail at 45. The "philanthropist" on the next block was selling fourteen-ounce butter, twenty-eight ounces to the "two-pound" roll. Assuming that he paid the same price per full pound he could easily offer that for 40 cents a "pound," and make more money than the honest man at 45 cents, yet the full-weight grocer earned the reputation of being excessively dear.

So scrupulous are some of the grocers that when the butter is cut into squares every parcel is weighed, and, if there is a fraction of an ounce under weight in any square, a little lump is dabbed on to make up the full sixteen or thirty-two ounces as the case may be. It is said that some thoroughly honest retailers but with a large spice of shrewdness about them dab on a little lump on every square in order to satisfy their customers that they are getting full weight. If a two-pound roll does weigh a quarter of an ounce over weight, the honest grocer is still at no such disadvantage in competing with the other kind, who used to have not a fraction of an ounce advantage, but four ounces, on a two-pound roll.

NO NEED TO FALSIFY.

At the large houses where wines are handled inquiry was made as to what effect the Cartwright Act had upon the trade in California wines. Under this law as now administered, all that is necessary is to put the word "California" on the label. At first the word "type" was used, but the courts have decided that this is unnecessary. You may call your wine "California Burgundy," "California Sauterne," "California Chiante," or any other foreign name you may please.

The reason no effect has been produced by the Cartwright law in California wines is stated to be that people here have learned of the excellent quality of this State's vintages, and have been using them right along on their own honest merits. Few have resorted to the deception of offering California goods under spurious French labels. But in the East, where this practice had become common, it is thought the use of the California vintages will be very much advanced in States having laws which will prevent the use of fictitious labels.

SOME DISADVANTAGES.

Of course, it must not be expected that no disadvantages would arise in the administration of these new laws. Certain practices had grown up in trade naturally and harmlessly which did not conform to the truth. The law to be effective aimed at reaching accurate statements. For ages the coffees grown in the Dutch East Indies were collected at Java in the government house and kept there for three years before being permitted to be exported in order that they might ripen. Hence came the appellation "Old Government Java," or under the initials so familiar to the trade, "O. G." Now as a matter of fact a great deal of the coffee known under this mark was grown in Sumatra and Borneo. This is notably true of one of the finest of all these coffees, known from the place where it was grown as "Mandheling." Another notable coffee is the Arabian product known as Mocha. Coffee roasters and grocers have been offering a blend generally known as "Java-Mocha." As a matter of fact, these blends often contained as many as five different varieties of coffee, to the varieties named being added Bogota or Costa Rica. This can be done no longer. Mandheling is grown in the Island of Sumatra and cannot be marked "Java." Nor can any blend bear the name of any particular coffee or coffees unless the label specifies all the varieties entering in, with the proportion of each in the mixture.

That would be a great hardship, if there were no way to get around it. The law aims to be just, and courts construe laws according to their spirit rather than in absolutely strict adherence to the letter. Therefore a grocer may put up coffee, blending it in any way he may please, provided it contains nothing but coffee, and that it is not put forth purporting to be any particular variety of coffee. It may be put up as "H. J. Co.," grade No. 1, 2 or 3, or "A and C. Coffee."

Here again there is protection for the honest merchant. Large coffee roasters under the old go-as-you-please way of doing business put up hundreds of tons of roasted coffee under such names as "Java-Mocha," which contained not a grain of either variety. Packers of ground coffee put up all kinds of adulterations, invented high-sounding names and foisted them off upon an unsuspecting and not discriminating public. These forms of deception are "knocked out" by the Cartwright law.

COLD-STORAGE TROUBLES.

Commodities which have been in cold storage, under the pure-food laws must be offered to the public as such. If the act be administered in strict accordance with the letter some inconvenience is possible here, too. For example, in very hot summer weather butter and eggs cannot be kept in the open air even for a day. Grocerymen have precooled storerooms into which eggs and butter are put sometimes for a day, possibly for a week in extremely warm weather. By the strict letter of the law, these become cold-storage goods. The eggs may have been rattled over ten or twenty miles of California roads in a farm wagon to market, and, if they have, they will often sound shaky to the human ear. Mr. Inspector enters the store, finds an unusually cold egg or a preternaturally solid roll of butter, and confiscates it as cold-storage goods. The grocers in some cases are exercised over this phase of the law and are waiting with anxiety until the courts decide a case in point. Dealers are hoping that the courts will take a rational view of the question and decide the case brought to bar on its merits, and according to the spirit rather than to the absolute letter of the law.

CATCH MANUFACTURERS.

Some complaint is made because the law aims at the innocent retailer instead of placing all the responsibility upon the culpable manufacturer. It is impossible, evidently, for a retail dealer, even of the largest operations, to install a chemical laboratory presided over by a competent chemist and have a quantitative and qualitative analysis made of all the goods handled in his store. Without such analysis he is unable to decide whether goods are adulterated or not within the scope of the pure-food laws. Yet, if such adulterated goods are found in his hands and offered for sale, he is liable to prosecution and to severe punishment.

Uncle Sam Studies Problems of Evaporation.

Result Will Be of Value in Irrigation Projects.

Elaborate Experiments Going on at Salton Sea.

Problems of evaporation, the solution of which is expected to be of great value in irrigation projects, are to be studied by the United States Weather Bureau at Salton Sea. The station at which the observations will be taken is located on the Southern Pacific near Salt Creek bridge, about one mile from Durmid and three and one-half miles from Salton. The plant, which is the most complete and extensive of its kind, was constructed under the supervision of Arthur B. Wollaber, in charge of the Weather Bureau at Los Angeles.

Observations have already begun under the direction of Benjamin C. Kaddell, section director of the Weather Bureau, assisted by James W. Robeson, Harris A. Jones, and Bernard Laskowski. Prof. Frank H. Bigelow of Washington, D. C., who is at the head of the climatological section of the work, will arrive soon, and will place operations on an exact scientific basis.

A preliminary examination was made in 1907 of the Salton Sea and its neighborhood, with a view to its availability for extensive research into the laws controlling the rate of evaporation of water in the open air over large lakes and reservoirs. The tests showed that it is a splendid field for that purpose.

The Salton Sea is an inland lake, created by the waters of the Colorado River, when they broke through its banks, cutting a new channel and flooding an immense basin, which is believed to have been at one time the bed of a great inland sea. The break took place in 1903, and it was not until 1907 that it was effectually closed. How that was accomplished by E. H. Harriman, at the urgent request of President Roosevelt, is familiar history.

SEA'S DIMENSIONS.

The sea is nearly fifty miles in length and eighteen wide. Although the Alamo and New rivers are still discharging into it, there has been a subsidence of the water amounting to about seven feet.

This great basin can never be drained because it is below the level of the sea. How long it will take the water to dry up under the slow process of evaporation is a problem difficult of computation. Soundings recently made show that the sea in places is seventy-eight feet deep.

As it is surrounded by a desert shore, it has been necessary for the government to build comfortable quarters for the observers at the evaporation station. These include an ample dwelling, storage shed and boat landing. Four towers, for the purpose of observation, have also been erected. These are of open framework, about 40 feet high. One is located on land, about 1500 feet from the sea; another stands in 25 feet of water, about 450 feet west of the railroad bridge; the third is about one-half mile from the bridge, in 40 feet of water, and the fourth, a mile and a half from the shore, in 55 feet of water. A gasoline launch has been provided to carry the observers and supplies to and from the towers.

PANS ON PLATFORMS.

There are platforms every ten feet on the towers, and on each platform is a galvanized iron pan, two feet in diameter and filled with water. Observations will be taken every four hours. The data will show the amount of water lost by evaporation, its temperature; that of the air at the surface of the pan and of the air above the pan. Computations will also be made as to the humidity and the vapor tension.

As the velocity of the wind is an important factor, anemometers will be placed at the top of the towers and near the surface of the water. More scientific experiments will be made as the work progresses and self-recording apparatus will be installed. One of the most interesting and delicate pieces of mechanism will measure the evaporation. This machine has only recently been perfected.

AUXILIARY POINTS.

In addition to the work at the main station, observations will be taken at four auxiliary points, known as two-pan stations. These are at Indio and Mecca, on the upper shore of the sea; at Brawely, in the Imperial Valley, and at Mammoth, in the desert. The data taken at these auxiliary stations will be similar to that taken at the main station, but with a six-foot pan on the ground and a two-foot one ten feet in the air.

The object of this extensive research is to determine a formula for evaporation that will be of practical value to engineers. In irrigation projects it is important to know just what volume of water will be lost by evaporation under normal conditions in order to build reservoirs large enough to meet all emergencies. The determination of this formula has proven a much more difficult task than was anticipated. When the problem at first seemed to have been solved, it was found that the formula devised did not cover all conditions. Then further experiments were deemed necessary, and the work has been extended until now there are twenty stations scattered through Nebraska, Wyoming, Idaho, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico and California, at which observations will be taken during the next two years. There is a total of more than 100 pans, the evaporation from which will be recorded four times a day.

CONFIDENCE OF SUCCESS.

The working out of a practical evaporation formula is in the hands of Prof. Frank Bigelow, who, despite many disappointments, is confident of his ultimate success. The matter involves many mathematical intricacies, which it would be impossible to put into terms that would be clear to a layman.

Experiments to date have shown that the vital terms in a practical formula are the temperature of the water surface, the temperature of the air, taken by both wet and dry bulb thermometers, and the velocity of the wind. Besides these there are, according to Prof. Bigelow, some unknown terms which may involve certain difficult physical processes, like diffusion and mixture of gases. It is the search for these unknown terms that is now being prosecuted so vigorously.

ADVERTISING PAYS BIG

THE LAST RAISE

April 15, 1909.

The last raise ($1.20 to $1.25 a share made April 15, 1909) resulted in adding 50 new subscriptions and fully justified the methods adopted, viz; judicious advertising of the fact that "Home Builders" is doing an open and above board home building business profitably without speculation. The direct cash returns from new subscriptions, together with the incoming monthly installments of interest and principal, has enabled the building department to take on several new and profitable jobs out of the many awaiting good ones.

A SAFE PLAN

The plan of "Home Builders" is to make a contract for the sale of the home in advance of construction; then, with the first or down payment in hand, to proceed in the usual manner. The balance on the contract is payable in installments with interest. This interest, with the building profits re-invested, create the profit fund, out of which CASH DIVIDENDS ARE PAID QUARTERLY, the remainder being carried to the surplus account. This plan and system affords absolute safety.

ANOTHER RAISE

June 1, 1909.

The next raise from $1.25 to $1.30 a share will occur June 1, 1909. Before this increase we expect to add 100 MORE SUBSCRIPTIONS, yielding money enough to justify starting a few more homes during June, all without risk of debt or speculation and with fair profits to all of "Home Builders'" stockholders, now so rapidly increasing. Another raise will be made soon by reason of this rapid growth and the confidence manifested by the investing public.

HELP TO LOS ANGELES.

Such Is Belief of Local Hotel Men Regarding Ticket Prices to Seattle Fair.

The announcement of the special rates for the Seattle exposition, favoring Los Angeles in a remarkable degree, is causing the hotel men to prepare for an especially busy summer season. The rates made by the Western Passenger Association will be: From Chicago to the Pacific Coast and return via Seattle, $62.50, while the round trip from Chicago to Seattle will be $77.25, a difference of $14.75 in favor of Los Angeles.

The rate will obviate the necessity for sending missionaries to the exposition, in the opinion of the hotel men, as the lower rate will suffice to bring practically all of the eastern visitors to the fair through Los Angeles. Stopovers are allowed each way, and it goes without saying that few will go to the fair without also seeing Los Angeles.

DIES IN LOUNGING ROOM.

Former Los Angeles Man's Body Found in Canton, O., Hours After He Passed Away.

Henry A. Trump, formerly connected with the Title Guarantee and Trust Company of Los Angeles, and more recently president of the Trump Abstract Company of Canton, O., died of heart failure last week.

The sad news reached this city yesterday. Mr. Trump had a host of friends and acquaintances here, where he had spent the greater part of his life.

He had fixed up the basement of his office building as a den and lounging room, and there friends found him, lying on the floor. He had been dead more than eight hours.

He leaves two brothers. Interment will be in Canton.

LEADING WOMAN SUED.

Frank J. Davey, formerly assistant city ticket agent of the Salt Lake road here, has filed in St. Joseph, Mo., a suit for divorce from Berta Mills of New York, leading woman in "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge" company. While the ground stated is desertion, the plaintiff's mother says the real reason why her son desires separation from his wife is that she persisted in going on the stage, in opposition to his wishes. The couple were married in St. Joseph, about five years ago, when the bride was a soloist in one of the leading churches. Davey came to Los Angeles, two years ago, but is now a resident of St. Louis.

FIREWORKS FOR ELKS.

Splendid Pyrotechnic Exhibition to Be Given to Swell Entertainment and Lighting Funds.

To increase the entertainment fund and that for the illumination of the streets during the B.P.O.E. convention in July, the local members of the order have arranged for a spectacular fireworks display at Fiesta Park the week of May 24-29.

Pain's pyrotechnics, both in America and Europe, are well known for their excellence and are unlike anything else in the amusement line. The programme will also include chariot racing, acrobatics, dancing, stirring music and gorgeous pageants.

OPEN LETTER.

LOS ANGELES, May 8.—Capt. D. M. Smith, Counsel for the Model License League, Los Angeles, care "The Alexandria."

Dear Sir: I listened to your address today noon before the City Club. It is the first regular address I ever heard on the liquor side of the question, and I was interested.

I do not take the same view that you do, of course, being a prohibitionist; and, therefore, would like to meet you in public debate upon this subject; and so I hereby challenge you to a series of public debates in the city of Los Angeles upon various phases of the question. Debate to extend over three or four evenings, a small admittance to be charged to pay expenses, and if any surplus remains it should be equally divided for the benefit of the causes which we represent. I am a smaller man than you, have not so fine a voice, and am not so good looking. If you accept, we will meet and arrange details. Hoping for an early and favorable response, and assuring you that it will secure a better hearing for the merits of our respective sides than they would otherwise get, I am

Yours respectfully,
EDGAR LEAVITT.

Let Kodol Digest What You Eat

Then you can Eat what you like, for Kodol will do exactly what your stomach does when it is well.

You once could eat anything you wanted, and your stomach would digest it.

But now there are some things which your stomach won't digest. Your stomach absolutely refuses to accommodate you when you eat certain food—so you have been forced by your stomach to eat food which you digested and pass up those delicacies that you would have really enjoyed.

There is a way now to eat any thing you like, if you will let Kodol digest it.

Kodol will do this, too. It won't talk back or command, but will go right ahead with its work and digest all the food you eat. Kodol will let you eat anything you like. You will not have that heart-burn which is so annoying at times, if you will let Kodol digest your food a while.

You don't have to use Kodol long —only for a little while—just long enough for your stomach to rest a little. It gets tired sometimes, too —just the same as anybody or part of your body that works.

Kodol will do the same work as the stomach, when it is well and strong. Every tablespoonful will digest 2¼ pounds of food.

Our Guarantee. Get a dollar bottle of Kodol. If you are not benefited—the druggist will at once return your money. Don't hesitate; any druggist will sell you Kodol on these terms. The dollar bottle contains 2½ times as much as the 50c bottle. Kodol is prepared in the laboratories of E. C. De Witt & Co., Chicago.

Other Driver (the old type)—"Sure, I smoke. I ain't paid not to. Nothin' like smoke to do a refrigerator good!"

The old-time ice man and the new type, the man who serves you ice from the "Orange Wagons"—what a difference! It used to be that taking ice was quite a task in this town. You did not know whether you got full weight ice or not, and you did not care to talk very much with the individual who served you. He was apt to "come back" at you pretty hard if you criticised the service or asked the weight.

Criticise the new man or ask him how many pounds he is bringing you. See how he acts and what he says. You will find him courteous and very anxious to please you. And you will find that he will tell you just how many pounds of ice he is delivering—and that you can prove him up.

We supply our ice customers with free measuring rules and tables of weight. By means of these, they can readily ascertain just how many pounds of ice are delivered. And our system today is such that we can absolutely guarantee every customer full-weight ice—and satisfactory service. For years we have labored to bring this thing about. Now we have succeeded.

Wouldn't it be satisfactory to you to utilize this kind of ice service? If you really feel that way, put us to the test. Just telephone us for the free measuring rule and table of weights—and for ice.

You will like the way your order is received—and you will like the way it is filled. You will find the ice pure, the service cheerful, willing and accurate—and the ice FULL WEIGHT. Our phones are Home 10053, and Sunset Main 8191. Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Company.

They are charitable toward one another.

"The hop association is the only one in the world where the members will take the risk of arrest and long punishment simply to get drugs in for the relief of their friends. They steal, beg or borrow to get the money to buy the drug and then share it with those inside without receiving a cent of payment and expecting no recompense other than that the prisoners will do the same toward them when they are arrested.

"The process is this. A hop head knows that his term is about out. He knows that the chain gang will be working in a certain place for some days to come. One or two days before his release he points out a small rock or bush and says that he will leave the dope there after he has been released. As soon as he gets out he buys the stuff and leaves it in the place agreed upon. The dope is put there at night. The next day the gang goes to the vicinity to work. The prisoners lounge about while eating their noon meal. They will sit beneath a tree or in the shade of a bush or stoop over near a small rock to tie a shoe string and if the guards happen to be attending to some business a little way from them the prisoners quickly take the small bottle and smuggle it back to jail.

"When a man is suspected he is searched. The prisoners have various places in which they hide the stuff after getting it in the stockade so that it will last several days.

"Yenshe, or the ashes of opium, which the hop heads chew, is one of the most popular drugs because it is easy to get and cheap and can be handled by the prisoners without preparation. They put it in their mouths and keep it in all day, just like a man with a chew of tobacco."

Greenewald Case Goes Up.

Deputy District-Attorney McCartney yesterday took up the case of Al Greenewald, a local cigar dealer who was convicted of selling lottery tickets several months ago and put on probation pending good behavior.

Greenewald's period of probation will end next Thursday. Last week W. H. Young was arrested and fined $75 on a charge of selling lottery tickets. He stated that he was connected with the Greenewalds and that he secured his tickets from them.

In investigating the case Deputy Prosecuting Attorney Seymour found that the violation of a State probation would come under the jurisdiction of the District Attorney's office and the case was turned over to that department. If the evidence is deemed sufficient, Greenewald will be taken into court to show cause as to why he should not serve out sentence for violation of probation.

MODEL LICENSES.

Counsel for Liquor Men's League Argues While Anti-Saloon President Takes Notes.

While Capt. D. M. Smith was discussing 'Model Liquor License Regulations" before the City Club yesterday, Rev. E. S. Chapman, president of the Anti-Saloon League, was taking abundant notes in order to answer the "model" argument at next week's club luncheon, if that date is available.

Capt. Smith is the general counsel of the Model License League, an organization of liquor dealers which has for its motto, "Put the saloon-keeper out of politics and put the lawbreaking saloon out of business." Capt. Smith went to the Bible for authority for the use of alcoholic beverages. In it he found texts that preached temperance and the use, not the abuse, of liquor, but none that advocates prohibition.

The model license the league proposes for uniform adoption is that the number of saloons shall be limited according to population in each city, and that on the first conviction of a saloon-keeper for violation of the law his permit shall be suspended for a definite period, usually thirty days, and for a second conviction it shall be automatically revoked.

Capt. Smith comes from Louisville, and he complimented Los Angeles on its long-maintained limit on the number of saloons. But he also urged that the evil resorts be broken up, illicit liquor selling punished and blind pigs destroyed. The licensed retailer has a right to be protected, just the same as any other business, from illegal competition.

The address was not received by the club with the usual enthusiasm, because that organization is just now waiting to see what position it must take toward the saloons if they decide to "be good" and get out of politics here.

BAUMGARDT TONIGHT.

The Baumgardt lecture in Symphony Hall this evening will be entirely different from the usual in the series. "The Stars" will be considered, with stereopticon views from negatives obtained principally at our own observatories of Yerkes and Lick. These views convey to eye and mind the surprising progress made during recent years in celestial photography and research. The lecture opens with ideas and views of our nearest neighbor, the moon. The planets are taken up in their respective orders and distances from the sun, Jupiter and Saturn, with their wonderful satellite systems, being dealt with in detail.

MINES AND MINING—Activities in the Ore Districts of the Great Southwes

GOLDFIELD.

THREE DEALS CONSUMMATED.

Great Corporation Buys Big Hawthorne Mine.

Millionaire Has Purchased Pioneer Property.

Wingfield to Operate Fairview Claims.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

GOLDFIELD, May 7.—Three deals, greater than any consummated since the organization of the Consolidated were put through to the satisfaction of both sides. These transactions involved property in camps widely separated and the buyers are represented by equally diverse interests. Not one of the sales were of the class that calls for stock transfers but were made for real money that ran up into the six ciphers.

In the first place John Miller of Hawthorne, who was but an ordinary country grocer up to six months ago, turned an option over to the United States Smelting and Refining Company on the Alamo and Lucky Boy claims at Hawthorne for the sum of $1,500,000, extending over a period of five months with the first installment due on May 25. The seller is not a bit particular whether or not this option is exercised, as he says he can take out that much ore in the same length of time. He is shipping at the rate of 100 tons a day. This is the same property for which a St. Louis capitalist offered $900,000 cash three weeks ago.

The next deal was the sale of the Pioneer and Conservative claims at Pioneer to D. R. C. Brown, the millionaire of Aspen, Colo., who visited this camp last week with former Gov. Thomas of Colorado as his legal adviser. He took a fancy to the claims of the Tobin Brothers from which they have shipped during the past month a thousand tons of $100 ore. This sale was begun in this city and was completed last night in Denver, where all the parties reside. As the buyer is not issuing stock, but proposes to operate on his own account, the consideration could not be ascertained.

The last and most important, although not involving as much money, was the acquisition of the Nevada Hills Mine at Fairview, in Churchill county, by George Wingfield, for approximately $750,000. According to report the property will be combined with the Fairview Eagles, that is owned solely by him. The transfer will be made by the purchase of 600,000 shares of the Nevada Hills, quoted in San Francisco at $1.40. Francis Bosqui, the engineer who designed the big Consolidated mill which has proven such an eminent success, has also drafted plans for a 100-stamp mill at the new concern that will treat the ores of both properties. The Nevada Hills had been owned in Salt Lake, although it was a Goldfield discovery through a grubstake that had been furnished by Walter Whitemore and a few others of this city four years ago. The property has always been regarded as a rich prospective dividend payer from its conception. The company paid $375,000 to the stockholders and then the management came to the conclusion that more profits could be extracted by a thorough milling plant than by shipping to the smelters. Before deciding on this the company began extensive development to determine what ore bodies could be relied upon for an exhaustive test, and when the mine was thoroughly sampled, the exact process was suggested by Engineer Bosqui. This sale means that before the first of the year Nevada will have another mill with a capacity of 600 tons a day to swell the gold output for next year.

HAWTHORNE IS AHEAD.

The Hawthorne rush is beating the best records of every other new camp in the State except Tonopah and Goldfield, as there is no abatement to the excitement and people are pouring in at the rate of thirty to forty a day. The town of Lucky Boy, at the mines six miles from Hawthorne, has a population of over a thousand, while in the old county seat of Hawthorne the census has been swelled by 2000. The greatest accession came from Rawhide, where in a single night the entire floating population and some of the time-honored mainstays pulled up stakes and lit out for the new lead camp.

They came in all kinds of vehicles and rigs from the automobile to the plain burro that patiently bore his owner's belongings to the new excitement. Barber poles, chairs, saloon signs and all other impedimenta of a mining camp were dragged across the northern end of the county to Hawthorne where men, women and cattle were herded together in the public square like a gypsy city that had sprung up in a night. There was no help for it.

The square is claimed by a corporation that acquired it as a timber claim thirty years ago and an effort was made to oust the squatters but they were too numerous to be dispossessed. Dance halls, loose women and cheap dives broke out with the coming of the morning sun and the peaceful farmers of Hawthorne were amazed at the sight that greeted their eyes when they rubbed the sleep out of them the next morning. But then one must expect some excitement when fortunes are being dug out of the ground every day and the State has been convinced the lead, instead of gold, is now king.

Gov. Mitchell, who had sunk several fortunes in and around Goldfield chasing the elusive high-grade, is one of the fortunate ones, as it was only today that Johnny Miller, the owner of the Lucky Boy, made a bet with Mitchell of a trip around the world that the Mitchell lease would yield not less than $800,000 net in the next twelve months. That is the way they are all looking at it, and other excitements have been cast into the shade by the all-engrossing lead boom. A couple of Los Angeles promoters have come into the camp, but they are doing more mining in the newspapers and saloons than in the ground, and may be expected to pick up some easy money from their friends back home on the coast.

As an illustration of the quick turns that are being made in the camp and the demand for ground at constantly increasing prices, is a deal consummated on the Mountain King Extension. About a month ago Mr. Fairfield bought a one-fourth interest in this property for $800 from J. F. Clarke; R. V. LeGrande owned another fourth and Adams held one-half. A few days ago the property was sold to St. Louis parties for $20,000.

Joe Hutchinson and E. C. Highley have secured a lease on the Mountain [illegible] an engine can be placed on the ground.

In deference to the enormous crowds that are pouring into the camp, the County Commissioners have resolved to lease the old Courthouse for hotel purposes, and thus the place will have the second-best hotel in the State, with the added convenience of a ready-made jail in one wing to take care of obstreperous patrons.

CONSOLIDATED REPORT.

The first quarterly report of the Consolidated is one of the most satisfactory documents of that character that has ever been turned out by a Nevada mine. During the first three months the company mined 46,119 tons, of which 45,747 was milled, earning $1,905,245.17. After deducting expenses of $306,480.33, the treasury was enriched by $1,598,764.84. The milling costs during March were $20.05 per ton. Incidentally all records for the Hampton stope were broken, when returns from a carload containing thirty-three tons gave an average value of 72.84 ounces in gold per ton. This means over $48,000 for the thirty-three tons, or $15,000 more than the best previous shipment of similar magnitude. Milling ores have finally been cut from the high average of $60 to $45, or close to what the mill was designed to treat, as there is a loss of values above that figure. Mining has progressed from the Combination, Mohawk and Red Top shafts and the most notable development has been in the Combination, where the bonanza recently discovered has already produced more than $900,000, and promises to at least equal the production of any of the famous bonanza leases on the Mohawk. The Clermont shaft has reached a depth of 1050 feet, and a complete plant has been installed in preparation for the exploration of the deeper level. After paying the dividend of April 30 the company had in its treasury the sum of $1,000,000. The net earnings for four months, unofficially reported, are as follows: Tons, 65,599, with net values of $2,725,345.17; the total cost of production, $425,980.33.

The bullion tax report for the last quarter shows that the Pittsburgh Silver Peak handled a tonnage of 35,753 tons, valued at $251,508.02, and the production of the Lucky Boy was $106,620.35, which is the first official report from the Hawthorne lead district.

PAPER PRINTS PIPE DREAMS.

SALOME GLORY HOLE WAS NOT LOOTED AT ALL.

Leading Business Men of Phoenix Who Bonded Property Lost on the Transaction—Rich Mines Likely to Be Developed, But Not in That Way—Mines Doing Well.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) May 7.—In correspondence appearing in the Prescott Journal-Miner dated at Winchester, Ariz., has appeared a reiteration of the charge that the members of the Phoenix syndicate that bonded and then relinquished the Arizona Northern claims near Vicksburg are a set of grafters, who sought only to loot the "glory hole" of its riches and then throw the despoiled property back on its owners. As a fact, the men who bonded the property include some of the most responsible and best respected of the business men of this city, men who have stood a considerable loss in connection with the transaction, and who have kept their mouths closed about it all.

C. B. King of the Southwestern Realty Company and George H. Halm, vice-president of the Valley Bank, were two of the members of the syndicate. To the testimony of their associate, Mr. Sharpe, heretofore given in The Times, they emphatically state that the bonding company took away from the property not over 150 pounds of the "picture rock," worth not over $2000, and probably not that. Four ore sacks of the rich stuff were brought down by another individual, but they had nothing to do with that, as it was sent down by the owners, Barker, Griffin and Algier. Several hundred people appeared to be packing around specimens secured freely from the owners, and one small boy was seen at Vicksburg with a hatful of gold rock that must have been worth at least $250. After the bond was given up and the property reverted to the owners, it is stated that prospectors stole a considerable quantity of good-looking rock and took it down to water, thinking to pan out riches, but failing, for the ore left was not as good as it looked. The syndicate put in $6500, of which $4500 was paid to the owners. Mr. King states his firm belief that the Arizona Northern is a great prospect and that it contains a mine, even if the gold pocket was found to have a bottom.

AWAKENING ON BORDER.

A great awakening is predicted for the Ajo district, along the Mexican border, south of Gila Bend. This district was the first to be worked by Americans in the Southwest, shipping copper and silver bullion, smelted in rude furnaces, back in the days immediately after the Gadsden purchase. The Rendell Mining and Reduction Company has been working claims in that neighborhood and has been making plans for a railroad to a point on the Southern Pacific near Gila Bend. It is understood, however, that the Rendell claims and a large number of others have been consolidated by S. W. Mudd of New York, and that a new corporation, with ample capital assured, will not only build a railroad but will develop the mines and erect large reduction works. A part of this property is that being operated by the Cornelia Copper Company, which has a small concentration mill, working copper ore, the concentrates running 50 per cent. copper and $26 to the ton in gold. The deepest workings in the district, though it has been under development for fifty years, are only 176 feet and most of the old workings are almost valueless in character. It is predicted that this will be found one of the greatest copper fields in the Southwest.

MERRY CHRISTMAS.

The American Finance and Securities Company is reported as holding options upon the Saddle Mountain, London-Arizona, London Range and Ball copper mines around Christmas, altogether comprising 3000 acres. This company is, to a degree, affiliated with the Development Company of America, which, under subsidiary companies, holds the principal mines at Tombstone, Silver Bell, Poland and Congress. Mr. Kurtz, its representative, stated in Phoenix that he never saw a district where surface indications are better than around Christmas. He has put a number of men at work sampling the properties, and some development will be done before any further progress is made on the option. If the deal is made, it will entail the construction of large concentration works and of a smelter for at least 1000 tons daily, to be built at some point on the Phoenix and Eastern Railroad near Christmas or Winkleman.

The Saddle Mountain property already has upon it a small smelter, but has no facilities for turning out copper at a profit at present price. If the sale is perfected, it will mean that five of the largest mining syndicates in the United States have become heavily interested in a district lying between Kelvin and Mammoth, a district generally believed by mining men to be the future great copper-producing section of Arizona, with immense bodies of low-grade sulphide ore.

RAILROAD MUST REFUND.

The Kelvin-Calumet Copper Company is to receive return of $1330 from the Southern Pacific by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as a result of a complaint of excessive freight charges on shipments of fuel oil.

The company operating the old Vulture mine has issued its first statement of progress, giving the news that since early in February a part of the old mill, theretofore repaired and overhauled, has been operated, the first clean-up yielding 115 ounces of gold bullion, valued at $1800. The mine has been unwatered and drifting has been prosecuted on the 450-foot level. The 550-foot level is now free of water, and development will be begun on this level at once. During the past six months over 1000 feet of underground work has been done. Oil has been substituted for wood for fuel at a saving of about $1000 a month. During the palmy days of the camp the water supply was pumped from the Hassayampa, about nine miles. Heavy boring apparatus has been purchased and a new well is 350 feet deep, and is to be sunk with the hope of getting water before 1000 feet of depth is reached. That in the mine is heavily mineralized, utterly unfit to drink, containing a large percentage of arsenic. About fifty men are employed at present.

Several power drills are being operated day and night on the 120 and 380-foot levels of the old Vekol, near Casa Grande, which was once considered a great silver mine. Silver is still being produced, but the lower levels are in copper of the richest kind.

The Old Dominion's April production was about 3,000,000 pounds of Bessemerized copper.

Though a sale of the Gibson copper mines near Globe still is pending, considerable development is being done. On the 600-foot level has been cut a body of talc in which have been found bunches of chalcopyrite running 25 per cent. copper. On the 400-foot level is a two-foot body of chalcopyrite running as high as 30 per cent., and near by a four-foot ledge averaging about 8 per cent.

The Miami Copper's main shaft, near Globe, is 400 feet deep. Grading is being pushed for the mill and power-house, and for ore bins and a number of new buildings are being erected in readiness for the installation of the first concentration unit of 1500 tons daily capacity. The company is developing water and has purchased additional water rights in the Miami Valley.

It is announced that the Arizona Commercial's new smelter at Globe will be completed and in operation by August 15. The plant will be erected under the personal supervision of General Manager J. W. Bennie, who will go from Clifton.

The Old Dominion Company is still pumping about 5,000,000 gallons of water a day, despite efforts made to divert from the mining ground the ordinary flow of Pinal Creek, which runs over a part of the workings.

EL TIGRE SALE.

B. A. Sitz of Kansas City, a director in the Tigre, is in Douglas looking after rich mining property in Sonora, south of that point. From him details have been learned of its proposed sale. He states that T. H. Leggett, and Frederick Hellman, representing New York and London capitalists, have been given an option on two-thirds of the stock for $3,900,000, one-half to be paid by August 21 and the remainder by November 21. There will be a meeting in Douglas within a few days, at which it is proposed to raise the capital stock from $650,000 to $8,000,000, of which $1,000,000 will be reserved as treasury stock and sold to increase the reduction facilities at the mine and to provide for further development. Mr. Hellman also has been on the ground, investigating the mine before the deal is finally closed. It is understood that the commission he and his associates are to receive will be about $250,000. He has had much experience in the mines of South Africa, having been employed on the Rand for twelve years. He has also traveled through Eastern Africa on mining business, through the country where President Roosevelt is hunting.

The new office building of the Calumet and Arizona Company at Warren has been completed and is being occupied by the officers.

R. H. Hogue, a mining engineer, has sued John R. Wood and the San Antonio Copper Company for $50,000, a sum alleged to be due him in the capitalization and sale of the San Antonio property in the Ures district of Sonora.

At Tombstone, the pumps are handling about 7,000,000 gallons of water a day from the 1000-foot level. An immense amount of ore is being taken out, running high in gold, silver and lead, very little being done toward the development of the copper body found on the company's Emerald property.

The April production of the Copper Queen smelter at Douglas was about 8,500,000 pounds, the Calumet and Arizona's barely 4,000,000 pounds.

Last week from the Shattuck and Arizona mines at Bisbee were shipped 600 tons of 15 per cent. copper ore.

Some Douglas men have formed a company for developing coal mines eighteen miles northwest of Paradise. An odd feature about this coal is that it has not been made to burn by any one who has yet tried it, though a large amount of development has been done on the property. It looks like coal but it does not act like coal. The general opinion seems to be that the stuff is a sort of obsidian.

A new town, to be called Shamrock, has been laid out in the Chiricahua Mountains by the Bisbee-Sonora Development Company, in a delightful location in a pine forest, with an abundance of pure water. The name has been given in honor of a number of Irish priests, who are heavy stockholders, and the lots are to be distributed as premiums to the owners of shares. The main mine is given high praise by those who have investigated it, the development thus far being almost entirely through ore that runs high in copper. Thus far $53,000 has been spent on the mines.

It is reported that Superintendent Williams on June 1 will take entire charge of the Moctezuma copper mines and concentrator at Nacosari and Pilares, and that Manager James Douglas will move to another field, with headquarters at Douglas.

About 250 men are being employed in the development of the Black Mountain mines near Magdalena, Sonora, a Cole-Ryan property.

County Assessor Tom Campbell of Yavapai county has figured that the total production of the larger mines of his county for 1908 was $6,113,092. The largest producer was the United Verde, $5,460,808; the Congress produced $192,130; the Octave, $116,374; the Ideal, $86,725; the Interior Mining and Trust Company, $86,814, and the Poland, $77,859.

AROUND TUCSON.

BIG COMPANY FORMING.

TUCSON, May 6.—E. B. Kurtz of Cleveland, one of the chief officials of the American Finance and Sureties Company; C. L. Kurtz, general manager for the Guanajuato Mines Company at Guanajuato, Mex., and E. W. Brooks of Los Angeles, who is connected with the London-Arizona company in Pinal county, left here today in an automobile to inspect the El Tiro mine, Silverbell district, in which they are interested and which is being developed by eastern capitalists and is rapidly forging to the front. At present 100 miners are on the pay roll and a second camp of considerable size has sprung up in the Silverbell district. The El Tiro adjoins the Imperial. The trio have just inspected the Kelvin and Christmas districts, Pinal county, and, it is reported, have taken options on the Saddle Mountain, the London-Arizona, the London Range and the Ball properties to consolidate them in one large corporation.

The Saddle Mountain is the only one of the quartette yet worked on an extensive scale. At one time Christmas camp had a population of 1000. However, little work has been done during the past two years.

Mr. Kurtz has been a big factor in forming companies to develop Arizona properties and it was through him that the Development Company of America, owning the Silverbell, Tombstone, Congress and Poland mines, was formed.

Tucson parties have secured the Paymaster mine, located about twenty miles south of this city, and are working on an extensive scale. The Paymaster was owned by Boston parties, who bonded it to another company, which failed to make good. It has now been acquired by Tucson parties.

Active operations are being continued on the Esperanza mine in the same district. A strike of a ledge carrying high lead and silver values has just been made on the 200-foot level in this mine. Pumps are being installed to take care of the water and when this difficulty is remedied the shaft will be sunk lower.

Within a short time, the Twin Buttes will start sinking a new double-compartment shaft on its Morgan mine to 800 feet. The shipments at present are eight carloads each week. This could be increased but it is not deemed advisable in view of the present price of copper.

Machinery has been ordered for the Three Nations group in the Twin Buttes district where development is being continued steadily.

Lawson's Retirement from Management of the Balaklala Welcomed—His Control Not Best for Stockholders, It Is Thought—Los Angeles People Invest Money.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

GRASS VALLEY (Cal.) May 7.—Three hundred thousand dollars from a three-foot vein in less than five weeks is the record of the Sixteen-to-One mine at Alleghany. And this has been done by eight men working with picks and shovels in a tunnel that is being driven to open the property. No stoping or drifting has been done on the vein, the ore produced being taken out in the course of driving the adit further ahead. Over $100,000 has been taken out during the last ten days, and Superintendent E. H. Wilson is authority for the statement that the vein is improving as further depth is attained. The ore is of the tellurium variety and the vein gives every indication of permanency. It has thus far been opened for seventy feet, with the vein showing increasing width and increasing values. The strike is the greatest in the history of Sierra county, and one of the most sensational made in California for years. Arrangements are being made thoroughly to develop the bonanza shoot, and within the next few weeks it is expected that the Sixteen-to-One will startle the mining world. Colorado people are chiefly interested and have secured options on a number of other properties in the immediate vicinity. E. A. Montgomery, said to represent Los Angeles capitalists, has been in the field several days inspecting properties with a view to investment.

Numerous other properties at Alleghany report important strikes and progressive developments. The Rainbow Mining Company has been incorporated by Denver people and will work the property of that name on a large scale. Ten stamps are dropping at this property and considerable high-grade ore is handled. At the Tightner the lower tunnel is being driven steadily, but progress is slow owing to the intensely hard rock encountered. Bonanza ore is being mined in the upper level. At the Red Star the rich shoot recently encountered continues to show up well. The Plumbago, Appel and other properties are looking well. The entire district is booming as a result of the strikes recently made.

ANGELENOS TO DREDGE.

The El Dorado-Placer Dredging Company, composed of Los Angeles, San Bernardino and Tucson people, has filed articles of incorporation with the County Clerk of Placer county. The company is capitalized at $500,000, par value of shares $1. The incorporation is under the laws of Arizona, with principal place of business at Tucson, and the principal objects are to build dredges and engage in dredge mining. The new company will operate in the rich auriferous channel of the American River, which flows through one of the most famous of the early placer mining sections in the State. The directors are Henry Fuller, Thomas H. Wilson, Edward K. Hum, William J. Varbel, M. E. Williams, H. B. Brown, Benjamin F. Bledsoe, L. S. Bowen, D. H. Gillan.

SHASTA COPPER.

Despite the continued copper depression, activities on the Shasta copper belt continue to manifest increasing animation. The Mammoth Copper Company is operating at full capacity and handling 1700 tons per day. The five blast furnaces and the converters are in full action and about 1000 men are employed at the mine and smelter. The company is about to expend $50,000 on the widening of its crane tracks and other improvements. The Bully Hill plant at Delamar is also producing steadily and pushing active work at the Bully Hill, Rising Star, Winthrop and other properties. Considerable blister copper is being turned out.

Operations at the Balaklala have been greatly handicapped by the collapse of the ore bunkers and only one of the three furnaces is in operation. One converter stand is working and the average output of blister copper is maintained. The mine has been closed for the time, as there is no place to store ore. The damage to the bunkers, tram, power plant, etc., will run considerably over $15,000. Prior to this accident the Balaklala was treating about 600 tons per day, and producing approximately 1,000,000 pounds of blister copper per month. Five hundred men are ordinarily employed at the mine and smelter. Charges were recently made that the First National Copper Company, the holding concern of the Balaklala, was restricting production, but this has been emphatically denied by President Thomas J. Barbour. Mr. Barbour stated, however, that there would be no attempt to augment the production with copper at its present low level. The ousting of Lawson and his followers by the Barbour interests was welcomed at Redding, as it is felt that the Boston broker is far from an ideal mining man, when the interests of stockholders are concerned.

The Trinity Copper Company, in which many Southern Californians invested about three years ago, is not doing anything at its properties, although the mines are considered to possess undoubted merit. Lying near the Balaklala group, with special arrangements for the treatment of ore at the big Coram plant, it was expected that the Trinity would have become one of the big producers of Shasta county ere this. The tactics pursued by Lawson in respect to this property have not tended to make him popular with the mining fraternity at Redding. The properties were recently inspected by Austin Brown, the former manager, who is gathering data for a comprehensive report on the mines. The forthcoming report is awaited with much interest.

IN TUOLUMNE COUNTY.

Los Angeles people are becoming largely interested in properties in Tuolumne county, and it is likely that before many years have passed most of the properties now being opened will be controlled by people from south of the Tehachepi. One of the most promising of these properties is the Reiner gravel mine, which is being operated by John C. Benson and associates of Los Angeles. A large reserve of good grade gravel has been developed and the work of installing the new twenty-stamp gravel crushing mill has been practically completed. A Cornish pump has been installed in the shaft, and a thirty-horse-power engine and 150-horse-power motor placed in the compressor-room. The two-ton skips have been placed on the tracks. Within a few days actual production will be in full blast.

The New Aurora Company, also of Los Angeles, is building tracks from the Hunter and War Eagle claims to the mill. Comprehensive work is being pushed at the Hunter and War Eagle with power drills. Later on the Hardtack will be opened. The working force is being steadily increased. L. D. Rogers is manager.

STEIFER CASE IN COURT.

The case of Churchman vs. the Steifer Mining Company has been set for trial on May 10 at Oroville. The case promises to be one of the most bitterly contested in the history of Butte county, and stockholders from all sections of California are interested. Fresh interest has been added by the filing of a complaint in intervention by S. J. White of Los Angeles, with the statement that he took such action on behalf of 227 stockholders, representing 99,274 shares of stock. White claims that Churchman and his followers are the owners in equity of the Joseph S. Campbell mine, and that the object of the suit is to terminate the interests of the Steifer Mining Company in the holdings. He further states that no misrepresentation was made to him when he purchased stock in the Steifer Mining Company, and that he believes all stockholders were fully informed regarding its true conditions. White further denies that Churchman is prosecuting action in behalf of the majority of the stockholders and that the damage done to the stockholders by the suit will amount to $25,000. White also opposes the allowance of any sum of money to Churchman for the prosecution of the suit.

The support given the Steifers by the Los Angeles people has attracted much attention from stockholders residing in Butte county and other places, many of the latter being firm followers of Churchman. The latter alleges that the Steifers sold stock in a property that they did not own, and that they further sold stock under gross misrepresentations. The property lies in the Magalia district and is considered to be an unusually promising one.

RESUMING WORK.

Operations at Mazuma Hills to Begin Again on a Good Scale.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

MAZUMA, May 7.—John Harnan says he expects to resume work on the Mazuma Hills property at Seven Troughs this week. When work is resumed he declared it would be on a large scale with the object of placing the property on a regular producing and paying basis.

The Reagan and Chadbourne lease which has been shut down for some time, will also resume and plans will be made for exploiting them on a much more extensive scale and broader lines than ever before. Both have been extended two years' time which will enable them to do more effective development work which should result in opening the big bodies of ore that are known to exist within their limits.

The leasers on the Badger Hill bid fair to make this holding of the Fine Gold Company as big a producer as any in the district. The Van Winkle lease, situated the farthest to the west, has improved continuously since the first strike was made about two weeks ago. The tunnel, which for considerable distance has followed the vein, still has a full face of ore. The values, however, are irregular but this is ascribed to the fact that there is little depth gained with the advance. Every few days the face shows rock bearing free gold from two to three feet wide that narrows to an inch or so.

The straightening of the Kindergarten vein, as shown in the lower levels of the Wihuja, is given as the reason why the crosscut from the 300-foot level has not reached the main vein. On Monday next the Kindergarten mill will be stamping company ore again and it is expected that enough will be taken out of the Wihuja workings to keep the plant going continuously for the next thirty days.

The Gold Bar lease on the Kindergarten, which is preparing to resume with heavy hoisting machinery, expects to cut the main Kindergarten vein at a depth of 700 feet.

The new lease on the Boilermaker ran into a body of highgrade in the shaft last Tuesday. The shaft is being sunk close to the end line of the claim and within a few feet of the rich strike on the surface of the Dipper. The vein as far as known has opened four feet of ore in a quartz porphyry, of which a sixteen-inch streak of this talc gave values of $100.

IN THE EARTH.

RARE MINERALS, METALLURGY AND CHEMISTRY.

To Correspondents:

This department is not conducted for pay. Its object is to convey reliable information of interest and value to the public, and it is not for the private benefit of any miner, collector, speculator or prospector. Correspondents are particularly cautioned to take careful note of the statements and injunctions contained in the paragraphs below.

(1.) Specimens must be small and bear a tag giving name and address of sender, and the general—not exact—locality from whence the specimen was taken, also the name of it as nearly as the sender knows. Send, also, with the specimen a clearly-written letter briefly describing the find and what the finder wishes done with it. The letter must be properly dated and plainly signed.

Letter and specimen must be in one package, not in separate inclosure.

(2.) No attention will be paid to anonymous letters or to letters signed merely with initials.

(3.) No examinations of samples or specimens will be made in cases where The Times may decide that the specimen and inquiry are not of public interest. This office does not undertake to perform the work of an assay office.

(4.) Inquiries relative to matters of purely personal interest will not be answered.

(5.) When no response to an inquiry made or specimens sent appears in these columns, the inquirer will understand that his inquiry does not come within the purview of this department.

(6.) It is impossible to return specimens, as they must necessarily be destroyed or impaired in the process of analysis.

Wolframite.

CLEVELAND (Nev.) April 6.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I am sending by mail in care of a prospector of Frisco, Utah, a sample of ore from a ten-inch lead on one of my claims east of Cleveland and in the Snake Range of mountains, White Pine county, Nev.

It may be some sort of iron ore, but I doubt it. Will you do me the favor of stating in your "In the Earth" what you think of it, as it interests several prospectors in this section, and some of them think it may be silver ore of some kind, owing to its great weight. Thanking you in advance, I am,

Yours truly, D. B. A.

ANSWER: The sample is named at head of column. It is a very high-grade ore of tungsten, and carries over 77 per cent. tungstic acid of commerce. Wolframite and hubnerite occur south of your find, near Osceola, one of the noted localities of the United States.

Silicate of Alumnia.

DANBY, April 6.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I have this day sent you under separate cover sample of local rock, which is new to me. Please let me know through your columns what it contains; also, what is the common name for same. Thanking you for your valuable information in advance, I remain, Sincely yours, W. W. J.

ANSWER: The sample is a lime-potash-magnesium, and aluminum silicate, and carries (in part) some dolomite. Iron, manganese, zinc and lead are present in low percentages, respectively. It has no common name; and was not tested for gold and silver.

No Tin Present.

FERDINAND (Idaho) April 6.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Inclosed you will find four samples of rock (from this locality,) each containing three specimens. Two samples beginning No. 1. What is one? No. 2, "name it." No. 3, "silica." Second No. 1, white rock, "quartz;" No. 2, "cement;" No. 3, "blue;" one other, "name it;" No. 4, "one quartzite;" No. 2, "tin rock;" No. 3, "basalt." These samples are sent by two prospectors to settle a dispute. Please get your man in the "In the Earth" department to name them correctly and give the commercial value, if any. Samples come from twenty miles north of Grangeville, and three miles from railroad. I am an interested reader of The Times. This being my first call, I hope it will not give you too much trouble.

Very respectfully yours, M. M. G. (Prospector.)

ANSWER: Your samples are many. You are a prospector. Please send smaller specimens next time. There are two separate packages, each marked "No. 1," with three specimens in each. We will now take up first No. 1. Specimen 1 marked correctly "quartz." Specimen 2, "cement." This is not cement rock. (Cement rock is impure limestone.) The specimen is also quartzitic with dendritic manganese (forest rock) present. Spathic iron cubes are in the mass. No. 3, "silica;" it is a silicate of alumina with manganese present. No. 4, sample 1 is greasy quartz with arsenical pyrite, pyrite, and pyrrhotite (magnetic pyrite) in the mass. Nickel is present in traces only, and of no commercial value. No. 2, marked "tin." This is also pyritiferous with no tin present. No. 3, "basalt;" the rock is basaltic with "peacock iron," and carrying two nodules (grape-like) of botryoidal limonite (iron oxide) with pyrite and traces only of copper throughout the mass. No. 3 (two samples,) one marked "name it." It is mica schist wall rock. The second specimen, marked "quartz," is quartzitic, with manganese present.

We now proceed with the second No. 1 (three specimens.) Sample 1 is marked "quartz;" it is pegmatite (graphite granite,) a mixture of quartz and feldspar, with manganese present. No. 2, marked "to be named;" it is a combination of quartz, feldspar, manganese and "peacock iron." No. 3, marked "buel rock;" it is porphyritic rock, as shown by the crystals of feldspar throughout the mass. No sample was tested for precious metal. All of the samples, as it were, are "lean" and refractory ores.

Iron Gossan.

SOLDIERS' HOME, SAWTELLE, April 7.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Three samples.

M. R. M. W.

ANSWER: You are probably an old veteran, therefore non-compliance with paragraphs at head of column shall not apply. One of the samples is iron gossan. The second one quartz (carrying iron.) The third sample is hematite (micaceous.) All of them of doubtful value.

Mud.

LOS ANGELES, April 8.—[To the Editor of The Times:] From the Rosamond mining district in Kern county, Cal. Please give analysis. Said to contain mineral and medicinal properties.

F. C. P.

ANSWER: The stuff resembles that obtained from a well on the Navajo Indian Reservation. A similar material was used—as a pack—in 1898, when the writer was at Bita-o-chee (Red Rock,) forty-five miles north of Holbrook, Ariz. It is made up of aluminum silicate, with talc, traces of silica and phosphate of iron. A veritable dope for mud baths.

PASADENA, April 9.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I herewith send you a sample of ore taken from my property in Signal Camp, San Bernardino county. The ledge proper is about five feet, two feet of which seem to carry the ore as per sample. Every one in camp seems to think I have a valuable (tungsten ore) property. TONOPAH.

MANHATTAN IS DRAWING CARD.

UKON PLACER MEN EXPRESSING SOME DOUBTS.

But Nevada Is Land of Contradictions and Many Show Their Faith by Investing Their Money—A Big Dredge Will Be Put to Work—Report Last Received Discredited.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

TONOPAH (Nev.) May 7.—The rush to Manhattan claims the attention of everybody in this end of the county, and there is no discounting the fact that the crowds are going there in numbers that have not been equalled since the days of the discovery. Regarding the truth of the report that the placers are not up to representations, the investor must be satisfied with the results that have been attained so far. These are said to be satisfactory, and there are cases where the returns are far in excess of the most sanguine expectations. In a shaft at the depth of fifty-two feet, the Extension shows two feet of gravel that will run $30 to $50 a yard, and it is expected to strike bedrock at forty-five feet. The ground is owned by Arthur and Mort Smith, who are besieged with offers to sell.

One of the most important deals was consummated yesterday, by which Murdock, representing himself; Keane and Loftus & Davis of Goldfield purchased two claims for purposes. The extent of the ground is 450x600 feet, and is said to be one of the finest along the gulch. It will be equipped with an electrical plant before the end of the week, and is expected to be in full operation before the month is out. The ground is said to be proven on all sides of this, and it is alleged that the three feet of gravel will yield not less than per yard.

BIG DREDGER COMING.

At Central, a short distance below Manhattan, preparations are being made to carry on operations on an extensive scale, a dredger with a capacity of from 800 to 1000 yards a day being on the way from Sacramento. These workings will be under the supervision of "Dry Wash" Wilson, famous for his at Round Mountain. Wilson has several properties in this district, and has recently sold some of them to such prominent operators as Tom Murphy and Frank Oliver of Goldfield. The which runs through the Manhattan Rainbow property is looked upon as an excellent property, and J. Sweeney of Reno, who has an interest, is preparing to begin work. In addition to the excitement over the placers, some of the quartz properties begin to look better. The Plamenz on the Union is also improving. A good grade of ore is being shipped from the Earle property, which shows a strong vein of about four feet wide that carries values throughout.

A recent clean-up of the ground worked by the McDonald lease shows an average of $36 per cubuc yard, so far washed. As this lease is centrally located, and surrounded by a number of other leases, which have so far made an excellent showing, it is no wonder that excitement runs high, and that the town is filled with men of means looking for ground to

GOLDFIELD IS EXCITED.

Goldfield has the excitement in a far stage than this camp. Every day between twenty and thirty men from that place register with the new camp, and the demand for transportation has become so strong that an auto direct line has been established between Manhattan and Goldfield. One piece of ground below Central was sold to James R. Davis of the Round Mountain Mining Company, Oliver and Capt. Mayne, all of Goldfield. This land is part of the Extension, and was sold for ,000 to A. A. Bissell, James R., J. F. Douglas, A. E. Barnes, Murphy and T. H. Cline, who propose to work the ground to the fullest extent. They have had some good showings in the shape of nuggets since they took hold, and they are confident that they are going to make a winner of the investment.

DOUBTING THOMASES.

One great drawback to the Manhattan placers is the fact that the ground has to be handled so often before the values are extracted. It is not or hydraulic mining as commonly understood, but a complex system of digging and washing that adds materially to the cost. The figures given above are samples of what the ground claim, but the district has not been tested out. That there is a rush is no mistake, but the extent or duration of this whirl remains to be seen. Some of the best posted placer miners from the Yukon do not take kindly to the indications, and they are refraining from placing any of their money in the country. But then it must be remembered that Nevada is a land of contradictions, and that the least promising country has made the best The subject is one of speculation, and the entire proposition must be judged by the results.

The richest strike so far made in was made yesterday, according to a telephone report to Jack, Dick Colburn, Harry MacDonald and others who are interested in the district. The message stated that the overburden or the waste has been found full of values, running as high as $10 to $12 per cubic yard. This is phenomenal, and, if true, will start a stampede that would discount the Klondike rush. The statement is not accepted by regular placer miners. The average Nevadan knows a whole lot about quartz, but when it comes to analyzing from a placer, he is not always the best authority.

MYSTERY IN WEST END.

Notwithstanding the hammering of of the West End of Tonopah, it seems that there is ample ground for the belief that something out of the ordinary has been found on the 400-foot level of the property, where the big body of is alleged to carry such values has been disclosed. Puddy, County Recorder, who has been in the mine, states that there is around the fact that there is a big and rich body of ore. The management denies the reports, saying that the only semblance to a real is the fact that a considerable body of talc was found in the west drift from the south crosscut on the -foot level. While this body, which in reality is a decomposition of the ledge, shows some values, these values appear only in seams and small spots. While some twenty-five feet of this stuff in the drift, it is doubtful if of ore could be obtained in twenty-five. The talc is mixed, occurring in layers of red and white, the latter carrying the values. In this body are boulders and bars of quartz, but they contain no commercial values. The drift is following the decomposed portion of the ledge, and not crosscutting it, so that the opinion that the talc body is feet wide is erroneous.

There is said to be no ground for the present excitement, according to the official statement of the company, as there are a dozen places in the mine where better average values are visible.

After a long and tedious wait, the cable has arrived and is being put in place on the Belmont. While nothing of a sensational nature has occurred, the mine is in excellent shape, and the work in progress below the 1000-foot level promises to place the property in the front rank of shippers.

On the great Tonopah a lot of new work is going on in new territory, and the ground is being opened in a systematic manner, and while several crosscuts and drifts have been sent out in the various levels through promising formation, nothing of commercial value has been encountered. The three-compartment shaft of the Mizpah was sent down twelve feet since the last report to the 1362 point, with no change to note, the formation in the bottom still being rhyolite.

Probably the most important of the recent discoveries in the Montana-Tonopah is that which was found in the recent crosscut on the footwall from the stope on the Triangle vein from the 390-foot level, which has developed into an excellent ore body, between three and four feet wide, carrying high-grade values. Another interesting point is found on the east drift on the Martha vein, on the 515-foot level. All along this level the ledge shows good values, but, at intervals it carries some very high. While the extraction at the mill is below normal, owing to the highly oxidized character of the ore, it is thought that when the improvements being made are completed no further trouble will occur. During the past week the mill has treated 951 tons, with a saving of 88 per cent.

RHYOLITE.

RICKARD HAS BIG PROSPECT.

LEASE AT PIONEER GETS FINE ORE SHOWING.

Now Second Biggest Shipper the Camp Has and Eight Feet Are Open That Runs on an Average of Thirty Dollars Per Ton—Tramps Again Comes to Front.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

RHYOLITE, May 7.—Tex Rickard has the real stuff at Pioneer and becomes the second shipper, as he sent out his first load today over the wagon road that he built to the railroad when he began sinking. Rickard is operating a lease on the Conservative claim and at the time he concluded negotiations it was said by old-timers that he had one of the best locations in the new camp. The lease is down 175 feet where the ore was encountered in a crosscut about seventy feet from the shaft in a southwesterly direction. There is said to be eight feet that will run anywhere from $25 to $79 per ton with a fair conservative average across the entire face of the drift of $30.

The entire Pioneer section is said by experienced operators to be highly mineralized, although sufficient work has not been done to prove the extent or the values of the deposits, but there are ample indications that the whole country is saturated with gold rock.

The Pioneer lease is shipping a little short of 100 tons per day at the present time with hopes of doubling this total as soon as another shaft is placed in commission. An effort is being made to keep the average grade of the ore between $75 and $80 per ton. The tonnage since starting with the new machinery about the middle of April has been approximately 1000 tons. This amount is officially figured to represent somewhere close to $75,000. The May production is estimated at 3000 tons. The values will not vary as it is the policy to hold them at $80. Two machines are driving along in ore on the 156-foot level of the property. The balance of the drilling strength is being used on the lower levels. Two machines are working abreast, stoping out thirty feet of ore from this place. No dead work is being done and nothing strictly in the way of development. The new twelve-drill compresser with a dynamo to operate it, has arrived and is being installed. Power is promised May 15 when additional machinery will be here that will enable the daily output to be raised to 200 tons, although some of the optomistic owners say it will be 300 tons.

The strike reported on the O'Hara lease on Quartzite Mountain did not hold out. The shaft is down seventy feet and during the past week the shaft was panned every foot of the way without giving a single color.

Goldsworthy lease on the Starlight is developing in size but the values are not in place. The old shaft is down on the Mayflower ledge. This body in one place is twenty-six feet wide, several inches of which, two feet on the hanging wall and four feet on the footwall, will go $12 per ton.

TRAMPS IN GOOD ORE.

Denver leasers have opened up one more substantial body of ore on that claim of the Tramps Consolidated. About fourteen inches of high grade is exposed, well besprinkled with the yellow metal. Work started here a little over a week ago. It includes an old raise on the vein intended for an airshaft. A drill was run along the lead and with some four feet of work the big pay streak was disclosed. The vein stands nearly vertical and both walls are rich with gold. In the bottom of the works a width of over two feet is of a promising character, while at the top the vein draws in and is not over a foot wide. This latter width is more consistent for values than the other as they are $100 for the twelve inches. A small shipment is going. It will probably be about four tons and run $200 per ton. The Tramps is the mine that the stockholders virtually abandoned at the recent annual meeting in Philadelphia as a worthless holding and ordered all work stopped on company account.

Nine hundred pounds of bullion was sent out by the Montgomery Shoshone which represents fifteen days' work of the mill. The final figures show a total of 556,000 tons. A fine body of ore has been opened between the third and fourth levels of the Shoshone from which a little at a time is being taken for treatment at present. The ever-widening glory hole shows no signs of limitations and four men with two machines are working one shift.

Engineer A. J. Klampt of the Ash Meadows Water Company south of Bullfrog, reports that the laying of water mains to Death Valley Junction has been completed. This unit is seven miles long from the junction and the mains will be pushed to the Borax mines, another seven miles as quickly as possible. What the programme is after reaching the Borax mines is not known. It was the original purpose of the Ash Meadows Company to supply Lee and Greenwater with water, but this was when those Funeral Range camps were booming and when the certainty of profit on the investment was greater than it is now.

Lomita
LONG BEACH
WILMINGTON
SAN PEDRO

BUY YOUR FARM LAND IN SAN PEDRO DISTRICT AND MAKE MONEY

The farmer or gardener buying land at Lomita will make money two ways. He not only has fertile soil and can raise large crops, but he has an increasing value in his land upon which he may found a fortune. With the millions required in the development of the harbor will come a substantial advance in all realty values in the harbor section. Lomita is close enough to all improvements to enhance in value for every dollar spent. It is only a short distance from Bixby Slough, which, by the addition of a ship channel now partly dredged, will become a great commercial basin, surrounded by manufacturing and forwarding industries.

BESIDES ITS FUTURE PROSPECTS, THERE IS NO BETTER FARM SOIL.
Many have selected it for special farming purposes. Thirty acres are planted to walnuts. Forty acres have been taken for asparagus. Twenty acres are being cultivated for winter rhubarb. Hundreds of acres were in cabbage, potatoes, tomatoes and other vegetables last year, and more will be planted this year. There is a thriving townsite, town hall and school, and a live, up-to-date growers' association. There is plenty of water, and it is owned by the people themselves.

Danderine

Grows Hair and we can PROVE IT!

DANDERINE is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. Its exhilarating, stimulating and life-producing properties cause the hair to grow abundantly long, strong and beautiful. It at once imparts a sparkling brilliancy and velvety softness to the hair, and a few weeks' use will cause new hair to sprout all over the scalp. Use it every day for a short time, after which two or three times a week will be sufficient to complete whatever growth you desire.

A lady from St. Paul writes in substance, as follows:
"When I began using Danderine my hair would not come to my shoulders and now it is away below my hips."
Another from Newark, N. J.
"I have been using Danderine regularly. When I first started to use it I had very little hair, now I have the most beautiful long and thick hair anyone would want to have."

NOW at all druggists in three sizes 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle

Danderine enjoys a greater sale than any other one preparation regardless of kind or brand, and it has a much greater sale than all of the other hair preparations in the world combined.

BERRIES MAKE PACKERS BUSY.

Both Canneries Here Running at Full Force.

The Strawberry Situation Is Ideal Now.

Stocks of Canned Goods Are About Used Up.

For the first time in two years, the canneries of this district are running full force. Strawberries are the cause for present activities in the preserving line.

Two years ago strawberries were not overplentiful, and prices were high, making it impossible for the canners to take much of the fruit. Last year the panic caused such a depression in all fruit business and left so much canned stock on the hands of the canners from the year previous, that very few berries were put up.

This season all conditions are ideal. Strawberries are plentiful, selling to the canner at the average price of 50 cents a crate, the canneries taking the surplus from the market each day, in that way keeping up the general market value of the fruit and relieving any congested conditions arising.

Canned goods have about been cleaned up on account of light packs in the two previous years, and as a result a good stock is being figured on by all of the five canneries in this neighborhood. The largest standing order for berries is held by the California Fruit Canners' Association.

This organization has packing plants in all parts of the State, and, should the price of a certain fruit be too high in one section, the entire pack of that fruit is made in the district where it can be obtained at the most reasonable figure, railroad transportation to the East being the same on all points along the Coast between San Francisco and Los Angeles, the only difference lying in the cost of intermediate shipping between the two cities.

ALL STRAWBERRIES HERE.

This year the California Fruit Canners' Association will pack all of its strawberries in the local plant. They have contracts with growers amounting to 2,000,000 pounds, or 10000 tons of berries. In addition to these contracts, they are purchasing berries on the open market.

All of the fruit packed by this larged canning industry is in cans. It is the fruit which carries the pretty labels and sells in the ordinary grocery stores to the average consumer, who buys it at the average price of 20 cents per pound can. Before the cans are used they are thoroughly sterilized and cleaned, after which the raw fruit, with an added sugar syrup, is placed within and the cans are sealed, to be opened after each can has been immersed in boiling water or in steam kilns until the berries are thoroughly cooked, and then the cans are again hermetically sealed, ready for sale.

The next largest consumer of strawberries is the Bishop & Co., which manufactures a great quantity of jellies, jams, preserves and fancy packed stock from strawberries. Their pack this year will be about 400,000 pounds of berries, much of which will go into pretty glass jars. About one-half of the berries will be prepared for use at the soda fountains, pure crushed fruit, and this grade is preserved in enameled cans.

The other three canneries, two in Los Angeles and one in Pasadena, will together consume in the neighborhood of 1,000,000 pounds of berries. This will make the total pack of strawberries in this section nearly 3,500,000 pounds, or 150,000 crates. When placed in cans, and the cans in cases and these finally in cars, the pack will be sufficient to fill at least 175 cars.

HALF-HUNDRED HANDS.

In addition to the benefits which the growers receive, the canneries are making employment for about 500 hands, mostly girls and women, who sort the berries, pack the fancier varieties, do the labeling of the various receptacles when the canning is completed and are otherwise employed. The industry is one of the largest of the Southwest for the period when berries are plentiful, from the month of May until the middle of July when the crop begins to get smaller and the berries, grown in the warm weather, lose much of their flavor on account of rapid maturity.

WHAT'S DOING IN SAN FRANCISCO.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 7.—The visiting Japanese have had a fine time with plenty to eat and plenty to drink. There has been some music, too, and much conversation through interpreters. It is much nicer to talk in the usual way than it is to enforce opinions with speaking cannons. At the many banquets there was no dearth of stimulants and they could not be described as William M. Evarts once said of a feast given by President Hayes that the water flowed like champagne.

Gambling people are getting ready to fight the new anti-betting law. The Senate of Arkansas has passed a bill allowing racing and some of our sports are thinking of going to Hot Springs for their health.

Stonewall Jackson Harris is an unpleasant sort of a chap to have around. He insists that the world is coming to an end in a few years and hired a hall to tell us all about it. He has been especially commissioned from above to warn the world of its impending doom but some of the nickel in the slot machine men are willing to bet him 100 to 1 that nothing will happen before July 1st.

A dentist punched a youth for flirting with his wife, and then offered to fix a tooth broken by the blow. The boy may be young but he is not foolish. He knew enough not to sit in the chair of the angry husband and have his nerve touched up by a finished torturer. The lad is so ungallant as to say that he is not in the habit of flirting with grandmothers.

"The Quad," published by the students of Stanford, is not going to say anything mean about the professors this year. Inasmuch as it did last year causing several of the students to forget to graduate, the editors think that one diploma in hand is worth more than two jokes in the paper. Of course under the new plan the Quad will be unfit for publication and no one will buy it.

It is not so bad arresting aëronauts for dumping sand on the roofs of Los Angeles houses, but if any of these high fliers get to unloosing sand on this sandy peninsula there is going to be trouble. It is bad enough to have a lot of mud thrown on us without having sand thrown in our eyes.

When the question was popped after years of courtship the girl said "this is so sudden" and that is what we say when the creditors investigate the Thompson-Jaulus café which opened a few weeks ago in such a lovely society furore.

There is some consolation in this world after all and there is no immediate need of committing suicide when we read that masked highwaymen held up a hotel clerk and gave him a good beating after taking the big diamond from his shirt front. It is additional joy to learn that he is from Seattle.

Many of my friends, who own automobiles, even if they do not own anything else, are delighted with the good roads over the State and particularly with the splendid condition of the roads between here and Los Angeles. I find that it is almost as nice to motor to the southern city as it is to southern pacific it.

Sam Horton, newspaper man and a decent official under the Ruef régime is mad all through. He made a success of the cameraphone and sold out to advantage. The man he sold to got no advantage so he sued and in order to save the fee of a process server he telephoned Horton to call and then served him with the summons in the suit.

Professional men frequently refer to rivals as blacksmiths; but we have to take off our No. 8 hat to an amiable vehicle on a stinging weekly who says that members of the Press Club are shoe clerks because the new quarters are over a shoe store. PLUTO.

"ANVIL CHORUS" NOT ENJOYED.

Judges Rule Against Racket in County Garage in Hall of Justice Basement.

The "anvil chorus" in the basement of the new Hall of Justice on Buena Vista street, near Temple, will have to cease. Judges Willis and Davis have ruled against the pounding of hammers and the wheeze of disabled automobile engines, and the hospital for county machines will either have to be moved or a heavy steel floor put in to prevent the racket from disturbing the courts.

The county installed a fine garage in the basement of the new building, in which the automobiles of the Supervisors, Sheriff, Coroner, District Attorney and other officials have been kept, and where they are repaired. The pumping plant for the building is also in the basement.

All was well until repairs were made during the day. The mechanics' pounding sometimes drowned the voices of attorneys, and it was frequently necessary to send word to the garage that the racket must be stopped.

Are You Fat?

You know you cannot stay fat, don't you? That is, you can not be fat and be in style. The day when a fat woman was tolerated is passed. Nowadays all women must be in proportion or be ridiculous. This does not mean you should become skinny, however. You should not get below the hard flesh line. All you ought to lose is the bulky fat. That done you will find yourself to be a well formed and therefore handsome woman.

Now, how can this be done? By exercising and dieting? Yes, and no. These two means will bring some results, but not easily nor soon. One is very hard work; the other is torture. Besides, neither can be depended on to cause a uniform reduction. They may take off a fleshy shoulder, for example, and leave the double chin untouched. What you need, you see, is something pleasant to take that without injury to your health will take the fat off uniformly and quickly, say at the rate of a pound a day or so, until it is all gone where you want it to go.

For this purpose nothing is less expensive, safer or simpler than Marmola Prescription Tablets. Inexpensive because one large case, costing 75 cents only, will produce results; safe because they cause no wrinkles or stomach trouble, but rather improve the health and complexion, if anything; and simple because they do all the work without asking thought or effort on the part of the taker. In short, they are the ANSWER if you are fat and wish to be thinner. If your druggist is of the better kind he will have them. If not, write the licensees, The Marmola Company, Dept. 235, Detroit, Mich.

NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE

THE ORIGINAL REMEDY THAT KILLS THE DANDRUFF GERM

"Traveling as I do continuously, I have been troubled a great deal with dandruff and falling hair, and until I tried Herpicide I never found a remedy that was satisfactory.

Herpicide is a delightful preparation that fulfills the claims made for it, and no lady's toilet is complete without it. I highly recommend it to my friends."

(Signed) ANNIE OAKLEY.

It is certainly significant that Miss Oakley, the celebrated rifle shot and theatrical star, who has travelled so extensively abroad, should choose Newbro's Herpicide as the most efficacious toilet remedy for the scalp. No one will doubt her opportunity to choose the best and those who have seen the natty and winsome Miss Oakley, will not doubt her power of discrimination in matters of this sort.

Newbro's Herpicide is a scientific germacide and prophylatic for the hair and scalp, it destroys the germ or microbe that causes dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair, after which the hair will grow as nature intended, except in cases of incurable baldness. Extraordinary results sometimes follow the continued use of Newbro's Herpicide.

If your hair is dull, brittle or lusterless, don't wait until it begins to fall, but save and beautify it with Newbro's Herpicide. In addition to its wonderful medicinal qualities, Newbro's Herpicide is the daintiest and most delightfully refreshing hair dressing available. The first application proves its goodness. Try it.

Herpicide contains no grease, it will not stain or dye.

Laying Out Palatial Estate for Trolley King in Beautiful San Gabriel Valle

slowly through one of the most crooked of cañons, a brook which never fails throughout the driest season.

IN CHARMING WILDWOOD.

In this charming wildwood spot Mr. Huntington is building a home that when finished will easily take rank as the most palatial in buildings, grounds, richness and variety of scenery, landscape features and plant life of any on the Pacific Coast. Over forty gardeners, grading teams and workers generally have for two years been laboring to mend nature by covering the table land and hillsides, first, with a generous coating of the finest peat soil and secondly with an array of plants so diversified that every country in the world is represented by numberless subjects. Conservatories, giant lath houses, a deer park, rose garden, lakes and lily ponds, ferneries, cactus gardens and a great number of rare plant collections have turned the area for a quarter of a mile in every direction from the residence site into one vast botanic garden outlined by miles of roads and paths skirted and bounded by hundreds of thousands of bed and border plants.

Already over $100,000 has been expended in the development of these grounds, $23,000 worth of plants alone having been placed in the grounds in the twelve months previous to the 1st inst. More are arriving daily from different parts of this and foreign countries, and yet it is understood that this is but the beginning.

In the midst of this vast garden of rare and costly exotic plant life Mr. Huntington is rearing a mansion that falls nothing short of a palace, and, indeed, the surroundings will, with the growth and mellowness that time alone can bring, far surpass those of the average institution known the world over as a "palace." From time to time comes news that Mr. Huntington has purchased tapestries to the value of a clean million of dollars, $40,000 paid for a single picture, and other things in keeping, so that the equipment and furnishings are to be second to none. As to the building itself, the architects have stated that it is a combination of Italian and Spanish Renaissance, and is built in such a manner and of such material that it should stand as it is finished for a thousand years. Made of re-inforced concrete, it is practically one piece of cement, in which is embedded a framework of steel. At present only the supporting columns and the roof is in evidence, and it indeed looks strange to see even the roof of solid concrete. As all of the contracts are let, no one may say just what the total cost of this palace will be, as it is to be all of the best, and absolutely fireproof. All that can be determined at present is that the cement walls and roof are being built under contract, at a cost of $70,000. At least one more year will be consumed in finishing the building, and neither the architects nor Mr. Huntington's representatives will venture a guess as to the total cost.

GREAT CONSERVATORIES.

In the near future the largest conservatory and range of private glass houses ever constructed on this Coast will be built a few hundred feet to the north of the residence and these will be filled with the finest tropical vegetation to be found in the world's markets and many will be collected in the tropic wilds. Already a number of large lath houses have been built and these are fairly teeming with the rarest and best of the vegetable kingdom. Here palms and cycads may be found from the tropics of South America, Africa and Asia and with many from climates similar to our own; also from China and Japan and all other countries where these plants abound.

As an instance of the quality of the plants purchased the writer has before him an invoice of plants recently purchased for Mr. Huntington and now on the way here which totals $820 for twenty-nine plants. The finest one of these is a Kentia palm thirty feet high, carrying sixty-two leaves and costing at the place of purchase $560 and there are several listed at $500 each or a little less. Among these is a collection of seven species of Encephalartos, a cycad (or sago palm) from tropic and subtropic Africa. Another plant, Rhapis palm, has fifty-two stems twelve feet high, which is so much larger than anything in the line seen about here that the best specimen from hereabout would look like a pygmy beside it. Nothing in the palm list will prove more strikingly curious than two Caryotas or fish-tail palms which will rear their heads in the new conservatory to the height of thirty feet.

FERNS FORMING A JUNGLE.

Near the mansion, under the shade of giant live oaks, there is growing a collection of tree ferns that are so vigorous and thrifty that in a few years they will form a tropical jungle of great beauty and interest. Most of these ferns are from Australia and New Zealand. Not unlike ferns in appearance are a number of giant sago palms (Cycas) direct from Japan, by far the largest ever sent here, one of them having thirty-six heads or crowns of leaves.

One of the most attractive features of the grounds is a series of lily ponds on the lower bench or plain just in front of and below the residence. In the continuous set there are seven ponds, each one lower than the one next toward the source of the water supply. These ponds are together several hundred feet long and an artificial creek of an additional two hundred feet feeds them with a never-failing supply of fresh water. About the shores of these lakes are planted every sort of marsh plant obtainable while within the ponds proper may be seen the largest and choicest collection of hardy and tropical night-blooming and day-blooming lilies west of Chicago and perhaps unrivaled even in the Windy City. One of the narrow necks of water, between the two largest ponds, is spanned by a rustic stone bridge and from this may be seen numerous plant-studded islands, promontories, and quiet, shady bayous.

By passing under a roadway these waters connect with a much larger lake containing a large island on which stands a palm-thatched summer house, surrounded by bamboos and reached by a rustic wooden bridge. The margin of this lake is skirted with tropical water lilies while the waters abound with a variety of fish and over the surface float a half-dozen stately swans. One of the lesser ponds contains a hot-water pipe system for artificial heating of the water and here is grown the famous Victoria regia, the giant lily of the Amazon River, with leaves six feet in diameter and flowers a foot across.

CACTI BY THOUSANDS.

On the dry hillside above the largest lake there are cacti by the thousands. Carloads have been shipped in from Arizona, and within a month collections are due from Mexico and both the Colorado and the Mohave deserts, in this State. As all cacti are natives of the Americas, a fine collection may be gathered within a comparatively short time. The largest plants now in place are specimens of the giant cereus of Arizona and Northern Mexico, ranging from ten to twelve feet in height. There are also some fine plants of the fish-hook cactus (Echinocactus Wislizeni,) as large as a barrel. It is expected that in a year's time this collection will surpass in number and variety the famous cactus garden of White Park at Riverside, now the largest on the Pacific Coast.

A space of 200 feet square has been reserved for the rose garden, the main feature of which is a giant pergola in the shape of a Greek cross, with arms a hundred feet long, each containing a turf walk eight feet wide. Already over a thousand roses have been planted and when these are all bearing flowers, festooned over the pergola or arranged in color schemes in outlying beds it will be a marvel and education to all rosarians, both amateur and professional. Several hundred of these roses were imported direct from Ireland and are already in full bloom. With the rose garden the list of garden accessories and special features comes to an end, but there is contemplated a great variety of landscape work that will more than double the present number of special features exclusive of plant collections.

The plant collections, that is, groups of one kind of plant in great numbers, is one of the most interesting and educative of the various features in any part of the estate. Of bamboo there are nearly a thousand, native for the most part to India, China and Japan, though every country where bamboos grow has been drawn upon. In the lot may be seen low dwarfs from the high altitudes of the Himalayas and giants from tropical India that when full grown will tower a hundred feet above their lowly relatives, the grasses.

The richest assortment of plants and those representing the greatest outlay of money are to be found in the grand collection of palms. A large part of this outdoor palm garden of hardy subjects has been picked up in California, and the largest speciments of the several species to be found in this State are here brought together. These have cost to purchase, move and replant as high as $400 for a single palm. In this collection there are several hundred of the largest Cocos plumosa in California, and many of these have been utilized to adorn the main roadway leading up to the residence. By far the greater number of these palms are natives to North, South and Central America, though lands across both oceans are also represented.

While on the subjects of roadside planting it is of interest to know that along one roadway have been planted nearly three thousand plants of English ivy, and on another for four miles nothing but Cherokee roses. In other parts there are collections of shrubs and creepers consisting of a hundred sorts, but of Choisya and Duranta alone there are five hundred each. There are so many miles of roads and paths that a page of The Times would be needed to enumerate the different species of plants to be seen.

One of the features in plant collections which will dominate a large part of the grounds is the wonderful number and variety of conifers or cone-bearing trees. These may be seen by hundreds over a large range of territory, and comprise a hundred or more species, each represented by scores or more of a kind. Many of these are native American trees, but a special display has been made of the giant cedar of the Himalayas, a tree admirably adapted to California conditions and one of the most strikingly beautiful among the many sorts here assembled.

When completed one of the most curious groups of plants will be the cycads, very fairly represented in California by the Japanese cycads, erroneously known as sago palm, for it is not a palm at all and only resembles it in appearance, not being closely related. Some time will be necessary to perfect this group of plants, for many of the species have to be brought from remote parts of Africa, while others must be collected in the unsettled parts of Mexico and Central America. Some of these cycads have fern-like leaves eight or ten feet long; others have their leaflets barbed and spined in quite as formidable manner as the average cactus. In size they range from dwarfs but a foot high to large plants now a dozen feet, but which in their native habitat range to many times their present stature. In color they are light to dark green and through glaucous-green to "true blue."

The Australian eucalypts are not largely represented in the plant groups for the reason that nearly all species are tall and pole-like and are therefore out of harmony with the round-topped hills and live oaks, but a few of the more umbrageous species have been utilized for shade or a combination of shade and showy blossom. An even hundred of the scarlet-flowered eucalypt have been grouped and when these are in blossom they should present a truly dazzling sight, for the vivid scarlet of those flowers are, in sunshine, often too bright to be gazed upon at length or a temporarily clouded vision will result. Not remote from these are planted 400 eucalyptus Lehmanni, a species of umbrageous growth not unlike the pepper tree in spreading habit. These will, in time, produce a pleasing shade as they do not grow tall and harmonize perfectly, in form and color, with the surrounding live oaks.

Rumor had it at one time that many fine trees and plants and much valuable orchard area were to be sacrificed to a wholly artificial feature, an Italian garden, but plenty of scope for formality may be found close about the palace that is being reared. Those closest to Mr. Huntington do not believe he will allow man to so mar the face of nature. The city dweller may revel in Italian gardens; they only represent money expended, but no man n will, ever "produce such grand scenery as that to be found magnificent estate of five h acres. Man mars but never r and all nature-lovers who have the scene are enthusiastic ov manner in which Mr. Huntingt arranged for the preservation a provement of this great natura

FACT AND COMMENT.

As the spring advances the real estate market in the city of Los Angeles is gradually assuming better shape. There is abundance of money here for investment, and as we become more certain of the immediate future, transactions are picking up slowly, but surely. Perhaps the best indication of all is that the reviving confidence is most lively in the minds of those who know Southern California best. During the past few days we have had several important investments made by persons who have been resident in this city or other part of the country for the past forty years. These old timers have paid their ready cash for several fine pieces of property, and they have paid good full prices for them, too. In one case out on Bonnie Brae and Ninth streets a citizen, who has made his home here from 1870 paid $200 a foot for a practically vacant piece of property. The old Rindge house is on it, a good one, but too antiquated to cut a dollar's worth of figure in the mind of the buyer. He buys for an investment and is sure he has paid none too much for a very fine piece of property sure to come into use at no distant day for a family hotel or fine apartment site.

—o—

Newcomers Secure Homes.

The Fact and Comment man during the last week has come into contact with a half a dozen persons, in one case four of them in a single instance, who all told of friends who were building fine homes for themselves in the city. In every instance these new home builders had come here not more than three years ago for the first time. At first they were tourists pure and simple, who came out for a few weeks to see California and the Pacific Coast. Their weeks extended into months. Next year they returned to spend a longer period and the third time they came to stay, having purchased lots and entered into contracts to build fine houses. This has been the history of Los Angeles for forty years past. There have been few persons who have ever visited this city and remained as long as a year who were ever contented to live again anywhere else. The fascination of the climate and scenery have proved too strong magnets for them to resist. If they have gone back to their old homes it has been solely because business made it imperative that they should do so, and there is always a lingering hope left in their minds that the day will come when, freed from business cares, they may return here and end their days. There is a good deal in this fact. The persons who are coming in this way are possessed of considerable means. They bring money to secure handsome homes for themselves and also either draw their incomes from Eastern investments or bring ready money to find openings for investment here. In this way this new blood is strong and healthy and adds to the quickness of the business pulsation in every way.

—o—

Some Missionaries.

Every person coming here in this way becomes a missionary to draw others from the old home in the East. They go back after their first visit and tell with enthusiasm what they found here. The fact that they return the second year can but impress the minds of those who have never come out. When they leave home the third time with all their household belongings, bidding good-bye for ever to their neighbors, the impression is inevitable that there must be something out here worth seeing, worth moving out to enjoy. The new settlers never leave their old friends time to forget. Letters go back East periodically several times a year to many old friends left behind, thus reminding them of the influences that took their friends so far away from home. These missives are not all wasted. From time to time they tear up one family back East after another by the roots and transplant them out in the new country, where these again in turn become missionaries to draw others.

—o—

Think of All These Letters.

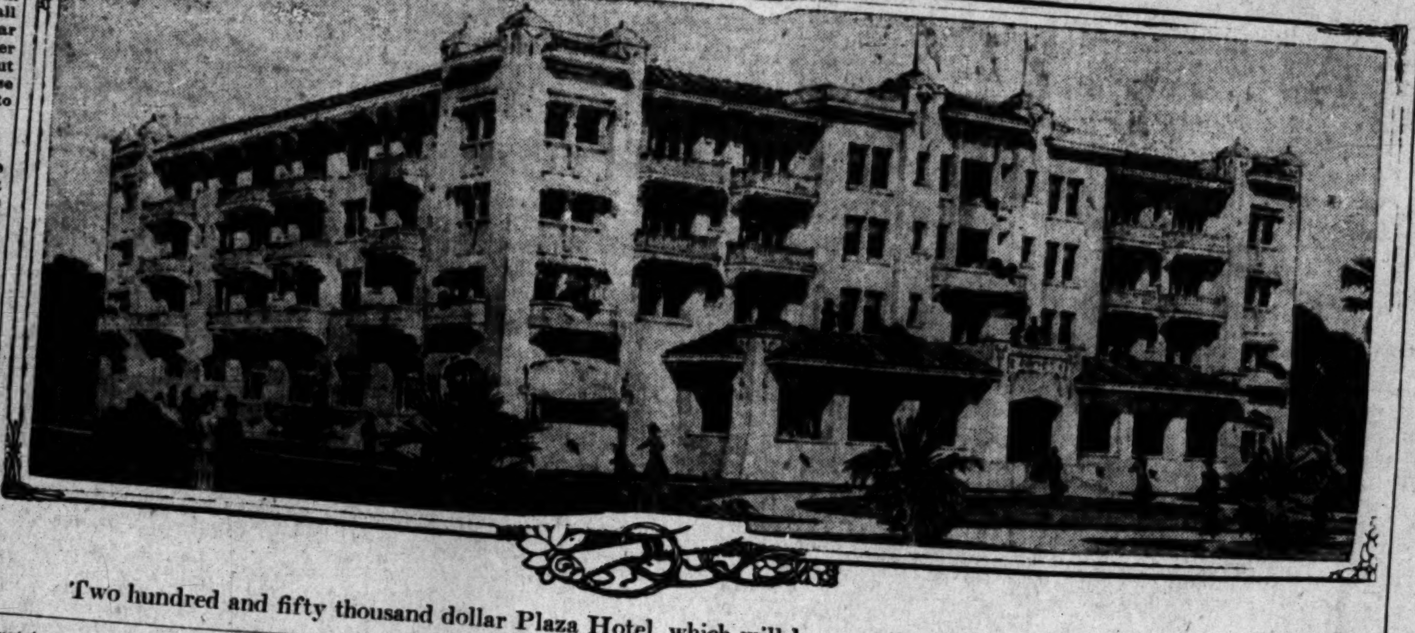
There are 320,000 inhabitants in the city of Los Angeles at the present time. They have come from all parts of the world. There is not a State that is not represented here by numerous former citizens, and scarcely a nation upon the earth that is not represented here by more or fewer former inhabitants. We scarcely realize the thousands of letters that go from Los Angeles every day to be carried all over the world to tell to many thousands of readers of the attractions which life offers here so superior to those found anywhere else. There is not a day in any corner of the United States or any country in Europe where people are not reading letters telling about the climatic conditions in Southern California. These letters account in a large degree for the increased travel to California. We can go back thirty years, when a few hundred letters a year were written from here, and that was about the only outsiders heard of California. As far back as fifty years ago some knowledge of the attractions of Southern California had reached the outside world and gained lodgment in the minds of intelligent persons. Very few then had even heard of the Yosemite Valley, and less prominent features of the landscape were unheard of. The climate, the soil and all those attractions were here, but failed to draw because lacking connection with the minds of people on the outside. Now, like wireless messages, the people here are continually acting upon the people all over the world, and there are few corners of the earth where one can find those who do not know by reputation pretty well all about this country.

—o—

Thousands Waiting to Come.

The effect of all this is that all over the country and in countries across seas everywhere are encountered multitudes whose minds are fixed on California and who are counting the days until they can make their home here. In those old days about the only attractions were the climate and the scenery. Since then California has become as celebrated for the richness of its soils and the wealth of its mines as for the climate and scenery. It is understood now pretty generally throughout the world that the Great Southwest section of America offers more and better openings for business of all kinds than any other part of the world. The climate still attracts the invalid, the aged and the weak, and always will do so. The population of the United States amounts to nearly 90,000,000. There are millions of these so well off that they can live where they like, and of these millions of well-to-do people there are a multitude to whom the greatest consideration is health. But there are other millions in whose minds the great consideration is opportunity to find an opening to go into business, or to find employment in which they can earn a livelihood. There is more activity, population considered, in every form of enterprise in Southern California than anywhere else. The artisan of every kind is needed here. Our manufacturing industries are merely in their infancy. In this field is offered abundant opportunity to men of means and business skill to found enterprises which will grow with great rapidity in the time to come. For the farmer there is no place like California. No soils are richer, no products sell for a higher price or in a readier market, and the lands are cheaper, quality of soil and value of products considered. Alfalfa lands can still be bought here as low as $25 an acre, compared with $100 for grain land in the Western States, and our farmers cut six crops of alfalfa while those of the West gather one of wheat or corn. All these facts are daily becoming better known to thousands upon thousands of people. Hence we may be sure of an ever-increasing population for all future time.

MAGNIFICENT APARTMENT HOTEL FOR WESTMORELAND PLACE.



Two hundred and fifty thousand dollar Plaza Hotel, which will be erected at Pico street and Vermont avenue.

FAMOUS TRACT SOLD.

For a consideration of $50,000 Dr. E. Linton and L. M. Linton purchased from George M. Duntley the remaining part of the famous old Los Feliz tract, now known as the Le Brun ranch, consisting of fifty-six and one-half acres. This tract is located at Highbridge, on the Glendale car line, and is three miles northwest from the center of the city and one-half mile outside the city limits, between Elysian and Griffith parks.

The property will be subdivided into city lots. It now has twenty acres in full-bearing walnut trees, ten acres in berries, ten acres in peaches and about five acres in miscellaneous fruits and vegetables. The transaction was put through by J. S. Waybright.

IMPROVEMENTS AT CHINO.

The Chino Land and Water Company report the following sales of alfalfa land in the artesian belt: Eighteen acres for $2750, to C. Tafel. This land is located on Euclid avenue, about one-half mile south of Ontario. The purchaser will improve it with a home. Fifty acres for $11,250, to Horace E. Patterson. Mr. Patterson expects to seed to alfalfa in the fall. Thirty acres for $4200, to Joseph, Arthur and David Laubengayer. This land is located about three and one-half miles east of Chino, and the purchaser expect to sink a well and seed to alfalfa in the near future.

THE PLAZA.

PALATIAL NEW HOTEL PLANNED.

TO BE BUILT IN WESTMORELAND PLACE.

Will Be Modern Apartment Hostelry of Mission Renaissance Style and Will Cost Over a Quarter-Million Dollars—Work on Excavation to Begin This Week.

Wesley Clark has completed arrangements for the erection of a palatial hotel-apartment building in Westmoreland Place, at the corner of Pico street and Vermont avenue. The structure will face east, and, with the grounds, will have a frontage of 400 feet on Wesley Driveway.

Magnificent tropical gardens will extend the entire length of the grounds on the south and north sides, while the building will set back sixty feet from Wesley Driveway, with flower gardens in front. The north and south wings will be built to the property line on Vermont avenue, leaving an open court 50x100 feet in the center for flowers and shrubbery.

It is the intention of Mr. Clark to provide Los Angeles with a hotel-apartment building that will compare favorably with any of the handsome structures of this class which have been erected in the most aristocratic localities of the large cities in the East. The building will be of brick, hollow tiling, steel and concrete, each room and suite being fully fire-proofed against all the other rooms and suites, and provided with outside private balcony.

The architecture will be of the Mission Renaissance style, and every effort will be employed to make the interior effect sightly and pleasing to the eye. It is in the interior of the building, however, that the results of the architect's skill will be most apparent; convenience and comfort will be combined with beauty of finish and elegance of appointment. The first floor will be finished in mahogany, birch and quarter-sawed oak. The rooms and suites will be finished in white enamel throughout, with tinted walls and mahogany-finished doors.

There will be about 180 rooms and suites, with and without housekeeping apartments. Suites with kitchens are so appointed that they can readily be converted into single bedrooms, dressing-rooms, dens or libraries. The entire building can thus be used as a hotel, dispensing entirely with the apartment feature.

Some of the features for the comfort and convenience of guests who make their home at "The Plaza" will be: A grill room, 80x90 feet; kitchen, 60x60 feet; supply and cold storage room, 60x60 feet. The lobby on the first floor will be 35x60 feet; the parlor, 40x60 feet, where will be a spacious billiard room, a barber shop and trunk and storage rooms. All the rooms will be large and cheerful. Seventy-six bathrooms, in size 7x10 feet, finished in white tiling, adjoin the rooms and suites.

Mr. Clark has had in mind the construction of a hotel-apartment building in Westmoreland Place for several years, and recently visited the East to get ideas to be incorporated in the construction and appointments of "The Plaza." The improvements will represent an investment of more than a quarter million dollars. Plans of the building were prepared by Architect John C. Austin. Work on the excavating will begin this week.

SELLING LOTS BY MAIL.

Extensive Road Improvements and Forestation Along Waterways Causes Activity.

Beaumont sales for the past week are reported at $5300. Many of these buyers were mail-order customers, the practice of selling by mail having been developed by this land company to large proportions. The company's mailing lists comprise nearly 10,000 names, and the total number of pieces of literature sent out by it in the past eighteen months is said to be nearly 400,000.

Extensive improvements on the roads have been the cause of much activity in the lands lying to the north of Beaumont. The recent sale of the Edgar homestead for a total of $5600 is indicative of the movement that is taking place, and several other large deals, including one for the Mellen ranch, are now pending. In order to keep the streams that supply Beaumont free from all forms of contamination, the Beaumont Water Company has already run several miles of wire fencing along its riparian lands. This policy will be continued. Hundreds of forest trees have been planted in the cañons and along the water sheds, pines, firs, spruces and other young trees being furnished by the Forestry Department.

Recent purchasers include the following: Fred Marneek, ten acres in Cherry Valley, west, for $500; Frank E. Frear, two and one-half acres in the townsite for $715.25; A. C. Stower, ten acres in Cherry Valley for $850; William H. Biggs, a lot in Apple Valley for $907.20; Olive F. Whitel, a lot in Apple Valley for $882; George P. Savage, a lot in Apple Valley for $947.20; Clarence Mitcheltree, a lot in Apple Valley for $972.80; Frank D. Broadwell, twenty acres, bee land, for $500; J. B. Lee, two lots for $265; E. D. Norcross, a lot in Apple Valley for $972.80.

BUY BEAUTIFUL HOMES.

Elegant Mission House on South Burlington Sells for Over Thirty Thousand Dollars.

Mines and Farish report the sale for F. E. Thayer to Mr. W. H. Hay, the elegant mission home of twelve rooms, at No. 820 South Burlington, which is one of the most attractive homes in Los Angeles. The lot is 100x150 feet, to a paved alley, and the grounds are beautifully improved with flowers and shrubbery. The paid price was $30,000.

Through Mines and Farish W. H. Hay sold to a local investor the southwest corner of Palmer and Hemlock streets, 80x140 feet, for $16,000.

BUYS HOME ON WEST ADAMS.

J. J. Haggerty, proprietor of the New York Cloak and Suit House, has purchased of J. F. Fitzgerald, through the agency of Dan Miller, the handsome residence at No. 2315 West Adams street. This house, which is beautifully situated on an elevated lot 80x160 feet, is a mixture of the Gothic and Italian style of architecture, elegantly designed and finished inside, having a large, artistic living-room 30x40 feet, together with a billiard room, library, dining-room, den, kitchen and servant's room, all on the main floor. There are five chambers and bathrooms on the second floor. One of the attractive features is the large glass-inclosed veranda. The grounds are beautifully laid out, with trees, palms, flowers and shrubs. This property was bought by Mr. Haggerty for a home. The price paid is said to have been $25,000.

TO OPERATE NEW CAR LINE.

The material for extending the Dalton-avenue division of the Grand-avenue line south to Forty-fifth street and into Vermont Square is now on the ground, and the extension probably will be completed and in operation within four months. The West Forty-eighth-street division of the Grand-avenue line is now in operation through Vermont Square, so that the tract will be exceptionally well provided with transportation facilities. The rapid growth of population in the new southwest section of the city is well illustrated by a recent complaint of Grand-avenue residents that the cars on Grand avenue are all filled before they reach Jefferson street, with the result that they are almost invariably forced to stand en route to the business district. The Los Angeles Railway Company promises to remedy this condition by putting on more cars.

TO MEET IN AUGUST.

August 12 to 14 has just been determined upon as the date for the annual convention of the State Realty Federation, which is to be held this year at Oakland. This important meeting of California's leading real estate men ordinarily takes place in May, but the rule has been varied to enable many of the delegates and visitors to make the stop at Oakland a part of the journey to or from the Seattle exposition. Herbert Burdett, secretary of the Los Angeles Realty Board, who is also executive secretary of the State organization, reports that the local dealers are preparing to represent Southern California in force. It is probable that one or more special cars will be engaged to convey the realty men of this section to the convention.

MONROVIA ACTIVITIES.

MONROVIA, May 8.—Among the realty transfers for the week ending last Thursday, G. S. Stone reports the sale of a twenty-acre orange grove in the Hermosa tract, north of Cucamonga to J. E. Davis, for a consideration of $23,000. Seventeen acres of the tract is in full-bearing navels. Mr. Stone, acting for A. N. Crabtree, also sold six acres near Azusa to E. E. Austin. This tract was set to year-old Valencia trees and carried a good water right. The price paid was $5000.

W. H. Evans reports the sale of a house and three lots fronting on North Charlotte avenue, for John F. Prowl to W. A. Orme, for a consideration of $3500. E. E. Rives sold to Mrs. Mary Brown three lots on Orange avenue in the Renaker tract, for $2000.

BUYS VALUABLE PROPERTY.

G. M. Barker last week sold his home on the south side of Columbia street, fronting on Buena Vista street, Fremont and Fairview avenues, South Pasadena. This property is a few blocks west of the Hotel Raymond, and on the first block south of Columbia street. The lot contains six acres, and was sold by Mr. Stimson, of the G. Lawrence Stimson Company, for a consideration of $40,000 to Egbert Gales, who recently came to Los Angeles from New York

BIG.

PAST WEEK ONE OF VAST DEALS.

FOUR SALES INVOLVE THREE-FOURTHS OF MILLION.

Northern Capital Invested in Northeast Corner of First and Main Streets—Property on Main Between Eighth and Ninth Sells for Over $3700 Per Front Foot.

The past week was one of notably large deals in the realty market. The four largest transactions involved a total of $745,000, which taken with the values represented by a week of lively dealing in all other smaller properties, makes a grand total which could only be approximated in terms around the million mark. Altogether the week is easily the most promising one in point of broadness of dealing and of firmness in price levels in recent months. Following are accounts of the four big transactions which represent amounts in excess of $100,000:

Northern California capital to the extent of $120,000 cash was invested in Los Angeles last Wednesday when the business property known as the Traders' Bank, on the northeast corner of First and Main streets, changed hands. Newton E. Cramer, a wealthy Montana cattleman, sold the corner through R. A. Rowan & Co. to the Vance Anderson Co. of St. Helena. Cramer bought the corner eighteen months ago of the German-American Savings Bank, paying $95,000 cash. The two transactions in this property have brought in $215,000 of outside money.

The Vance Anderson Company, which is in reality an estate incorporated for convenience, was represented in the deal by its attorneys, Taylor & Forgey of this city. The property was purchased as an investment.

The building occupies forty-five feet on Main street by 111 feet on First. It is at present occupied by seventeen tenants. The front foot price of $2655 is an indication of the sterling worth of the corner and its vicinity as business property.

The largest deal of the week was put through by Mines & Farish and Robert Marsh & Co., who sold to Morris Meyerfield of San Francisco, for J. E. and Robert Marsh, the lot and building at Nos. 834 to 840 South Main street, the consideration being $275,000. The lot, which is 73x175 feet, is improved with a four-story modern pressed brick and steel building, completed in February.

The ground floor is occupied by the W. J. Sloan Company and the Los Angeles Box and Bedding Company. The upper floors are used by the Essex Hotel Company. The property is leased for a term of years, and pays 6 per cent. on the sale price. The front foot price of $3765 speaks eloquently for values on that part of Main street.

Mines & Farish also sold for Mrs. F. F. Sloss of San Francisco the lot and building at Nos. 136 to 140 South Spring street. The building is two stories, with stores below and offices above, and is situated on a lot 60x148 feet. The property is leased at $12,400 a year. The purchase price was $175,000. The buyer was a local investor, whose name has not yet been made public. The front foot price was $2916.

Another deal made through the same company was the sale for the Commercial Realty Company of the southwest corner of Eighth and Hope streets, 150x155 feet to an alley, which is improved with the old Hotel Abbotsford Inn. The purchasers are A. L. Burbank and E. V. Baker, who contemplate the erection some time in the future of a large building on the site. The consideration is reported at $175,000.

AZUSA IMPROVEMENTS.

AZUSA, May 8.—W. P. Barnes reports the sale of a corner lot for Mrs. Taylor to Thomas Henry. Mrs. Taylor had owned the property for twenty-two years. The consideration was $250. Jerome Priestly has bought through W. P. Barnes, from J. M. Greever, one and one-fifth acres at the corner of Center street and Citrus avenue, which is set out to orange trees, for $1100.

Several new houses are going up, or are about to be started. E. F. Taylor has let the contract for a five-room bungalow on Soldano avenue, to cost $1200. C. W. Crawford is building for his father, Thomas Crawford, a $2000 house on San Gabriel avenue.

At the meeting of the Azusa Chamber of Commerce this week it was decided to remodel the Hotel Azusa, and make it a first-class tourist hotel. A. P. Griffith, who owns the building, will put $5500 in repairs on it, and the citizens are to be asked to take $10,000 worth of stock in $50 shares.

We have just secured this bargain in the heart of the Wilshire-Normandie Hill district. It is the most perfect example of the beautiful "Swiss Chalet" style, 8-room one-and-one-half story bungalow that we have ever seen. "Perfect" certainly is the word for it. Nothing today competes with it.

The house fronts east, on lot 50x160 ft., ¼ block from rapid car line; and the view of mountains and valley to be seen from its windows and wide veranda is a thing to charm the eye. The interior is the acme of cosy comfort and elegant simplicity. Hardwood floors all through; basement and furnace; 2 toilets and 2 lavatories complete; mantel of Salt Lake stone; all those delightful built-in ideas that make furniture almost superfluous; the handsomest lighting fixtures; the finest of triple-satin-finish woodwork throughout. There are four superb sleeping rooms, part below stairs, part above, one with its own sun-porch and outside entrance. Finally, there is a good garage and drive in.

Is this not enough to make you desire it? Just to read of it. And, if anything, our description is only inadequate. If you want a home at all, you will certainly fall in love with this. Just $6500.

FOR SALE—
ORANGE AND LEMON GROVES.
Well located and good income groves.

DISTRICTS—La Verne, San Dimas, Charter Oak, Claremont and Upland. We are and have been for many years engaged in the orange and lemon growing business. Planted our first trees near what is now Claremont, year 1875.

Some real estate agents advertise themselves as having twenty years' experience in growing oranges, when we know it to be a positive fact they never grew and sold a single box of oranges in their lives. We do not try to sell orange groves by adopting such methods. We have never as yet frozen our feet while engaged in this industry, as many others imagined they had, or were about to. Today our faith in the industry finds us equipped as owners of as good groves as can be found in Southern California. As agents we at all times have a good selection of groves to show and sell our patrons. One of our firm having been called East on account of serious illness of near relative, our city office, 204 Coulter Bldg., will be closed on TUESDAYS, THURSDAYS and SATURDAYS of each week during month of May. Come in on MONDAYS, WEDNESDAYS and FRIDAYS and you will find the senior member, the old man, at the office, ready to answer almost any question you may ask about raising oranges, how they pay, and how to spend the money.

We have one of the finest Mediterranean
Sweet Orange groves in California, year old trees and two or three joining suitable for a nursery. We safely say that it is the best nursery in the county. There is no frost to the tenderest leaf. The soil is nearly and sufficiently high that persons living will never suffer from heat or cold.

It overlooks Redlands, Highlands, nardino and Colton.
The water is absolutely free in pipe length of the ten acres. The only expense tached to the water is the cost of distribution and repairs which does not exceed $1 per per acre. There is a good cistern on place for house use.

THE BUILDINGS.
The buildings consist of a five-room finished cottage with a good stone and a good cellar; a barn with room

The grove adjoins some of the priced groves in the Redlands district.
There are about twenty lemon trees a crop of lemons amounting to about boxes; two Ruby Bloods; two St.
five Washington navels; and the whole rest are Mediterranean Sweets.
The quality of these oranges is such they command a price of three cents pound, will very likely sell for more year.
The soil is so rich that the Alfilarea is so rank that it requires or Canadian peas to supply the nitrogen.
The price is $11,000 which includes

FOR EXCHANGE—TULARE COUNTY ORANGE GROVE.
This Is Your Chance To Get A Large Producer And Plenty Of Room To Increase The Size Of The Grove.
The Owner's Wife Wants To Come South And That Settles It.
You can exchange your bungalow or good vacant lots in any good town near Los Angeles as part payment.
This is a description of it:
700 first-class Washington navel orange trees 12 years old. Large and fine.
200 olive trees same age.
10 acres of the very best quality of orange land adjoining, ready to plant.
10 acres of alfalfa.
10 acres ready for alfalfa.
40 acres of orange land.
2 shares in Deer Creek with a ditch clear across the land that is large enough to flood the alfalfa. This water costs but $10 per year.
The whole 80 acres is fenced and cross fenced.
1 large old barn, chicken houses and yards.
1 blacksmith shop.
3 water wells.
1 windmill and good tank.
1 vertical centrifugal pump and gasoline engine. The water stands ten feet below the surface.

There is a reservoir site on the 40 acres not planted, that affords a site for a pumping station that will be valuable to the adjacent lands. The water stands within ten (10) feet of the surface in the well that is on a level with the reservoir. The wells on the lands adjoining owned by strong companies, are from 240 to 300 feet in depth.

The grove is now in full bloom and looks as if the 700 trees would average 5 boxes each. The house has a commanding site. The grove is beautiful and well located, being but one mile from the station at Terra Bella and six miles south of Porterville. The soil is excellent and works up fine.

The whole 80 acres can be bought for $13,500. They will accept a bungalow at the beach or at some town near Los Angeles as part payment. They will require about $3000 in cash and the balance can run from three to five years at seven per cent. interest.

FOR SALE—TO "LINER" ADVERTISERS: Dating from June 1, classified advertising in The Times will be charged by the word at the present established rate of 1c per word in the daily issue and 1¼c Sunday.

Close calculations, covering a period of several months, develop the fact that the average number of words to the line are a fraction over seven. This basis for charge, therefore, will prevail after June 1.

Cash "want" advertising has always been calculated by the word, and this regulation will not change the manner of handling it.

The present "want" ad. rate has been in effect for many years, though the circulation of the paper, now more than 50,000 daily and 80,000 Sundays, has trebled during this period. No paper in the United States, rate considered, compares with The Times in "want" ad. service.

FOR SALE—

THE NAME—
COLYEAR'S.
THE LOCATION—
509-511 S. MAIN ST.
THE PLACE—
SECOND FLOOR. (TAKE ELEVATOR.)
THE TIME—
7 A.M. TO 6 P.M.

Last week's sales amounted to more than our most sanguine expectations. It was just impossible for the crowds to resist the unusual opportunities of buying slightly-used furniture at such big reductions.

However, it's the old man's way of doing things. Our exchange department on our second floor of our 5-story building is one of the busiest place in Los Angeles.

Thousand of opportunities await shrewd furniture buyers, where one can buy SLIGHTLY-USED goods at about half, and in many instances a great deal less than half what new furniture costs you; not necessary to have the cash either. A dollar or so a week will do.

We expect another rush Monday. Our second floor will be the medium of another busy week's business. WHERE BARGAINS REIGN.

NOTE—Don't forget that old saying, "The early bird catches the worm." In this case it will be the early shoppers will get the best selections, although there will be enough for everybody. Out-of-town customers will have their goods packed and freight will be prepaid to nearly all Southern California points. Our own wagons make prompt city delivery.

We shall place on special sale Monday countless bargains in bedroom sets, odd dressers, odd commodes, folding beds, iron beds, springs, mattresses, china closets, bookcases, wardrobes, extension tables, center stands, bamboo and parlor furniture; also a large lot of slightly-used draperies and bedding.

Remember these goods are on our second floor, all marked in plain figures, plenty of room and plenty of light to see what you are buying.

CARPETS AND RUGS.

We have about 700 slightly-used carpets and rugs, almost any size you want. You can't hardly fail to find one to suit you.

Why not save more than half what a new one would cost you?

500 SLIGHTLY-USED REFRIGERATORS.

The warm weather has begun; get your ice chest now, whilst you can buy one for less than half what you will have to pay next month. This is no dream, either.

Three hundred slightly-used cook stoves and gas ranges, (all sizes,) and the old man's guarantee with every one of them, that's going some, especially when you can buy one for less than half what a new one costs.

INVALID CHAIRS FOR RENT.

How about that beach cottage? We've got the goods and can sell you the right kind of furniture at bedrock prices. We defy competition.

$350 RESTAURANT OUTFIT FOR $75.
ARE YOU MOVING?

It's cheaper to move than to pay rent. Our large padded moving vans will move you quickly, carefully and cheaply; no kicks, overcharges or loafing; nothing like that in our family. Just try us once or store your goods in our centrally-located fireproof warehouse. Private locked rooms, $1.50 a month. Both 'phones.

A GREAT INVESTMENT— We offer and recommend purchase of PACIFIC WHARF AND STORAGE COMPANY'S 6 PER CENT. 20-YEAR GOLD S. F. BONDS. At price to net 7 per cent., with bonus of 50 per cent. of stock. This is the finest and nearest completion of any San Pedro harbor proposition. It represents now a value much greater than money already expended, a large proportion of which was contributed by stockholders.

Wharfage is imperatively needed for the hundreds of large steamers which will in the near future dock at San Pedro. Aside from overland and oriental freight, millions of tons of oranges, beans, dried and canned fruits and vegetables, sugar, oil, coal and other products of the great Southwest will seek a market through San Pedro, and the Pacific Wharf and Storage slips and warehouses will offer the best facilities.

Write for circular, maps, etc.

FOUR FOR ONE WITHIN 12 MONTHS IS a conservative estimate of the probabilities in Clark Copper. The Mexican property just acquired will justify employment of 200 men. The return of Engineer E. M. Clark shows a great quantity of ore, containing from $5 silver and $4 copper to $250 silver and $60 copper to the ton. The property has yielded over $15,000,000, and history of two adjoining properties proves there are many millions more back of and below ore now in sight. Lester Scott, manager, writing from property, says: "Could not ask for better prospects to make large producing property in very short time." 10 PER CENT. GUARANTEED is the offering we make for investment of $100 or more.

We will sell the stock of a local manufacturing corporation with the FULL AMOUNT OF THE INVESTMENT SECURED by a certificate of deposit on the SECURITY SAVINGS BANK, the same being placed in escrow with a trust company and to be returned to the original purchaser at the expiration of the escrow term in case the investor has not received in earnings an average of at least 10 per cent. per year.

This means literally that the trustee will pay back every cent you invest, in the form of a certificate of deposit on the Security Savings Bank, at the expiration of the escrow term, if the corporation in that time has not paid you in earnings an average of 10 per cent. per year.

The corporation thus guarantees an income of 10 per cent. on the investment, or will forfeit the full amount of the purchase price of their stock.

The corporation guarantee is 10 per cent. earnings, but the probabilities are 50 per cent. a year.

Amounts from $100 up will be received on this absolutely safe plan. Particulars by mail or at our office.

MY MAGAZINE, "INVESTING FOR PROFIT," (which I'll send free), is worth $10 a copy to any man who intends to invest any money, however small; who has money invested unprofitably, or who can save $5 or more per month; but who hasn't learned the art of investing for profit.

It demonstrates the REAL earning power of money—the knowledge financiers and bankers hide from the masses.

It shows how to invest small sums and how to make them grow into fortunes—the actual possibilities of intelligent investments.

It reveals the enormous profits bankers make and shows how one can make the same profits safely. It explains HOW stupendous fortunes are made and WHY they are made, how $1000 grows to $22,000.

To introduce my magazine write me NOW, mention this paper, and I'll send it six months FREE.

TO "LINER" ADVERTISERS: Dating from June 1, classified advertising in The Times will be charged by the word at the present established rate of 1c per word in the daily issue and 1¼c Sunday.

Close calculations, covering a period of several months, develop the fact that the average number of words to the line are a fraction over seven. This basis for charge, therefore, will prevail after June 1.

Cash "want" advertising has always been calculated by the word, and this regulation will not change the manner of handling it.

The present "want" ad. rate has been in effect for many years, though the circulation of the paper, now more than 50,000 daily and 80,000 Sundays, has trebled during this period. No paper in the United States, rate considered, compares with The Times in "want" ad. service.

Consolidation Subcommittees Gather New Data.

One Party Goes to Wilmington, Other to San Pedro.

May Be Many Weeks Before Real Campaign Opens.

In quest of fuller knowledge of conditions at San Pedro and Wilmington, two subcommittees of the Los Angeles Consolidation Committee went down to the seaport yesterday afternoon, one detachment making an inspection of the suggested plans for improving the outer harbor, the other confining its investigations to Wilmington and the inner harbor. The visit simply was one of many that probably will be made before the general committee will be ready to report a plan of campaign for consolidation.

The consolidation act becomes effective next Tuesday, but it is likely to be several weeks before final steps can be taken for calling the election. Many legal and other points must be discussed before final action is taken.

Joseph Scott was chairman of the subcommittee that visited the outer harbor. Accompanying him were Stoddard Jess, M. H. Newmark, Leslie R. Hewitt, Homer Hamlin, F. J. Hart and A. P. Fleming.

The subcommittee that went to Wilmington included James A. Anderson, chairman; W. D. Stephens, H. Jevne, M. P. Snyder, J. M. Schneider, O. E. Farish and Frank Simpson. F. W. Braun was the only member of the general committee who was unable to make the trip.

WILMINGTON INSPECTION.

The Wilmington party was met at that place by President Opp and members of the Wilmington Consolidated Committee. There was an automobile trip over the streets that Wilmington desires improved under consolidation, then the visitors were taken in a launch through the inner harbor, viewing the channels now being dredged for the purpose of taking shipping to Wilmington wharves, also the outlines of proposed channels. Capt. Amos A. Fries, Corps of Engineers, U.S.A., who went with the party, pointed out many of the proposed improvements.

The visitors to San Pedro were met with a tallyho and carriages and were taken to the otuer harbor over San Pedro street. The first stop was made at the foot of that street, where an excellent view may be had of the Huntington concession and the Miner fill, as well as the remainder of the outer harbor.

Much interest was shown in the possibility of securing municipal wharfage just inside the inner harbor channel, along the government jetty opposite Deadman's Island. Here, on the east side of what is known as the Huntington concession, is a frontage of 1800 feet that lies within the government reservation bounded by the 900-foot radius centering on Deadman's Island. It has been asserted that the city might erect wharves here to care for present commerce under permission from the War Department, and title acquired later by act of Congress.

NO TUNNELS NEEDED.

To this frontage the city would have access over San Pedro street and Fourteenth street without tunnels. The grade of San Pedro street for about two blocks at the present time is a trifle more than 6 per cent. The rest of the distance to the Los Angeles boulevard can be run over an easy grade by way of Fourteenth street.

Considerable time was given to an explanation of municipal docking possibilities at this point. Capt. Hamilton and Capt. Johnson, port pilots, who accompanied the party, explained the advantages and disadvantages of handling vessels under various conditions. Maps showing the various concessions were spread out on the ground and thoroughly discussed. Attention was attracted to the frontage reserved by the city of San Pedro at the end of the Miner fill and also in the 50-foot right of way of the Southern Pacific Railroad extending around Timms' Point to the government reserve. This right of way was acquired from the State in 1887, but has never been used by the railroad company.

CITY'S BIG HOLDING.

Later the party drove nearly two miles south to the 166 acres just within the government breakwater, and owned by the city. The view was from the top of the bluff overlooking this acreage. Maps were again brought into use to show the various depths of water at this point and the amount of dredging required to accommodate deep-draught vessels.

The closing of the gap in the breakwater came up for discussion. This gap was left open on recommendation of the Walker board, the engineers fearing that if it were closed the current would not carry the silt coming down from the inner harbor out to sea. It has since been demonstrated that there is no danger from this source and the engineers now are agreed that the gap should be closed.

If this were done the kelp that is now kept alive by the swell would die, as it cannot live in still water. A representative of the construction company that has the breakwater nearly completed stated to members of the delegation that the gap could be closed in about six months after the awarding of the contract.

Sinaloa Lands

Sinaloa of The Past

From $1.00
To $25.00 An Acre

With Water, $16 An Acre

All things considered, there is absolutely no question but what Sinaloa Lands offer greater inducements to both homeseekers and investors today than are to be found anywhere else in the world. The greater portion of Sinaloa's fertile acres are yet in a comparatively virgin state. The land in most sections has hardly been scratched, and yet, with primitive methods of cultivation and with no irrigation, these lands yield bountifully. Those who buy lands at present prices—from $1.00 to $25.00 an acre—should more than double their money inside of three years. The Sinaloa Land Company is now offering "Colony Lands," with water, at $16.00 an acre. It is safe to say that these lands will be selling at from $25.00 to $30.00 an acre within the next six or eight months. Now is the time to invest in Sinaloa Lands—before prices advance.

Principal Products of Sinaloa, Mexico

The principal products of Sinaloa are corn, beans, cotton, peas, wheat, barley, alfalfa, rice, milo-maize, oats, sugar cane, tobacco, apples, bananas, pineapples, melons, limes, berries, and all kinds of vegetables known to temperate and semi-tropical climes.

Mining and cattle raising are also profitable industries and will be greatly increased with the influx of population into the country.

Personally Conducted Parties For Sinaloa

The Sinaloa Land Company has arranged for twice-a-month personally-conducted parties to visit its properties in the State of Sinaloa, Mexico. Fare for round trip, via the Southern Pacific, is $62.65. The next party will leave Los Angeles for Sinaloa on Saturday, May 15th. Reservations can be made in advance at the office of the Company—602 South Main street.

Illustrated Booklets and Maps of Sinaloa

Beautifully illustrated booklets, together with maps, have been issued by the Sinaloa Land Company descriptive of its properties in Mexico. These booklets are instructive and interesting. Copies of booklets, and maps showing the Company's "Colony Lands" in the State of Sinaloa, will be cheerfully furnished to all who call at the office, or who will write requesting same.

Sinaloa of The Future

Sinaloa—"The California of Mexico"

The Coast Belt, which comprises practically 20 per cent. of the entire 17,500,000 acres area in the State of Sinaloa, Mexico, is from one to forty miles wide and about four hundred miles in length. It is in this belt that the Company's "Colony Lands," at $16.00 an acre, are located. In no other part of the world are lands so productive as in this belt of Sinaloa. The soil of Southern California more nearly equals them in agricultural possibilities. For further information, apply to BRIGHT FUTURE.

BUSINESS MEN FLOCK SOUTH.

Los Angeles Capitalists Like San Diego.

Acreage Property in Demand Near Tia Juana.

Reports of Activity in Country Towns.

SAN DIEGO, May 8.—The introduction of outside capital into San Diego realty and business circles within the next few weeks bids fair to be of large proportions. Los Angeles men have flocked here this week in large numbers. They are watching for opportunity to invest capital where there are sure to be returns. Several big deals are hanging fire in which Los Angeles men figure. It is understood that the Hamburger interests are investigating business possibilities in San Diego. M. A. Hamburger spent several days here last week. It is understood that he announced he came here for rest. However, it is known that he made inquiries among acquaintances as to the future outlook for business in San Diego and it is not improbable that there may be something doing in the near future in which the Hamburgers will at least acquire business property in San Diego.

The certainty of establishing a racing plant at Tia Juana has caused a demand for acreage property in that vicinity on this side of the international boundary line. Much property is being bought up in that locality. Just why is not explainable at this time unless the speculators believe that a town will eventually be built up by reason of the race track being so close at hand. One deal there just closed yesterday transfers from W. W. Whitney to J. H. Loudon twenty acres for $3000.

Demand for city real estate continues good and there is a feeling of optimism among all dealers. O. J. Hough, a La Jolla capitalist, Thursday sold 100x150 feet at the northwest corner of Fourth and Ash streets to M. Hall and H. C. Gordon for $40,000. Four years ago Mr. Hough bought this property for $15,000.

Recent sales by Rice & Potter: 50x[illegible] feet at the northwest corner of Third and G streets for $20,000. The purchaser is a local investor. Two lots 100x100 feet at northwest corner of Twelfth and J for $8500. One lot [illegible]x100 feet on the west side of Second between F and G streets, for $8000.

Mrs. Martha Ingersoll Robinson recently closed the following sales: Two lots 100x100 feet at the southwest corner of Thirteenth and I streets to a Seattle capitalist for $6500. Lot 25x100 feet on the south side of B between Seventh and Eighth for Harriet E. Baldwin for $6500. A lot 80x180 feet at the corner of Tenth and Adella avenue, Coronado, to James T. Gleeck and F. W. Clark of New York, who were recent guests at Hotel del Coronado. They will later erect homes on the site.

E. J. Swayne & Co. this week sold a frontage of fifty feet on the west side of Second street between C and D, to outside investors for $22,500. The same firm has sold to M. H. Fleming [illegible] feet at the northwest corner of Twenty-third and D streets, for M. Demarand for $2500; two lots on Seventh street between Robinson and Pennsylvania avenues to C. L. Smith for $[illegible], and one and one-half lots on H street between Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth to Katherine Johnston for Arthur Maiss for $1800.

George E. Jenks has sold for George Crosby a five-room cottage and lot on Twenty-sixth street near B to E. C. Bossert for $3250; also a cottage and lot at 2400 L street for Charles W. Rowe to Patrick Martin for $3000.

REDLANDS PROPERTY ACTIVE.

STEADY DEMAND FOR LOTS.

REDLANDS, May 8.—Transfers of property in and about Redlands during the week show increased activity, and the number of transactions closed by local real estate men gives evidence that there are a large number of people in this city who are searching for good investments, both in city property and orange acreage. While the first part of the week was somewhat quiet, the deals of the past few days are quite numerous, and the total for the week will show up well. The steadily increasing demand for lots and houses indicates that during the spring and summer there will be considerable building.

Miss Clara E. Whitcomb has bought of Taylor & Break the Whittier packing-house No. 1, at Bryn Mawr, this being on a part of the new subdivision that has recently been put on the market, and in which $12,000 worth of property has already been sold. The property bought by Miss Whitcomb has a frontage of 150 feet on the Southern Pacific tracks, and a depth of 80 feet, and brought about $6000.

[illegible] G. Hazzard has sold his ten-acre orange grove on the north side of West [illegible] avenue, west of Texas street, to Dennis Mulvahill for $11,500, an advance of about $1000 over what he paid for it a few weeks ago. The grove is set to young navels, and is in good condition. There is no house on the land.

[illegible] C. Smith has purchased a house and lot on East Fern avenue for $3600. [illegible] F. Ferryman has sold his residence at No. 48 La Verne street to Mary A. Latham for $2200. George S. Biggin has purchased from K. C. Wells a house and lot on Cajon street, between [illegible] Place and Cypress avenue. The [illegible] is large and has a good two-story [illegible] on it. It was purchased as an investment, and the consideration is not made public.

The agent reports the sale of considerable property in the Taylor & Break tract in Bryn Mawr. A. P. [illegible] has purchased the lot on which [illegible] a store building. The price being $[illegible]. Mr. Dallas has also bought [illegible] other lots on which there is a [illegible]. The price paid was $1200. G. [illegible]ldon has purchased two lots with [illegible], paying $1700. John Jen[illegible] has bought a lot for $400, and [illegible] Robinson has purchased one for [illegible] price. G. T. Shreeve has [illegible] one for $350.

[illegible] Bush has purchased from Sylvester Link a seven-acre grove, corner [illegible] Highland avenue and Dearborn [illegible]. It is set to full-bearing navels, [illegible] first-class condition. The property is said to have brought about $13,-[illegible]. [illegible]ell Duncan of this city has purchased a ten-and-a-half-acre grove in Riverside, paying in the neighborhood of $10,500. It is set to six-[illegible] navels. The property is within [illegible] miles of the city and commands [illegible] view of the city and surrounding country. It is in the frostless [illegible].

[illegible] Randall has sold to H. W. [illegible] the Randall place on West [illegible] avenue for $5000. The lot is 50x150 [illegible] and is improved with a nine-room [illegible]. J. W. Veach has sold to Lewis [illegible] Andrews a ten-acre tract, seven of which is set to oranges, the rest being vacant land. The grove adjoins the Schee ranch on West State street and sold for about $5500. J. W. Lindsay and W. [illegible] of Redlands have purchased a [illegible]-acre tract at Lindsay, Cal., a water right going with the purchase.

GREAT BUILDING RECORD.

INTERESTING COMPARISONS.

POMONA, May 7.—A phenomenal building record has been made here for the first four months of this year, the report of Building Inspector Cowles showing a total of $225,000 worth of permits issued. This is $22,000 greater than Riverside's building operations in the same period, $11,000 greater than Redlands's record, and $121,000 greater than the total amount spent for building in San Bernardino during this time. Long Beach's record for the four months is $72,000.

Work is being rushed upon the new building of the Pomona Implement Company at the corner of Third street and Garey avenue, upon the brick block of F. H. Osler on South Thomas street, and upon the new Masonic building at the corner of Fourth and Thomas streets. Midgley Bros. have had plans prepared for a modern two-story brick block, 65x120 feet, at the corner of Third and Thomas streets. The new addition to the Pomona Manufacturing Company's plant on Gibbs street is nearly completed, and work has been commenced upon a brick addition to the store occupied by Booth Vaughn & Sons.

George E. Hart of Los Angeles has sold to Fred R. Robbins of this city a twenty-acre orange grove on Ninth street, through the agency of J. A. Fitch. The same agency has sold three lots on Huntington boulevard in the Ganesha Park tract to N. W. Parker of Worcester, Mass. Mrs. F. M. Butler of Denver has purchased a lot in this tract, on Melrose street, through the agency of M. H. Wilson. C. A. Stokes has bought a lot on Williams street and will build a home. F. W. Ritter made the deal.

Messrs. Beck, Cole and Strang have started to build homes in the Ganesha tract the past week. Five lots have been sold in the Walker-Dole tract the past week and two more houses will be built there.

NEW TRACT OPENED.

THIRTY-TWO NEW PERMITS.

SOUTH PASADENA, May 8.—The Sparks Realty Company reports the following sales: Mrs. Pamelia D. Hord to Belle Johnston, a lot 77x162 feet, improved with an eight-room two-story residence, on Monterey Road between Diamond and Fremont avenues. The consideration was $7000.

The new Clark tract, north of Mission street, and just east of Garfield avenue, is now on the market. The tract is one of the finest in the city, as it commands a magnificent view of the mountains and valley, and all the streets are graded, curbed and guttered, and bordered by sidewalks. On Garfield avenue there are twelve-foot parkings, and date palms are set every twenty-five to thirty feet. The building restrictions of $3000 will be enforced, and all houses must set back thirty-five feet from the property line.

Mrs. Cora Hodge has sold to W. A. Blinn of Los Angeles a lot 100x172 feet, improved with an attractive bungalow. The property, which cost $3800, is at No. [illegible]715 Hope street.

The number of building permits issued for the month of April was 32 amounting to $41,090, an increase of $5045 over the corresponding month for 1908. If the city continues to grow at this rate, it will have little difficulty in holding its own with the surrounding cities and towns.

MANY NEW COTTAGES.

GREAT ACTIVITY AT BEACH.

BALBOA, May 8.—More building is going on here now than at any other time in the history of the beach. Carpenters expect to begin work at the pavilion soon. The building is to be enlarged and otherwise improved.

J. V. Carroll expects to begin soon a cottage in the Gouge tract for Mr. Little of Upland. Rex Goodsell of San Bernardino has let the contract for the construction of six-room bungalow near Bayside. Four cottages are under way at East Newport and several others are contracted for, which are to be commenced in a few days. J. Lockwood of Los Angeles has the lumber on the ground for an eight-room cottage near Tenth street.

Property sales have been good the past week and every encouragement is given for a brisk summer's business.

William Richards of Hollywood expects shortly to begin the erection of a cottage on the bluffs at Corona del Mar near his present home. G. F. Fulkerson of Los Angeles has let the contract for the building of a modern bungalow near Park Place. O. Gunnison of Pasadena today began a beach home on Surf avenue, near Fourth street.

F. H. Harding of Santa Ana has the contract let for the building of three concrete cottages, one of which will be begun the first of next week on Central avenue, near B street. The $3000 bungalow of E. J. Gilleland is now under way. Miss Jane Austin's cottage at A street and Central avenue, Miss M. Meyrick's cottage at Palms street and Central avenue have been completed. Judge Bledsoe's Bayside home, near the Bay Island bridge, is nearly completed.

MANY GROVES SOLD.

BIG BRIDGE COMPLETED.

GLENDORA, May 8.—C. H. Converse sold a ten-acre tract one mile south of town, set to four-year-old orange trees, two-thirds Valencias and one-third navels, to R. Holt of Los Angeles, the consideration being $10,000. Mr. Holt has taken possession and will improve the land by erecting a fine residence.

H. H. Beckwith sold a foothill ten-acre tract, set to four and sixteen-year-old orange trees, one mile north-east of Glendora, to H. A. White of Covina, for $10,000.

The Mercereau Bridge Company completed the reinforced concrete bridge across the Little Dalton Wash on Michigan avenue today. The span is twenty feet and the width twenty-five feet, with abutments extended ten feet on each side. The width can be increased to forty-five feet at any time. The floor consists of steel eye-beams, laid two feet apart, and concrete, the first bridge of the kind in the county.

The new Pacific Electric Railroad depot, in course of construction, is inclosed and ready for lathing.

VACATION SCHOOLS.

Dana Bartlett Would Open Them in Connection With Bethlehem Institution.

Dana W. Bartlett, superintendent of Bethlehem Institution, is appealing to the people of the city in behalf of vacation schools for boys and girls, who are turned upon the streets when the public schools close. He says that children in the crowded districts are much in need of these schols, and if the requisite funds are forthcoming, he will establish them in the Eighth Ward and in Sonoratown.

The schools are of a twofold nature, combining education with healthful and elevating recreation, such as would be entirely out of reach of the boys and girls if left to their own resources. They are not shut up in schoolrooms during the summer, when their health calls for outdoor life, but are given just enough of story-telling, games, and the like, to hold them together. Manual training, nature study, visits to the parks and seashore, occupy the greater part of the time, and bring the children to the close of the vacation days, brightened by association with educated people and their vision broadened by a fuller knowledge of what they have seen.

It will require $1200 to conduct three or four such schools, the money being principally necessary for the trips to the country and seashore, and on behalf of the boys and girls who need the training in character building and better citizenship, he appeals for the help of benevolent people.

CANTATA AT UPLAND.

Rendered by Large Chorus—Electric Line Seems Assured—Fruit Packers' Demands.

UPLAND, May 8.—Last evening, at the Auditorium, the sacred cantata, "The New Jerusalem," was rendered by seventy-five singers of Upland and Ontario, under the direction of Prof. B. F. Sprunger.

It is announced that a large force of men and teams will be employed in grading for the proposed electric line into this city, not later than June 1. As this information comes from a member of the Right of Way Committee, it is accepted as authentic.

B. F. Hess, a contractor and builder, who recently came here from Long Beach, has just completed a home on East Twelfth street.

N. G. Pehl reports the sale of the following properties: Arthur Duncanson to J. L. Howe, five acres of navels, on Fourteenth street, $4000; C. W. Cummings to C. N. Hand, ten acres of navels, on Twenty-second street, $12,500; E. L. Yocum to Hampton Smith, five acres of oranges on Eleventh street, $7500.

NOW IN SECOND CLASS.

On July 1, the local postoffice enters the second class. The inspector for the rural carrier division for the Pacific Coast was here recently, and stated that the rural business in this office is heavier than in any city of like size in his district. An average of 7000 pieces of mail matter per month is handled by Carrier Perkins, while last month he handled a total of 16,000 pieces. The inspector stated that the volume of business warrants the employment of another carrier, but that conditions of the roads over the territory sought to be served are not such, at present, as to justify the establishment of the route.

The proprietors of the Upland pharmacy have opened in the former postoffice room on Second avenue an ice cream and soda parlor.

Mrs. D. F. Ainslee of Big Pine, who spent the winter here with her sister, Mrs. George Barlow, underwent a surgical operation at San Antonio Hospital this week, and is reported to be recovering rapidly.

Amos Allen is enjoying a hunting trip in Trinity county. He is reported to have bagged several bears and bobcats, but no lions.

"Mothers' Day" is to be fittingly observed in several of the local churches tomorrow. The pastors will speak on "Motherhood."

The Turner Art Exhibit, containing reprints of more than 200 of the famous paintings of this country and of Europe, is to be on display at the Auditorium on May 13 to 15. Part of the proceeds are to go into the school funds.

DEMAND MORE PAY.

Packers at the Lemon Growers' Exchange have demanded an advance to 7 cents per box for their work. They now receive 6 cents. It is understood the demand will be complied with, pending a meeting of the board, at which time the matter will be taken up. Packers of oranges at the Upland Exchange, the largest in the city, are asking 3½ cents, instead of 3 cents, as has been customary for several years past.

PUNCH SET FOR PATTERSON.

Nine ex-road foremen, all of the Fifth Supervisor District, gathered at the Hollenbeck Café last night to do honor to C. E. Patterson, former supervisor of that district. Former Road Foreman Wilson, made a speech, and on behalf of the guests presented Mr. Patterson with a handsome cut-glass punch set. Those present were: C. E. Patterson and wife, Mr. Wilson and wife, E. D. Goode and wife, W. J. Ludlow and wife, E. A. Fisher and wife, P. L. Lopz and wife, William Erwin and wife, Jack Hass and wife, and ex-Foreman McCab and wife. All served under Patterson when he was Supervisor.

THE RIVER ELBE.

Millions Have Been Spent Upon It and Traffic Supports the Cost.

Six million tons go in or out of the free port of Hamburg by the Upper Elbe gate in barges every year—enough, if evenly divided, to load three big ocean steamers every day in the year and to carry away and distribute the cargo of three others coming in, says a writer in Everybody's. A big traffic in itself—this transshipment from river to sea; and Hamburg recognizing that fact, has spent millions of dollars to prepare its harbor for it. But it has spent it as Breslau has spent it, by issuing bonds and allowing the traffic to support the burden of its own cost. Barges coming down the Elbe pass through an ingenious gate into a series of canals and havens which are for them alone, and which have room for 1600 of them at a time.

The river harbor is divided into numerous basins, and on the quay wall of each basin is a railway track, with a warehouse back of it, well equipped with loading cranes. If a barge arrives whose cargo is not for immediate sea shipment, she is sent to these warehouses. But if the cargo is for some waiting vessel or for one soon expected, the barge goes through the toll-gate, without paying, and runs alongside the waiting steamer or the quay at which she is to land. If the steamer is there, her mast derricks quickly hoist and transfer the cargo. If the steamer is yet to come the garge goes to her quay and the cargo is hoisted out into the warehouse to await with other freight the coming of the vessel. The barge is unloaded, then goes to a discharging warehouse for ocean steamers and receives a cargo of imported goods for distribution at Madgeburg, or at Dresden; or it goes with a floating elevator to some steamer just in from America or Argentina, and takes on wheat for Berlin.

MONEY IS TOO HEAVY.

Airships Cannot Be Used by Bank Robbers as They Carry Only Limited Weight.

At the present time the potentialities of the aëroplane are generally regarded as only limited by the range of the imagination. But an aviator at Olympia, after applying practical considerations to the matter, arrived at the conclusion that "an airship by dropping an explosive might wreck the bank premises, but that," he said, "would neither destroy the gold reserve nor enable the aërial raiders to carry it away. If I were a foreign foe proposing to capture the Bank of England gold reserve I do not think I should try to carry it off by airship or aëroplane. And I will tell you why."

Pulling a slide rule out of his pocket, the scientist made a few rapid calculations. "There are about 3½ sovereigns to the ounce avoirdupois," he said, "56 to the pound, 125,000-odd to the ton. So the £40,000,000 in gold would weigh about 320 tons.

"Now an airship, a dirigible of quite a formidable type, might carry perhaps 1000 pounds in weight, something under, perhaps, say, the equivalent of $250,000. So it would require nearly 1000 huge dirigibles to carry away the $200,000,000, and I do not know any country that is likely to have so many; and as such airships would cost at least $[illegible]5,000 each, the capital involved would be about $25,000,000.

"So much for the attempt by dirigible. Now for the aëroplane. A passenger-carrying aëroplane may be said to have a cargo-carrying capacity of 250 pounds—roughly $62,000 in gold. It would take a fleet of 4000 aëroplanes to get away with the $200,000,000, and I am afraid that at present London has not garage accommodation for so many."—[Washington Post.

Our Farm Wealth.

Some idea of the immense farm wealth of the American people may be derived from a paragraph in that excellent farm paper, the St. Louis Journal of Agriculture, which computes that our horses are worth $1,974,000,000; mules, $437,082,000; milch cows, $702,945,000; other cattle, $863,764,000; sheep, $192,632,000, and swine, $354,745,000. These figures are taken from a publication emanating from the Bureau of Statistics.—[Exchange.

Fighting Forest Fires.

VAST LOSSES ANNUALLY SUFFERED MAY BE REDUCED BY EFFECTIVE FIRE PATROL SERVICE.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

IRE is the greatest enemy of forests; greater even than the rapacious lumberman, for the lumber- n, no matter how completely given r to his own conception of self-in- est, may be taught economical rea- h. But fire is controlled only by er force; that is, if it is once al- wed to attain to a robust growth, ugh in its infancy it is often easily bdued.

A good example of the great matter at a little fire kindleth was furnished the awful conflagration near Hinck- , Minn., in 1894. For several days small fire burned slowly near the wn, and at any time might easily ve been put out. But finally the nd rose and under its stimulus the ant quickly became a giant, which its might destroyed seven towns. led 500 people, left 2000 more utterly titute, and consumed $25,000,000 rth of property. That amount, if ended in fire patrol, would protect the forests of the country for eight rs.

reat fires seldom start in national sts, but on private property, where, arently, it is no one's business to them out.

early days thousands of acres of forest were burned off to provide icultural land, and that was as it uld be, for the eastern portion of country was orginally almost solid st, and from that forest had to be sted farms for the rapidly-increas- inhabitants of the new land. Such itimate burning, however, degen- ted into flagrant and criminal waste, n fires were set, or allowed to burn, er needlessly or for trivial cause.

the early days of the great lum- -producing period of the Northwest- Lake States and the South, a pe- that is already past its zenith, the rmath of a lumbering campaign almost always a fire that licked all the refuse left by the lumber- n, and incidentally destroyed all young growth, which, if given only hance, would have produced for us ther forest. Even now most pri- lumbering operations are but htly improved over that, though that rule there are brilliant and tifying exceptions.

faraway India, in the teak-grow- sections of Burma, they clear land agricultural purposes in a much ter way. There the natives as al- ed to burn off government forests crop the ground for a term of rs, provided that at the end of that they leave the ground stocked h young teak trees, for which they paid, besides the use they have of the land, a certain sum for ry hundred young trees growing. s they shift their agricultural op- tions about, always leaving a prof- le crop on the ground and main- ning the integrity of the forests.

nd India, too, stands well to the t in the matter of forest protection m fire, though such protection is dered extremely difficult by the id and tremendous growth of grass ich reaches a height of ten to twelve t, and through which fire-breaks st be maintained by cutting the ss and burning while green. In te of this great labor fire protec- n in the government forests of In- costs less than 2 per cent. of the ss revenues from the same forests.

n the very nature of things forest s now work greater damage than fires of equal extent years ago, for rywhere the country has become re populous, and in the past thirty- years the value of stumpage has reased five times, so that now it is essary to burn only one-fifth the a to cause an equal loss.

he damage from forest fires, how- r, is not to be estimated by the ue of timber and other property de- oyed, or even by the number of es lost, though that reaches a sad rage total of sixty-five each year, including 1908, which was a very al period.

When fire reaches the point of hav- g destroyed the greater part of the tective covering of hills and moun- ins, then all the region tributary to se watersheds is given over to the vastating waste of alternating floods d droughts which cause damage that not to be easily estimated, but which rtainly amounts to many millions of llars each year. There is presented alarming exhibit of slopes from ich all fertile soil has been stript, d of what were once fertile plains w made barren by a covering of rile sand.

A form of destruction that can be mputed is the loss of new growth. orest fires destroy each year new owth which should add 45,000,000,000 et, board measure, to the timber alth of the country. That timber, ured at only $2 per M, would be orth $90,000,000.

And yet, viewing this almost incon- ivable destruction by [illegible] of our ost valuable and most indispensable tural resource, we have barely be- n to afford it even the slightest pro- ction. Fire-patrol was not organized our national forests even, until the ar 1905, and few other forests have t any systematic protection. Our ghly efficient forest service can pro- t but a small portion of the for- ts of the country, but the work they ve performed and the valuable les- ns they have taught the observing, inking man are wonderful in view the discouragements under which ey have established their system. ven now each of the 1350 rangers and uards has an area of 121,500 acres to atrol, an almost impossible task, ough they are given what help may by the construction of trails and e-breaks, and by running telephone es through the forests so that rangers may quickly send warning of fire to the Supervisor's office.

In 1908 were built in the national forests 160 miles of road, 3300 miles of trail and 2500 miles of telephone lines, besides many miles of firebreaks from sixteen to 100 feet wide in Southern California where the protection of watersheds for irrigation streams is specially important. Fire-fighting tools, shovels, axes, etc., are placed through the forests in cabins and tool boxes where they may be easily reached by fire-fighters.

The forest service has shown that a very satisfactory protection from fire may be given to all the forests of the country at a cost of one cent per acre or less than $3,000,000 a year. When we reflect that at the very lowest estimate $25,000,000 worth of standing timber is destroyed by fire every year, to say nothing of the further terrible destruction of homes and lives, the tremendous loss from the destruction of our future forests, and the incalculable loss by floods and consequent succeeding drought, we will realize how excellent it would be, merely as a business proposition, to extend fire-patrol to whatever forests we have left.

Many States have made rather feeble efforts to protect their forests from fire, in some few States such efforts have been notably successful. In Connecticut during the first year of the fire-warden system from thirty-five towns eighty-eight fire were reported, of which sixty-four were extinguished by the wardens and their assistants at a total cost of $464.

Maine has established a system of lookout stations which has proved very effective.

In the protected forests of Michigan in 1907 no fires occurred, so efficient was the fire-patrol, and in New Jersey during the same period, which was the first year of the operation of the fire service, the acreage burned and the damage done was less than one-tenth of any previous year.

In Washington at a meeting of lumbermen in Seattle a well-systematized ranger service was organized for 1908, the expenses to be paid by an assessment of one cent per acre. In short, wherever a fire-patrol system has been established and effectively maintained it has proved eminently profitable and satisfactory.

In contradistinction to what these States have done West Virginia furnishes an example of very insufficient fire protection.

In that State in 1908 fires occurred in every one of the fifty-five counties. $3,500,000 damage was done to timber, manufactured lumber and other property, while less than $90,000 was expended all told, to suppress fires by counties, companies and individuals.

This estimate of damage, however, is only a portion of the total, for the damage to soils is placed at one dollar per acre, making a total of $1,750,000. And we may believe that estimate a moderate one when we learn that over large tracts the humus was absolutely destroyed down to the rock. So deep and so persistently did the fires burn that in sections following a heavy snow fall in early November which apparently extinguished the fire, after a few hours the snow had disappeared and fire was burning on the surface again. This was caused partly by the extreme dryness of the season.

One-fifth the entire wooded area of the State was burned over, and it is estimated that 3 per cent. of the entire standing timber, large and small, was destroyed.

While such estimates of destruction as this are appalling, they really often fall far short of the mark. Many causes sometimes prevent new forests from making their estimated probable growth; particularly is this truo in the dry Southwest where reforestation of denuded areas is extremely difficult.

Gifford Pinchot, who is the best authority on this subject that we have, and who has done more to change conditions from bad to good than any other man, says that fire-patrol should be established for the entire forest area of the country with an efficient fire-fighting force paid for that work alone.

If one man were able to perform the tremendous labor of establishing such control, and the task were given to the present head of our forest service, I have no doubt that very destructive forest fires from which the country has suffered so in the past would cease, and all forest fires of whatever magnitude would greatly diminish in number with a total gain to the country that could hardly be computed in figures.

Industrial Independence.

JUDICIAL DECISION OF RIGHTS OF EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEES IN STRIKES AND LOCKOUTS.

THE United States Circuit Court of Appeals of the Seventh Circuit had before it recently a case involving the much-agitated and frequently adjudicated question of the rights of labor unions to enforce a strike by means of picketing, and the limitations of the rights of the employer to the writ of injunction.

Certain "locals" of the Iron Molders' Union of North America made demands upon iron foundries and machinists for increased wages and shorter hours, which demands were refused by several of the employing companies, among these the Allis-Chalmers Company, and a strike of the employés resulted. This company, in order to complete its contracts, sent its patterns to other foundries to have the castings made. The striking employés called on the employés of the other companies to refuse to make castings from these patterns, and this demand was in some instances effective.

The trial court enjoined the striking employés from seeking the aid of the employés of the other companies in preventing the execution of the contracts for finished saw mills.

The opinion of the United States Circuit judge in this case is such a clear and comprehensive statement of correlative rights and duties of employer and employés during strikes and lockouts that it is here given at some length as showing the present attitude of the court in these matters:

"If either party, with or without cause, ends an employment at will, the other has no legal ground of complaint. So if the course of the new men who quit or who declined employment was the result of the free play of their intellects and wills, then against them the appellee had no cause of action, and much less against men who merely furnished information and arguments to aid them in forming their judgments. Now it must not be forgotten that the suit was to protect the company's property rights. Regarding employments at will, those rights reached their limit at this line: For the maintenance of the incorporeal value of a going business the company had the right to a free access to the labor market, and the further right to the continuing services of those who accepted employment at will until such services were terminated by the free act of one or the other party to the employment.

"On the other side of this limiting line, the union, we think, had the right, for the purpose of maintaining or increasing the incorporeal value of their capacity to labor, to an equally free access to the labor market. The right of the one to persuade (but not coerce) the unemployed to accept certain terms is limited and conditioned by the right of the other to dissuade (but not to restrain) them from accepting. For another thing that must not be forgotten is that a strike is one manifestation of the competition, the struggle for survival or place, that is inevitable in individualistic society. Dividends and wages must both come from the joint product of capital and labor. And in the struggle wherein each is seeking to hold or enlarge his ground, we believe it is fundamental that one and the same set of rules should govern the action of both contestants.

"For instance, employers may lock out (or threaten to lock out) employés at will, with the idea that idleness will force them to accept lower wages or more onerous conditions; and employés at will may strike (or threaten to strike,) with the idea that idleness of the capital involved will force employers to grant better terms. These rights (or legitimate means of contest) are mutual and are fairly balanced against each other. Again, an employer of molders, having locked out his men, in order to effectuate the purpose of his lockout, may persuade (but not coerce) other foundrymen not to employ molders for higher wages or on better terms than those for which he made his stand, and not to take in his late employés at all, so that they may be forced back to his foundry at his own terms; and molders, having struck, in order to make their strike effective, may persuade (but not coerce) other molders not to work for less wages or under worse conditions than those for which they struck, and not to work for their late employer at all, so that he may be forced to take them back into his foundry at their own terms. Here, also, the rights are mutual and fairly balanced. On the other hand, an employer, having locked out his men, will not be permitted, though it would reduce their fighting strength, to coerce their landlords and grocers into cutting off shelter and food; and employés, having struck, will not be permitted, though it might subdue their late employer, to coerce dealers and users into starving his business. The restraints likewise apply to both combatants and are fairly balanced.

"These illustrations, we believe, mark out the line that must be observed by both. In contests between capital and labor the only means of injuring each other that are lawful are those that operate directly and immediately upon the control and supply of work to be done and labor to do it, and thus directly affect the apportionment of the common fund, for only at this point exists the competition, the evils of which organized society will endure rather than suppress the freedom and initiative of the individual. But attempts to injure each other by coercing members of society who are not directly concerned in the pending controversy to make raids in the rear cannot be tolerated by organized society, for the direct, the primary, attack is upon society itself. And for the enforcement of these mutual rights and restraints organized society offers to both parties, equally, all the instrumentalities of law and of equity."—[The Southern Lumberman.

Advantage of the Open Shop.

There are so many practical reasons why the employer should set up the open shop standard, that the one excuse for his not doing so—the fear of antagonizing organized labor—can only be taken, in many instances, as an unwillingness to make the necessary effort demanded by progress. The evidence of the success of the open shop is everywhere about us. Aside from the countless daily annoyances and bickerings to which a closed shop is subjected, the most important advantages of the open shop may be given as follows:

It makes possible the securing of the best workmen the trades afford.

It tends to create a loyalty and enthusiasm among the men.

It makes possible the treating with men as men and intelligent human beings, where the workman has a right to speak of his ability and the employer the right to know what he is getting; instead of both being handicapped by having to stand on opposite sides of a union card so big in its folly that it entirely cuts off the man-to-man view that all honest, sincere men appreciate.

The open shop reduces antagonism, intimidation and man-friction to a minimum. In other words the open shop has shown its ability both to improve and increase production; and we know this cannot be unless the whole plant rests upon a basis of more reasonable operation than the union, from the very nature of its creed, can possibly provide.

The value of the open shop rests in its ability to foster the interests of all who are connected with it. But, as if the moral and industrial sides of the question were not enough to convince both employer and employé of the practical value of the open shop, it has recently been proven in the courts that a closed shop is unlawful.

It is not a pleasant thought to a manufacturer, who feels that he is producing a worthy product adding to the prosperity of his country, to know that he is a law breaker; neither is it a pleasant thought to the industrious and intelligent workman to know that he has been a party to an illegal, if not criminal, action.—[American Industries.

A Fearful Responsibility.

There is food for serious thought in the words spoken by George W. Baer in addressing the president of the United Mine Workers during the recent Philadelphia conference. Said Mr. Baer:

"To be entirely frank with you, gentlemen, there are some things in the strike commission's awards that do not suit either side. That is always so in a matter of decisions of controversies. Taking a broad and generous view of the situation in this country today, however, and of the state of the market for the last six years, this award of the strike commission has been the most satisfactory solution of the labor problem on a large scale that the world has even seen.

"Has it not insured peace and quiet and justice and fair dealing to as great an extent as can be obtained in human affairs? Do you know of any case anywhere in so large an industry as this, involving hundreds of thousands of people, where such results, with such benefits to the workingman and satisfaction to the community, have been brought about? And don't you recognize that the public will judge of you most severely, because they know of these results, if for any reason you do anything to destroy a system that generally has worked so well?

"I think you are assuming a fearful responsibility. In the light of my experience, which has been large, covering forty years of dealing with labor problems, I unhesitatingly say that while there are some things in the award of the strike commission that I would have different, yet in its general results it is the wisest solution of the labor problem that the world has ever had."

None can appreciate the "fearful responsibility" mentioned by Mr. Baer more than the millions of workmen, and especially their families. Responsibility for any strike which will result in increasing, even for a day, the price of necessities, is a responsibility no man should court.—[American Industries.

NEW PERMITS SHOW INCREASE.

GAIN OF TWENTY-FOUR IN BUILDING PROJECTS.

Beats the Corresponding Week a Year Ago Only Little, But the Month Is Still Young, and May, Nineteen-Eight Was Exceptional for the Times.

Thus far during the month of May the number of building permits issued by the Chief Inspector of Buildings does not show a very substantial increase over the corresponding week of last year. The total number of permits reported is 159, a gain of 24, while the valuation of $209,200 is less notable, the increase being only $409. It must be remembered, however, that May, 1908, was a comparatively good month in a very bad year. The present month is yet young, and there is some indication that the record for the remaining three weeks will serve to put a different light upon the situation as compared with previous year. Following is the classified report and the report by wards:

	Permits.	Value.
Class C, reinforced concrete	6	$ 71,000
Class D, 1-story	59	70,247
Class D, 1½-story	8	15,100

Brick alterations	6	1,923
Frame alterations	51	11,623
Demolitions	4	375
Total	159	$209,200

Comparison with last year, 135 permits; $208,791 valuation.

Following is a report by wards from May 14 to May 7, inclusive:

ACTIVITY IN GLENDALE.

Two of the water plants at Lomita were turned over to the property owners last week, and at a meeting held at the town hall Saturday, Narbonne Ranch Water Companies No. 1 and 2 were formed. A full complement of officials and a board of directors was elected for each enterprise. The activity at San Pedro is helping the sales at Lomita, and the following transactions are reported: William Pearson, one acre for $425; J. E. Cuthrell, one and one-fifth acres for $484; W. H. Martin, two acres for $800; Mrs. J. H. Love, ten acres for $4000; W. W. Craft, one acre for $375; W. A. Taylor, ten acres for $3500; Alice Darling, two acres for $825; L. J. Ingwerson, three acres for $1225; Frank Neber, five acres for $1900; W. W. Rowe, one lot; Robert P. Adams, two and one-half acres for $1025; Julius Schulz, two and one-half acres for $1025.

ORGANIZE WATER COMPANIES.

James Wyvell reports the following sales through his Casa Verdugo office: P. S. McNutt to M. B. Jones, the northwest corner of Brand boulevard and First street, having a frontage of 200 feet on Brand boulevard, and 390 feet on First street, for $5500. This is one of the finest corners in Glendale, and Mr. Jones will beautify the entire lot with shade trees and shrubbery, put in a fine tennis court, and in the near fture erect a beautiful residence for his home. Mr. Wyvell also reports: William Wright to Eliza Munro, a north front lot on Fair View avenue, just west of Louise street, 50x170 feet, for $600. This lot will be improved with a five-room bungalow. William Wright to Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Price, a north front lot on Fair View avenue, near above lot, 50x170 feet, for $600. This lot will also be improved with a good five-room bungalow. William Wright to F. C. Murray, four north front lots on Fair View avenue, just east of Brand boulevard, each 50x170 feet, for $2400.

CONQUERING WILD.

FEW RABBITS IN THIS DRIVE.

INCREASE OF SETTLERS MAKES THEM SCARCE.

Where Five Thousand of the Little Long-eared Animals Were Slain Last Year Only a Small Number Were Taken Yesterday—Not a Coyote Seen This Time.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DELANO, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The much advertised rabbit drive took place here today. Nearly 1000 persons, men, women and children from Delano, McFarland and the surrounding country formed across the level prairie and as this three-mile line advanced the rabbits were driven into a wire netting inclosure in the shape of a letter V, the opening being about one mile across.

Last year there was a slaughter of about 5000 rabbits but this year either there were no rabbits or they were too wise to be killed. The total slaughter was only about fifty and most of these were killed by some Mexican boys, working for the Southern Pacific Railroad, before the slaughter pen was reached.

After the drive a picnic was held in the grove near by and in the evening there was a dance at Delano so that, while the slaughter of several thousand rabbits failed to materialize, the day passed off pleasantly. The explanation of the scarcity of rabbits is that the country is being settled so rapidly that the rabbits are being driven out.

Not a coyote was seen today, but last year half a dozen were driven in with the rabbits and killed.

The one obstacle to the rapid improvement of its hundreds of beautiful homesites is forever removed. Improvements will now be pushed forward in ever-increasing success until every available location on the mountain is adorned with a magnificent home.

Now, with its easy transportation facilities, it will be one of the most visited spots in the Southwest. Its magnificent views of sea and mountain—its glorious air and sunshine—its thousands of subtle charms will be enjoyed by thousands who have heretofore missed the opportunity of enjoying them.

May 17th, 1909, will indeed mark an epoch in the home history of Los Angeles.

BEAUTIFUL HOME STARTED

Choice Mt. Washington Corner Lot to Be Improved With Specially Designed Bungalow.

During the past week, arrangements have been consummated for the erection of a beautiful $5000 bungalow on Lot 16, Block 3, Corner Mt. Washington Drive and San Rafael Avenue. This is one of the sightly locations on this magnificent eminence, and when it is improved according to the plans, will be one of the most charming home-places in Southern California. The bungalow which will grace this corner will be of the most modern and artistic type, embracing every new idea known to bungalow craft, and the architecture will be specially arranged to conform to Mt. Washington environments.

This artistic bungalow is typical of the class of homes that are being erected on Mt. Washington—and for which this picturesque elevation is destined to become famous in the near future.

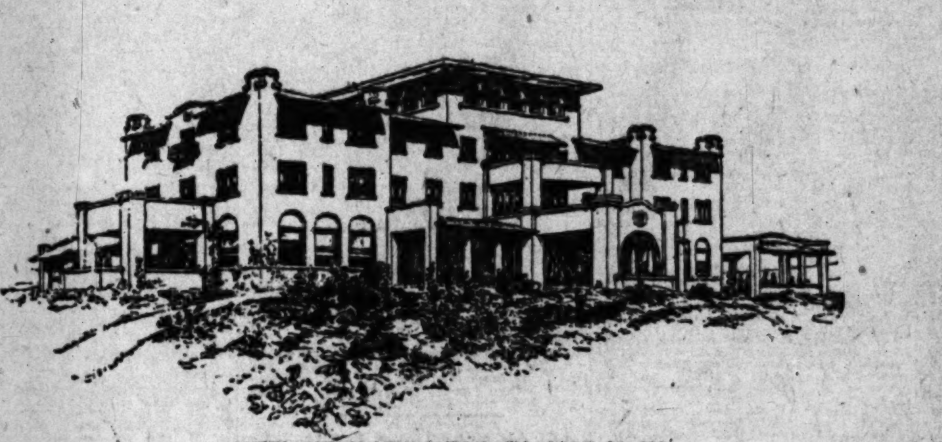
EAGLE WILL SPREAD ITSELF NEXT SUNDAY

Special Issue to Be Devoted to Opening of Incline.

The next issue of the Eagle will announce the completion of the Mt. Washington Incline Railway—the remarkable engineering feat which has been watched with intense interest by the people of Southern California for the past ten months. This issue will contain a complete program of the opening occasion, which will be celebrated as befits the completion of an enterprise of such vital importance to Mt. Washington and Los Angeles. This celebration will be one of the gala events of the season, to which every resident and visitor in Southern California will be welcome. It will give you an opportunity to be among the first to visit this—one of the most magnificent residential showplaces of America.

CONTRACT AWARDED FOR HOTEL MT. WASHINGTON

Milwaukee Building Company Are Succesful Bidders—Will Begin Operations at Once and Push to Rapid Completion This Magnificent Structure.



HOTEL MT. WASHINGTON—TO COST $40,000.

The contract has been let and actual operations will begin at once on the magnificent $40,000 Mt. Washington Hotel. This hotel will be three stories in height, built in the mission style of architecture. It will have a delightful roof garden — spacious porches and balconies on the first and second floors. A porch at the northwest will connect with the dining-room and form a part of it. On the southwest there will be another broad porch which will connect with the pavilion, leading to the Incline Railway.

This charming hostelry will contain eighteen guest rooms with private bath and every modern convenience, on each of the two upper floors. In the basement will be located a heating plant of the most up-to-date and improved type, and the entire building will be heated by steam.

Every feature of modern hotel construction will be incorporated in this building, which will at once take its place amongst the leading tourist retreats of the Southwest.

The hotel will adorn one of the sightliest eminences on the mountain—consisting of a broad sweep of fourteen acres at the terminus of the Incline Railway. The grounds are to be artistically laid out to lawns, flowers, shrubbery and trees, with graceful, winding drives. A handsome Japanese garden with an observation platform, which will afford a commanding vista of mountain, valley and sea, unsurpassed in the southland, will be one of the unique features in the landscape effects.

The contract for building the hotel has just been awarded to the Milwaukee Building Company. Actual work is to begin at once, and the structure is to be pushed to completion without delay. It is expected to have the hotel in readiness for the early fall season.

PHOENIX HAS CLOSE VOTE.

Remains Republican by Narrow Margin.

Saloons Regulated 'Almost Out of Business.

City Surprised at Large Population in Directory.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PHOENIX, May 7.—As a result of Sunday's election, Phoenix remains Republican, though the point was a closer one than had been expected by either party. J. A. Marshall, Republican candidate for Councilman from the Third Ward, was defeated by Eugene Hackett, Democrat, by the narrow margin of 7 votes, while Charles A. Stauffer, Republican, had a hard-won victory in the First Ward, securing a majority of 32 over Sidney Goldman, Democrat. It needed only the election of Goldman to secure a majority for the Democrats on the City Council. All others elected are Republicans. Lloyd B. Christy, cashier of the Valley Bank, had 251 majority over Friedel, Democrat. City Marshal [illegible] Moore, Recorder Frank Thomas, Treasurer H. A. Diehl and Assessor [illegible] were all reëlected. The machinery of the election being in Republican hands, there was some cry raised by Democrats, who claimed that under the new educational test, the prospective voter always was given the first paragraph only of the constitution as a reading lesson. Under this, one Democratic precinct election officer was disqualified.

Mayor Coggins and the old City Council had their last meeting last week and celebrated the event by the passage of the most drastic sort of saloon regulation ordinance. No liquor can be sold save on the ground floor, in a room without chairs, from a bar that is parallel with the front of the building and where no obstruction has been placed against the view from the sidewalk. The rear of the barroom must not be more than fifty feet from the front of the building and the room must not communicate with any other room in the same building. The saloon keepers generally aver they would sooner have straight prohibition.

The carrying out of one of the greatest of Arizona irrigation projects is indicated by the late visit to Arizona of Baron Oppenheim of Paris, representing French bankers who are reported to have agreed to furnish the funds for building the long-delayed works of the South Gila company in the southwestern corner of Yuma county. About fifteen years ago the company started the building of a dam across the Gila River, just above Agua Caliente, where the river passes through a short and rocky canyon, which lies just beyond a broad basin that is considered an ideal reservoir site. It was estimated that the right sort of rock dam could be built for a little more than $1,000,000 and that such a structure would serve to supply water for the irrigation of [illegible] acres lying to the westward in Yuma county, an expanse of land not only of great fertility but lying very advantageously, along the line of the Southern Pacific railroad.

A large number of small canal projects in the same vicinity have been unsuccessful to a degree owing to the fact that their headings were placed in sand, where the floods could tear them away. In the new company are Charles S. Boyd, formerly a member of the Board of Public Works of New York, F. Liebman and Charles Mayer of New York, Francis Mayer of Washington and F. W. Woodworth of Phoenix.

PHOENIX CENSUS BIG.

The new Phoenix directory, just issued, includes the names of 14,000 residents of the city, excluding wives, children and transients. On this basis, the publishers assert their belief that the city has a population not far from 25,000, at least 5000 larger than had been generally believed. The directory of 1908 had only 7000 names, though it was recognized as very incomplete. Probably 7000 more individuals live in the rural sections around Phoenix. On this showing there can be no doubt whatever that this city is the largest in the Territory, and that it should be so listed. This superiority in population is shown also by its postal income, which is now 40 per cent. above the next Territorial office in point of importance. It leads also in express business and in the number of telephone connections.

Of interest locally is the telegraphed report of the marriage yesterday in New York of Miss Clara Colt, described as a "Bryn Mawr heiress," to Portugal Pasha, more prosaically known as Joseph Portugal, "a mining engineer resident in Walker, Ariz." Inquiry at Walker develops the fact that such a person lives in that little mining settlement, but denial is given the assertion that he is a mining engineer or that he occupies any station of prominence in the district.

On Tuesday the Santa Fé station at Iron Springs, near Prescott, was destroyed by fire, together with a short bridge, holding up traffic for a night and part of a day.

Yesterday about $12,000 damage was done by fire to the pumping plant of the Tempe Canal Company, east of Tempe. How the fire started cannot be learned, for no one was present, though arrangements had been made to commence pumping today. Though the loss to the plant will be fully covered by insurance, some loss may accrue to farmers whose crops now need irrigation.

BAD SIOUX MAKES TROUBLE.

There is trouble on the Pima reservation, dating from the time of the late visit of Le Blanc, the educated Sioux. He urged the Indians to not obey the white men, who would enslave them if they could, and who had so unjustly cooped them up on the reservation in a land which once they owned in its entirety, including the rich Salt River Valley. About this time came instructions from the Indian Bureau to suspend for awhile the cutting of timber on the reservation, it appearing that the wood is vanishing fast and that the Indians themselves would soon be without fuel. This stoppage of one of their principal industries enraged the Indians, and 200 of them are reported to have crowded around Farmer P. B. Hughes at Gila Crossing, demanding the usual woodcutting permits. Indian Commissioner Leupp is now at Sacaton agency on the Pima reservation, and may have to act directly in settlement of the trouble. The Pimas are peaceful, living mainly by agriculture and little more than a protest is expected from them, however much the order may affect their income from the sale of wood.

Next Thursday at the Phoenix Indian Industrial School will graduate a class of twenty-three Indians, representatives of a dozen tribes.

It is announced that Gen. M. H. Sherman has determined not to rebuild the Eastlake Park Theater, as planned, and that he even proposes to abandon the park as an amusement resort and to sell the site as residential property, starting a new and larger park at another point.

SUICIDE PREMATURE.

The first death known in the new camp of Bouse, on the Arizona and California Railroad, occurred last Sunday, when George Doman of Des Moines, Iowa, committed suicide by shooting himself through the body near the heart. He had warned his associates of his intention, but they had laughed at him. He had wired his wife in Des Moines for money to take up an option on the lease of some mining claims, and was despondent over receiving no reply. Yesterday the Valley Bank of Phoenix received a remittance of $400 from Mrs. Doman to be transmitted to her husband. A part of this money will be used in sending the body back to Iowa.

Deputy Sheriff D. C. Thompson of Bakersfield, Cal., has presented and has had honored a requisition for S. E. Morse, who now is serving a six months' sentence for forgery in the County Jail at Prescott. He is wanted in California for issuing bad checks.

Gov. Sloan has commuted the life sentence of George W. Wright, now in the Yuma penitentiary, to fifty years, and has ordered that he be paroled during good behavior. Imprisoned for murder, extenuating circumstances have lately been urged in his behalf.

THE MARKETS.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

The berry market was well cleaned up yesterday morning and very few were left over by noon when the markets closed for the day. One car of berries was shipped out on Friday night and this helped out considerably. The remainder of the stock was taken care of by the usual grocery trade, by an additional demand from the hucksters and by the canneries. Lady Thompson berries sold as low as 50 cents a crate, while the highest price of the day was paid for Brandywines at $1.20 a crate for loose packed, long stems. Raspberries were unchanged and the call for them throughout the week has been heavier than the supply with the result that prices are still holding as high as 9 cents a basket. Blacks have fluctuated little and their average quotation throughout the week has been 8 cents.

The only feature in the egg market has been the scare which the dealers had in regard to the storage ruling. They are trying to set themselves on a sure basis in handling these eggs without coming in conflict with the new law in regard to labeling all storage stock. Receipts have been above normal throughout the week, but there have been no changes. Receipts yesterday were 681 cases.

Butter was a trifle weak. Creamery firsts sold at the quoted prices, while extras held 1 cent below the market. Cooking butter moved slowly. Coast stock is regular in arrival and it is reported that some of the first eastern butter of the season will be in during the middle of this week. Total local receipts were 27,290 pounds.

Cheese has been steady right along with the exception of one or two of the Oregon varieties, and Northern fresh full cream, which has declined 1 cent in the week. Receipts of the commodity yesterday were 10,990 pounds.

The potato market has been very firm and looking upward right along. Prices are about as high as they can go. Receipts of the day were 1270 sacks. Onions were steady at the low prices now in force. Both the Coachella and Texas Bermudas are of good quality and sell equally well to the general trade. A car from the southern part of the State was brought in yesterday.

Sweet potatoes advanced on account of the scarcity of good sweet potatoes on the market. The best stock is bringing a trifle more than $2 a hundred. Beans were unchanged.

Langford and pippin apples advanced 25 cents a box yesterday, in sympathy with the rise which took place several days ago in other varieties of the fruit. Oranges have been plentiful, sometimes a glut on the market in the past few days. Wagon loads of seconds arrive every morning to stand and wait for buyers until late in the afternoon, when they are given away to avoid carrying back.

Fair fishing weather has glutted the market twice in the last week on fish. They have sold way below ordinary prices and dealers have been forced to call a halt on the activities of the fishermen. Northern fish have not been too plentiful.

Lard went up ¼ cent yesterday, following the rise in smoked and salted pork products. Fresh meat is unchanged but very firm, and an increase in values is not unlooked for.

LOS ANGELES STOCK EXCHANGE.

BIDDING LIVELY, TRADING LIGHT.

OILS AGAIN HAVE THE BOARD ALMOST TO THEMSELVES.

Only One Other Security, Giroux Copper, Changes Hands—Columbia, Olinda Land and Billiken Sold Freely—Quotations on Industrials and Public Utilities Unchanged.

The volume of business on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange, yesterday, was small, but prices were generally firm. The oils again had the board almost to themselves, but one other security changing hands, though the bidding was lively on most of the leaders. One Associated Oil Bond was sold at 91¾, 1-4 point higher than Friday's price.

Associated Oil was inactive, and closed at 35.00@35.25, off 1-8 point in the bid and 1-4 in the asked price. Union and its affiliations showed fractionally advances over the preceding day. Union was handled to the extent of 20 shares, at 103.50.

One thousand shares of Columbia Oil changed hands at 1.22¾; 3000 of Olinda Land, at 26 7-8@27, and 9000 of Billiken, at 25@24¾.

Quotations on the industrials and public utilities were practically unchanged. Bank stocks were either stationary or slightly advanced.

Altogether, the market presented signs of improvement, considering the dull days of the past week, and the fact that the Saturday session is always a short one.

On the mining call, 100 shares of Giroux Copper were transferred at 8.25.

LOS ANGELES-NEVADA EXCHANGE.

CHEAPER ISSUES HAVE AN INNING.

MARKET FOR THEM PROVES THE BROADEST IN WEEKS.

Fifteen hundred shares of Combination Fraction were sold at 96, 2 points below the price of Friday. The close was at 95 bid, with none offered. The quotations of the preceding day were 98@1.00.

Daisy was off a point in the bid, closing at 36@39, and Florence lost 5 points in the bid at 3.20@3.30. Goldfield Consolidated strengthened 2½ points in the bid, which was 8.25 at the close. Johnnie was stationary at 18½@19½. Saturday dullness affected all of these stocks.

SAN FRANCISCO LIST.

LOWER PRICES AT WEEK-END.

NORTHERN MARKET DULL AND WITHOUT FEATURE.

Goldfield Consolidated, Florence and Fraction Lose Points—Most of Tonopahs Unfortunate—Little Demand for Bullfrogs, Except Valley View—Comstocks Weak.

[Special Service to The Times by B. F. Taylor, 524 Citizens' National Bank Bldg.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 8.—The mining market was dull and featureless, as is usually the case on Saturday, when, on account of the difference in time between New York and San Francisco, it is impossible to do an arbitrage business.

Prices generally were lower than last night. Goldfield Consolidated was off 2½ points; Florence, 5; Daisy, Great Bend and Jumbo Extension broke even and Fraction lost 2 points. The balance of the Goldfields were unchanged.

In the Tonopah list, Belmont lost 1 point; Tonopah Extension was unchanged; Midway lost 1 point; Montana was offered at 90 at the close, with no bid, and closed at 85@85. MacNamara lost a point, but Nevada Hills closed strong at 1.47½@1.50.

Trading in the Bullfrogs was very quiet. There was some demand for Valley View on account of its proximity to Bullfrog. Pioneer and this stock closed 4 to 5.

Consolidated sold at 8.27½ during the early trading and Florence at 3.20. Fraction opened at 98@99 and closed at 96@97.

About 6000 shares were traded on the formal call, for the most part of the very low priced stocks.

As compared with last Saturday, Consolidated is up 12½ points a share; Florence is off 7½; Daisy is up 3; Combination Fraction is off 6½. In the Tonopah list, Belmont shows a gain of 3 points; Tonopah Extension, 18 points; Midway lost a point; Montana is up 10 points; West End lost 2 and MacNamara, 4. Nevada Hills is up 22½ points on the bid.

The Comstocks, which were very strong yesterday, showed considerable weakness today. Ophir lost 30 points, compared with last night's close.

Boston Copper Market.

[Furnished by Logan & Bryan, Members New York and Boston Stock Exchanges, Bradbury building.]

BOSTON, May 8.—Another sensational break in North Butte today was an unsettling feature in the market. The action of this stock is one of the mysteries of the copper trade. It is either being manipulated by some very unscrupulous people, or there is something really wrong with the property.

Utah Copper declared its regular dividend and 50 cents a share extra. This property is without doubt the greatest working copper mine in this country today, and is the greatest example of what brains and proper business methods can do with an enormous quantity of low-grade ore. With its ability to make its present wonderful showing at the present price of the copper metal, there is no telling to what heighth the value of its securities will go with a return of anything like old copper values. We believe firmly in the future value of all low grade properties that have any large tonnage in sight, and are in the hands of responsible people. UNDER PRESSURE JULY FLOUNDERS.

WHEAT PIT TRADERS APPEAR TO BE MUCH AT SEA.

Uncertainty Proves Bad for the Grain Market Which Breaks Down Several Cents from Figures of the Preceding Session—Distant Options Suffer Less Than July.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

CHICAGO, May 8.—Traders in the wheat pit appeared much at sea today, and trade was not so large as on the previous session. The feature of trade was the heavy selling pressure to which the July delivery was subjected, and its relative weakness compared with the more distant option. At the low point today the July delivery was 3⅝ below the high point of the preceding session, while the more deferred options showed a loss of less than 2 cents.

The market opened weak with losses of 1-2 to ⅞@1¾, with July at 1.15 to 1.16 and September at 1.05⅞ to 1.07. The market closed weak, with July at 1.14¼@1.14⅜, and September at 1.06¼. Final quotations on December were at 1.05⅜@1.05½.

Corn was weak all day. The early deliveries displayed the greatest weakness. Closing prices were ⅛ to ⅝@1 below yesterday's finals, May at 72 and July at 68½@68⅝.

The oats market was weak all day, closing only at a trifle above the low point at net declines of ⅛@⅜ to ½ with May at 58⅛ and July at 51½.

The weakness of corn led to considerable speculative selling of provisions, particularly of lard, which resulted in a heavy tone all day. At the close prices were 5@7½ to 10½ lower than the previous finish.

Cash quotations were as follows: Flour, firm; winter patents, 6.20@6.60; straights, 5.90@6.25; spring patents, 5.90@6.10; straights, 4.70@6.90; bakers, 3.40@5.00; No. 2 rye, 80@86; feed or mixing barley, 68@69½; fair to choice malting, 69½@70; flax seed, No. 1 southwestern, 1.55½; No. 1 western, 1.68½; timothy seed, 3.80; clover, 9.50; mess pork, per bbl., 17.85@17.95; lard, per 100 lbs., 10.22½; short ribs, sides (loose,) 9.75¼@10.00; short clear sides (boxed,) 10.00@10.25.

New York Cotton Market.

[By Private Wire to E. F. Hutton & Co., Members New York Stock Exchange, No. 111 West Third street.]

NEW YORK, May 8.—Cotton was steady and trading was limited today. The visible supply statement was bullish, which showed a decrease of about 125,000 bales, against 121,000 last year. According to Secretary Hester's figures, the spinners takings were about 30,000 bales larger than last year. Weather conditions were extremely favorable for pushing field work, and reports to Bradstreets from the western section of Texas, showed that conditions have improved greatly in the last week or two. Quite a good deal of cotton is expected for delivery on May contracts.

Following are Hesters' cotton figures. Into sight movement year 1909: Overland for week, 12,855; overland since September 1, 1,600,767; into sight for week, 127,150; into sight for month, 127,150; into sight since September 1, 12,632,...

Hill, of Logan & Bryan, says: "Liverpool is afraid to go over Sunday, hence the expected strength. The week end statistics are again bullish, showing mill taking to exceed those of last year by 45,000 bales, and are even 14,000 larger than those two years ago. Our market should show about five points better at the opening, and I can see no reason for looking for any material reaction. The forecast over Sunday will be scrutinized carefully."

Cotton weather, South Texas about three weeks late; more rain needed. Southwest, West and Northwest Texas, suffering very much from drought. Weather this morning: South generally clear to part cloudy; pleasant, 65 to 75.

Southern forecast: Western belt, showers; Louisiana, Arkansas, threatening; Oklahoma and Texas, colder all sections; frost for Panhandle. Eastern and central, fair; Mississippi, Alabama, showers South Atlantic States.

SHARES AND MONEY.

PUBLIC PROVES EAGER TO BUY.

LARGE DISTRIBUTION OF SHARES ON WALL STREET.

Great Volume of Sales Recorded Has Restraining Influence on the Upward Trend of Prices—Substantial Profits Realized on Many of the Leading Industrial Issues.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

NEW YORK, May 8.—A large distribution of speculative holdings of stocks was effected today, holding in restraint the upward trend of prices. The great volume of sales represented more substantial profits on purchases than has been made at any time since the low level of prices touched during the panic of 1907, and during the period of extreme depression following.

United States Steel preferred rose to the highest price of the year. The absorptive power of the market, in fact, proved so effective as to furnish encouragement to the bull leaders in the speculation. The profit taking of the first hour was followed by renewed accumulation of stocks in the second hour in the expectation that a rising market at the close of the week would serve to attract new outside buying at the beginning of next week, thus furnishing an opportunity for further marketing of holdings at the high prices now prevailing.

Realizing was renewed at the end of the day. The copper stocks were still favorites in the speculation and were subject to good rises along with others. The movement in the coppers was conspicuous also in foreign markets. Reduction in the idle freight car surplus for the second half of April was a favorable influence. It was noted, however, that the reduction was traceable almost wholly to the increased movement of coal. The small net price changes in view of the great animation of the market is testimony to the skill and persistence with which the demand was supplied.

The decrease in the surplus reserve of the banks in the computations by averages evidently reflected the operations of the week preceding as the actual surplus rises nearly $2,000,000, the joint result of cash grain and small loan reduction. The loan item in the statement of averages by institutions outside the clearinghouse, however, is increased $9,349,300.

Bonds were firm. Total sales, par value, $2,600,000.

United States 2s coupons have advanced 3-8 per cent. on call.

RAILROAD INTERESTS.

The Burlington Railroad is enjoying such a demand for increased freight facilities that all the shops along the route have been ordered to rush the repairing of all freight cars and the turning out of new cars. The rush of freight business is due partly to the spring revival of trade, but even this is of an unprecedented character. Agents throughout the system have wired for more cars, but the officials find that they have none to send, as they have been congested in the shops during the winter and the slump period in business.

The railway mileage of the world is distributed as follows: United States, 227,000 miles; elsewhere, 252,000 miles. But the railways of British India are in a class by themselves, and if they be eliminated, this country has more mileage than the rest of the world.

The cost of constructing our portion is fixed at a little less than $13,000,000,000, and of the rest of the world almost $26,000,000,000, so that the average cost in this country is one-half that of the rest of the world. Our earning power is nearly as great as that of the roads of the rest of the world, in spite of the fact that we have about one-fifth of the population of all the other countries, not including India. Our receipts each year are less than $2,600,000,000, and for the rest of the world in excess of $2,800,000,000.

The operating expenses of the American railroads are proportionately greater than those of the rest of the world, being over 67 per cent. of receipts, compared with less than 64. We carry about one-sixth as many passengers as the rest of the world, but—and here is the astonishing fact—we carry almost as many tons of freight as all of the rest of the world put together, while in ton mileage we have far the best of it. We haul a ton of freight an average of 132 miles, while the rest of the world carries a ton but sixty-eight miles. In other words, our railroads are doing much more work than all the rest of the world together, almost twice as much in the matter of freight, yet our receipts are not so large. The inference is obvious that we charge only about half as much for hauling a ton of freight a mile as does the rest of the world. Our average charge is just ⅝ of a cent for such service.

The Mexican government will soon double-track the Tehuantepec Railroad. The rush of traffic is not expected to be perceptibly affected by the competition of the Panama Canal.

The night agent of the Santa Fé Railroad at Tangier, Okla., last November refused to build a fire for passengers waiting one night at the station for the midnight train. For this refusal the Corporation Commission recently fined the railroad company $100 and costs.

BUTCHER BOUGHT STOLEN BEEF.

Paul Liguori Convicted of Crime by San Jose Jury and Will Be Sentenced.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN JOSE, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The jury that has been hearing the testimony in the trial of Paul Liguori, who was arrested for buying five head of steers he knew were stolen from the Arestimba Land Company's ranch, returned a verdict of guilty today. Liguori is a butcher near Gilroy, and he was accused of employing E. E. House to steal cattle for him. He paid $25 a head for the animals.

House was sent to San Quentin for two years for cattle stealing by Judge Welch, and after his sentence he confessed that he had been hired by Liguori and his brother Rafael to prey on the herds of the neighboring ranchers. Rafael Liguori was tried on a similar charge in February. The jury then stood ten for acquittal and two for conviction, after being out nearly a day.

The Liguoris are also accused of buying cattle that were stolen from the Hyde ranch. They may be tried on this charge, after Paul Liguori is sentenced.

PORTOLA AGENT LEAVING.

C. C. Moore, Who Goes to Interest Foreign Nations in Carnival, Given Banquet.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 8.—A farewell luncheon, attended by men of Statewide prominence, was given today at the St. Francis to C. C. Moore, who leaves tomorrow for Washington, D. C., where he will go to the various European capitals to interest foreign governments in the Portola festival which is to be held here next October to commemorate the discovery of San Francisco Bay and the rehabilitation of the city.

Mr. Moore will arrange with several powers for the sending of representatives of their respective countries to the carnival and he will also try to influence the foreign nations to send warships here to participate in the mimic international sea fight which the celebration committee is planning to have enacted in San Francisco Bay during Portola week.

Among those present at the luncheon were Gov. Gillett, Mayor Taylor and members of the legislative committee having the plans for the carnival in charge.

FINGER PRINTS SAVE HIM.

Man Suspected of Woman's Murder Absolved by Bureau of Identification System.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 8.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] William Reilly's finger prints saved him today from the possible charge of having murdered Mrs. Margaret Grippen in her home at Winnebago, Ill., April 28.

The imprint of Reilly's finger tips was taken at the Chicago Woman's Hospital, where he is a patient, and compared with the bloody imprints left by the murderers of Mrs. Grippen on the lamp chimney found in the kitchen of the dead woman.

So marked was the difference between the finger prints that Capt. Evans, in charge of the Identification Bureau, declared at once they could not possibly be from the same hand. He said he was convinced Reilly was innocent. The victim, who was a cousin of Gen. Lew Wallace, was 68 years old.

NEW ALASKA STEAMERS.

SEATTLE, May 8.—Following the announcement that it has sold the steamer Panama to the Pacific Steamship Company of San Francisco, the Alaska Steamship Company of Seattle, has given out that it intends to dispose of its present fleet as rapidly as possible, and replace the old ships with new, large steamers to be used in the Alaska service.

Before the end of the year it is intended to let the contract for two and possibly four new steamers to run from Seattle to connect with the Copper River and Northwestern railroad.

The new steamers will have accommodation for 300 first class and 300 second-class passengers. They will be built at a cost of between $600,000 and $700,000 each.

REORGANIZING ARMY.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—Secretary of War Dickinson's first annual report will include the tentative plan for army reorganization now being drafted by the general staff.

The plan will outline a scheme of line and staff organization based on the needs of a regular establishment of 135,000 enlisted men.

Another plan which Congress probably will be called upon to consider at its next regular session, is for a consolidated supply branch, with a major-general at its head, and under him the three divisions now represented, the subsistence, pay and quartermaster's department, the heads of which shall be brigadier-generals as under the present arrangement.

VICE-CONSUL FLITS.

COUNCIL BLUFFS (Iowa) May 8.—Viggo Lingby, Danish Vice-Consul for Iowa, has disappeared and the only intelligence from him is a letter received by a friend saying he had left for good and was going west. Lingby's friends say the death of his wife five months ago has preyed upon his mind.

A FINAL OPPORTUNITY
To Make a Profitable Investment
The Lady Washington Oil Company will make application during the month of June for the listing of their stock on the Los Angeles and San Francisco exchanges.

Property of the Company consisting of eighty acres in the heart of the Sunset field is predicted to bring in, shortly, the largest producing well in this district.

The splendid showing at Well No. 2, now down to a depth of 1780 feet, is causing considerable excitement and interest in this territory. Oil is now oozing up through the eight-inch pipe in such quantity that insures at least a 400-barrel well when the oil sands are reached.

The present depth of Well No. 2 is deeper than any of the other wells in this territory, which abounds in producers, some of which run up into a production of 600 barrels and more per day.

While we are extremely conservative in our statements regarding the showing of this property, yet our own men, the drillers and the field men, now working on the Lady Washington property, men who have been in the district for years and have seen practically each and every well in the territory brought in, predict that the Lady Washington No. 2 will bring in a well ranging around 1200 barrels a day. Coming from such men, this is certainly gratifying to us.

The following are a few pertinent facts to be considered before making investment in the Lady Washington Oil Company:

The allotment of stock, at 30 cents a share, now for sale, is nearly exhausted.

This is practically the last chance to purchase this stock at thirty cents per share.

After listing this stock, during the month of June, we predict that it will go to par (One Dollar per share) within the three months following.

Before the end of the year this stock should reach in the neighborhood of Two Dollars per share and be paying handsome dividends.

The entire capitalization for this company (controlling eighty acres of proven oil lands) is but $500,000.

The management is most rigid and conservative in the prosecution of the work and the experience of the men who handle the field work is unquestionable.

The officers and directors are men of the strictest integrity.

This stock is recommended for purchase to all those who desire to secure a large and permanent return on their investment and yet be assured of the principal involved.

Investors are invited to visit the property at our expense.

We prefer that you confer with any oil man about the property of the Lady Washington Oil Company before further investigation. The opinion of any sane man who knows anything about California oil development is most valuable to us on account of the fact that no one can but speak of this property in the highest terms.

After your investigation we advise you to purchase the stock at thirty cents quickly. This may be your last opportunity at this price. Terms: Cash or installments, no interest charged.

The large number of big deals re rded last week, together with the eliness in small properties which is ade evident by the accompanying ports, contributed to make the realty cord of the past seven days an ex ptionally good one. THREE TYPICAL NEW HOMES IN THE RAMONA TRACT WHERE "EVERY LOT IS AN ACRE."

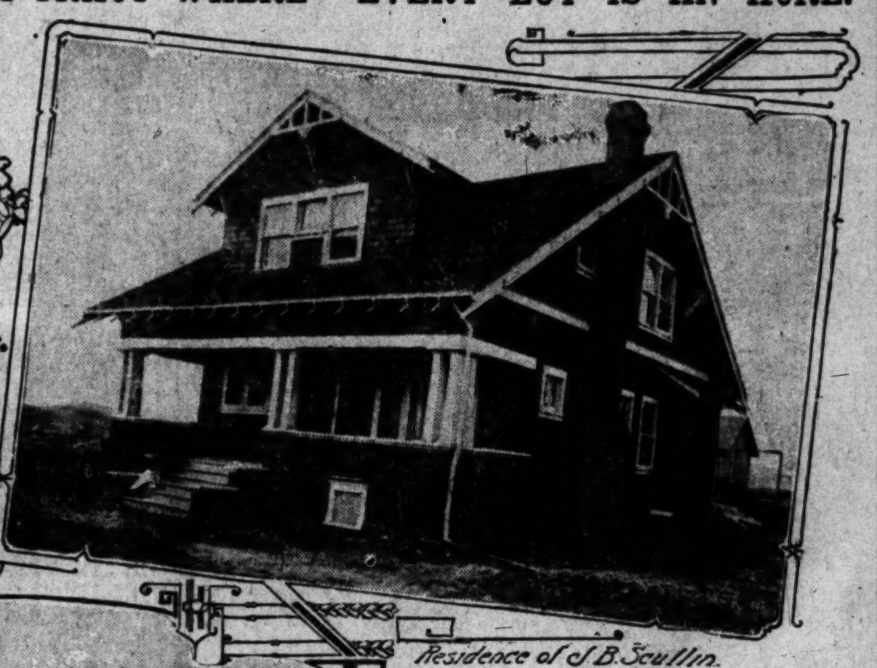
Home built for W.H.Shaw



Residence of J.B.Scullin.

A popular bungalow type.

The late L. J. Rose about fifty years ago came into California and traversed the State from end to end, seeking a place to settle. The first locality that attracted his attention was the San Gabriel Valley, and after going to the Oregon State line he returned to make his home in this valley, declaring it to be the most promising and attractive spot in every way in America. The late Congressman Hepburn of Iowa, when he visited California some thirty years ago, stood at Sierra Madre, and looking over the San Gabriel Valley, declared it to be his opinion that this was the spot where Satan showed the Savior all the glories of the world.

In the heart of this beautiful valley lies "Ramona Acres," a tract of nearly 500 acres cut into acre plots. The slogan of the promoters of this suburban district is "Every lot an acre." The town site is as level as a floor. The mountains rise in a magnificent panorama all around nearly every side of the great valley. The soil is as fertile as any the sun shines upon in his diurnal course around the world. The water is from an artesian supply hundreds of feet beneath the surface of the townsite, and as the spot is 400 feet above the San Gabriel River, the drainage is perfect.

Two plots of about one hundred acres each of Ramona Acres have been surveyed, streeted and put upon the market. In the first plotting there are 120 lots, of which about 90 have been sold. On these lots have already been erected twelve homes, which are all now occupied and surrounded with the most beautiful shrubbery. On the new plotting perhaps twenty lots have been sold and seven houses built. In the illustration in this section today are examples of the homes being erected and occupied at Ramona Acres. They speak for themselves.

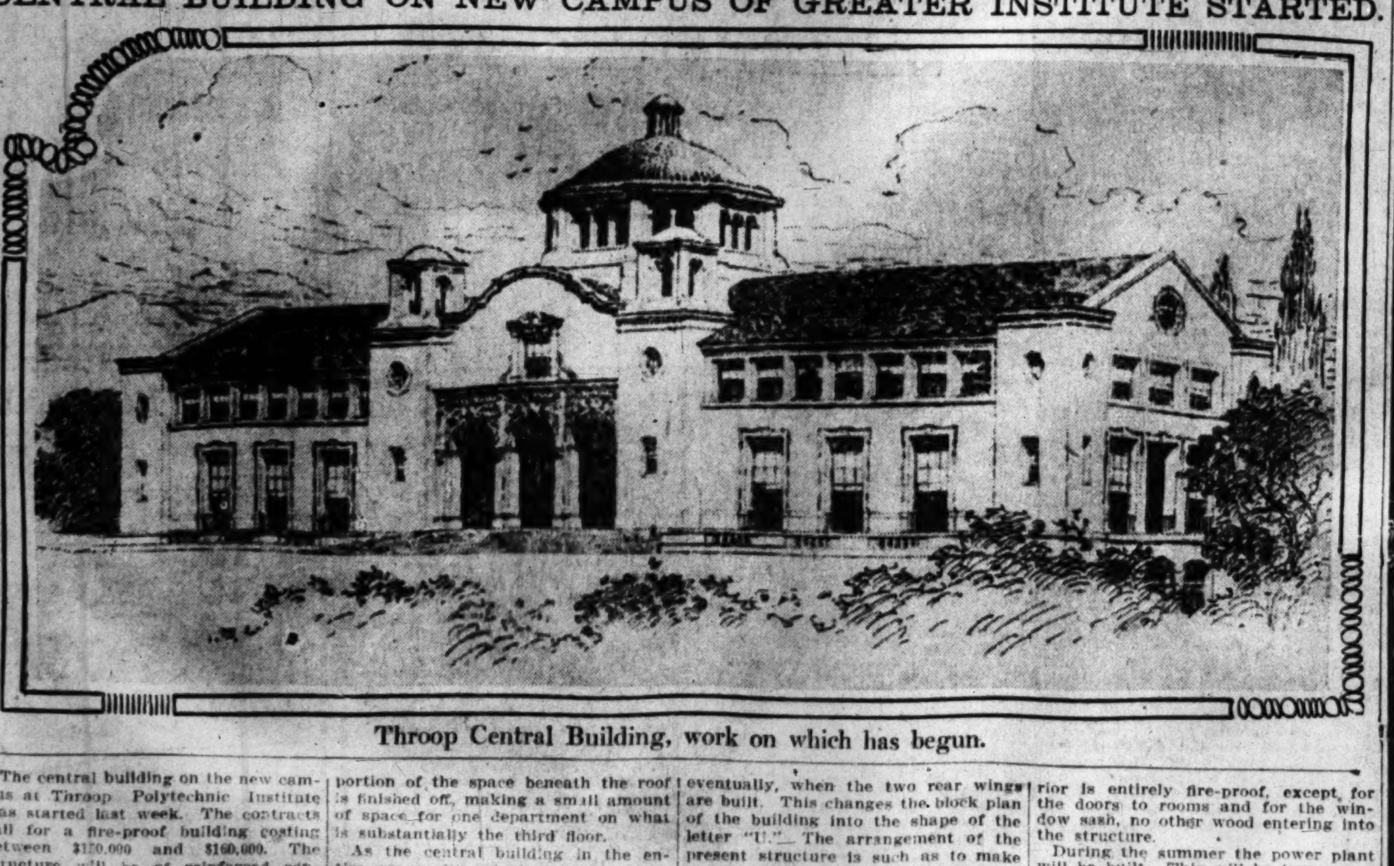
These plottings have been improved with good substantial streets and sidewalks. Water pipes are laid to all the lots in the tract. Electricity is obtainable in every home, and the latest improvement is the installing of a gas supply in all the streets.

This beautiful suburban tract lies only about six miles from the Plaza in Los Angeles, and only about three miles outside of the city limits. The Covina car line passes through the tract, furnishing easy access to the city at all hours of the day. The time is only about the same as from the Westlake district into the business center of the city.

Attractive as this location is in every respect, and although these acre lots are offered at a very reasonable price, the Janss Investment Company, handling the tract, stands ready to put up houses on the very easy payments of $200 down and $25 a month. The restrictions are in every way reasonable, high enough to insure a good class of inhabitants, and low enough to put them within the reach of careful, economical home-seekers. The restrictions range from $1500 to $2500, according to the location selected.

The tract has been on the market about two years. The success which the promoters have met with is perhaps the best evidence of the attractiveness of the location. The times have been dull since this tract was opened up, but not at Ramona Acres. The sale of about one hundred acre lots in all, and the construction of nearly a score of good houses would not indicate dull times. During the four months of the current year the Janss Investment Company has built and disposed of seven of these beautiful houses. Of course, more lots are sold than houses in actual course of construction.

CENTRAL BUILDING ON NEW CAMPUS OF GREATER INSTITUTE STARTED.



Throop Central Building, work on which has begun.

The central building on the new campus at Throop Polytechnic Institute was started last week. The contracts call for a fire-proof building costing between $150,000 and $160,000. The structure will be of reinforced concrete, while all the partitions, including the outside walls, which surround the skeleton construction, are of tile, plastered. The building is to have a basement beneath the entire first floor, which is 65x200 feet. The policy of two-story buildings for the entire institute is being carried out, except that this building is so large that a portion of the space beneath the roof is finished off, making a small amount of space for one department on what is substantially the third floor.

As the central building in the entire group, its principal feature is a large tower, or, perhaps it might be called a dome, which will serve both as a place of observation and as the location of the institute library for the present. Later, this space will be devoted to a department library.

The section of the building now contracted for represents about two-fifths of the entire building, as it will be eventually, when the two rear wings are built. This changes the block plan of the building into the shape of the letter "U." The arrangement of the present structure is such as to make it possible to utilize the center of the "U" as an auditorium, all staircases, the exits, fire escapes and arrangements for lighting having been worked out with this future condition in view. The exterior of the building is designed along Spanish lines, the roof being in red tile, embedded solid upon the concrete structural roof. The dome is of masonry throughout. The interior is entirely fire-proof, except for the doors to rooms and for the window sash, no other wood entering into the structure.

During the summer the power plant will be built. This will be temporary, but later on the structure will become part of the chemistry building, when the power shall have been moved to its permanent quarters at the rear of the campus.

The architects for this and all other structures planned for the institute are Myron Hunt and Elmer Grey. The general contract was let to William C. Crowell.
